HAPLESS ORIENTALS.

HUNDREDS OF HINDUS IN DIRE DISTRESS.

Walk Streets of Vancouver, Hungry and Shelterless.

Turbaned Immigrants, Penniless and Denied Protection, Have no Place to Sleep and Stand Helplessly on Corners of City While Oriental Problem Is Being Discussed by Authorities in Ottawa.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Next Monday afternoon at Ottawa, Premier Laurier and Baron Ishii, the special envoy of the Foreign Office of Japan, will meet and complete an arrangement for the limitation of Japanese immigration to British Columbia.

This was the official solution of the oriental problem announced in Vancouver this afternoon. More than that, the Federal government will send a special representative from Ottawa to make a complete inquiry and report to the government the facts, especially relating to the Hindus, for this is Hindu day in Vancouver with a vengeance.

Last Saturday's riot was a little thing compared to the present problem of housing a lot of beturbaned immigrants who claim protection and hospitality on the grounds that they are British subjects.

When nine hundred of them arrived two days ago on the steamer Monteagle, Mayor Bethune proposed as the cheapest way of getting rid of them the chartering of a special train to carry them from Vancouver to Ottawa, where they would act as a horrible example for the Dominion government to take lessons from.

HAVE NO PLACE TO SLEEP.

Considering the nuisance they are becoming, the $10,000 that a special train would have cost would have disposed of the question cheaply.

Seven hundred of the Hindus are a municipal charge in Vancouver tonight. They have spent the few dollars they had when they arrived or have become victims of sharpers, and now they stand helplessly on the street corners. They cannot be arrested as vagrants, for no police station in the country would hold seven hundred men. They sent delegates to a special meeting of the City Council this afternoon to appeal for help and a place wherein to sleep.

SUFFERING FROM COLD.

They declared that the open air was too cold and that they would all die of pneumonia, as fifteen of their fellows did last winter.

There is not a vacant house in town, and the government declines to give the use of the drill hall for their occupation. From present indications they will have to sleep standing up until the government special envoy arrives from Ottawa next week.

Hindu leaders complained to the Mayor today that, though they are British subjects, Vancouver was treating them worse than cattle. Landlords refuse to rent them houses heretofore occupied by Chinese and Japanese. They draw the line at Hindus.

This afternoon a heavy rain is falling and there are hundreds of Hindus who have no shelter under which to lie tonight. Many have severe colds.

Last night 150 stayed in one small house. So closely were they packed that only a small fraction could lie even on the floor. Another small boarding-house carried 250 during the night, and there was not room for many of them to place their blankets on the floor and sleep.

"Ranchers would not treat their cattle in the way the government and the people use the Hindus," said Interpreter Das this afternoon. "The treatment is inhuman. Many are sick now and may die. We are trying to arrange with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the use of a wharf warehouse for tonight, which is fearfully cold for my countrymen. Yes, it is true that thousands more Hindus are on their way to Vancouver."

BUNCOED BY CHINESE.

The Dominion government today gave a ruling that the Victoria school board is compelled to provide education for Chinese, even when every one knows that the Chinese are using this attendance at school to evade the law. Canada charges a $500 head tax against Chinese, but provision is made that in case the immigrant is a student and for eighteen months attends school after arriving he is entitled to receive a rebate of the total amount of the tax.

The Victoria school board found that full-grown Chinese men were entering the country, becoming scholars in public schools, being educated free of charge, and then having presented to them the $500 tax at the end of eighteen months. Immediately they received this money they became cannery workmen or domestic servants. Protest was made to the Dominion government, but the comptroller of Chinese for the Dominion has wired instructions that officially he must agree with what looks like a bunco game.

While rioting is over for the moment, the authorities are taking no chances in the arrival here of further shipments of Japanese. The steamer Woolich, due here in the morning, cannot obtain berthing privileges at any city wharf for fear of trouble. She will go to North Vancouver and there, away from mobs and riots, her human cargo will be put ashore. She has seven or eight hundred direct from the land of the Mikado.

EXCLUSION FROM SCHOOL.

No decision has yet been reached regarding the proposed exclusion of Japanese over 16 years of age from the public schools of the city, though the Mayor is very much in favor of that course. One hundred and fifty orientals, ranging in age from 6 to 24 years, enjoy free education in Vancouver. The separate school is not proposed here, but what the civic authorities propose doing is to exclude all over the compulsory school age limit.

Twenty rioters, who took part in the disturbances of last Saturday night, have been committed to stand trial in the Assize Court of Vancouver in October. Chinese and Japanese who have returned to their work since the riot act noticeably insolent.

J. McGregor, who was stabbed yesterday by a mob of angry Chinamen in Canton alley, is recovering. Every Chinaman and Japanese going abroad in the streets is armed, and many arrests of orientals have been made for carrying concealed weapons.

JAPS EASILY SATISFIED.

Little Japanese is formulating her bill of damages today for the plate glass front smashed by rioters last Saturday night. The Dominion government will pay the bill, which is expected to be not more than five thousand dollars.

The bill will consist of a long list of panes of glass smashed in fifty-six stores and dwellings. So great is Japan's respect and friendship for Great Britain that nothing will be asked for damaged feelings for wounded dignity. The federal government may decide to give a contract to a glazier in Vancouver to renew all the broken glass and the Japanese will call it square at that. Estimates of damage claims have been discounted during the last few days.

TIP FROM TOKIO.

The reduction followed the receipt of cabled instructions from Tokio that the feelings of the wounded glass is the only ground for reparation. After having paid the bill, it is expected that the Dominion government will call on the city in turn to settle the account. Then will the question be swung from one of immigration to one purely of politics.

Mayor Bethune, a staunch political enemy of the government, declares that Vancouver will never pay a cent for damage or reparation or anything else. He maintains that with a foreign population of ten thousand the Dominion government should maintain its own police force here to ensure order and prevent riots.

"YELLOW PERIL."

EUROPE TALKS OF RACE RIOTS.

OUTBREAKS ON PACIFIC COAST CONSIDERED SIGNIFICANT.

Belief Is Generally Expressed That Recent Disturbances Forebode Great Struggle Some Time in the Future Domination of Western North America.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] All Europe has been stirred profoundly by the latest manifestations of anti-Asiatic feeling on the Pacific Slope.

The Berlin press refers grimly to the fact that the extreme West sees at last that there is something to be done if the "yellow peril" is to remain a figment of the imagination. The Germans always have resented the gibes American journalism hurled at Emperor William's painting of the terror rising in the East.

London, while realizing how greatly the Asiatic question is complicated for Britain by the new outbreaks, believes that the situation created for the Washington government by the San Francisco anti-Japanese demonstrations has become much simpler. A week-end review argues that "the Americans will now be able to assure the Mikado's advisers that the problem raised in California is essentially racial, and that Japan must consent to an arrangement restricting coolie immigration in the States."

It is pointed out that if there are persons in Tokio who question the expediency of negotiations between Japan and Great Britain to limit the coolie influx into other British colonies, they will reconsider the matter in the light of the "great Canadian flare-up."

European opinion is unanimous, though in its expression London is more cautious than on the continent, that Japan will bow to the inevitable in the matter of exclusion treaties, but that the seeds of racial enmity have been sown more widely, only to yield some day the harvest of a great struggle for the domination of Western North America.

The Independence Belge says President Roosevelt looks a long way ahead in the programme for the Pacific fleet.

TOKIO PRESS IN AN AMIABLE MOOD NOW.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOKIO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Tokio papers continue to discuss the Vancouver affair in the most moderate and amiable manner. They all expect that a settlement will be reached, and that Japan and Canada will make joint efforts to prevent a repetition of trouble.

It is thought that Baron Ishii will be able to conduct successful negotiations at Ottawa for the payment of an indemnity for which, however, no definite demand has yet been made.

SEATTLE IN FEAR OF ORIENTAL RIOTS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SEATTLE (Wash.) Sept. 14.—Japanese Consul Hisamidsu has appealed to Chief of Police Wappensteh to prevent the exclusion league from holding any kind of a demonstration that might lead to inciting an irresponsible element and causing a series of riots in Seattle.

A similar demand upon the police chief has been made by some of the newspapers. Chief Wappenstein today assured the Japanese Consul that whatever happened he would guaran-

Business of Prospective Bridegrooms in Los Angeles Preventing Them from Returning East to Marry, Their Fiancees Will Journey to Land of Sunshine.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Because business ties would not permit their fiancés to come to Coldwater, Mich., Miss Grace Butterworth and Miss Lucille Jones will go to them.

Miss Butterworth will become the bride of Roland Swaffield, a young attorney, formerly of Coldwater, and Miss Jones will wed Cyril Marshall, formerly of Lansing, both of whom are now located at Los Angeles.

Though they were acquainted, neither of the young ladies knew that the other proposed going to California to be married, until their friends mentioned it. It was then proposed that they go together, and they will leave Monday for Los Angeles.

Miss Butterworth and her husband will live at Long Beach, Cal., after the ceremony.

INSOLENT BRIGAND.

RAISULI MAKES BIG DEMANDS.

RANSOM FOR KAID MACLEAN BECOMES EXORBITANT.

Moroccan Bandit Now Insists That He Be Made Governor of Certain Hill Tribes and Given Arms and Ammunition in Return for Release of Prisoner.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TANGIER, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Raisuli, the Moroccan bandit, who holds Kaid MacLean in captivity, has astonished the British authorities who are negotiating for the release of the Sultan's adviser, by the extravagance of his demands.

The bandit no longer asks for British or other protection in return for the release of MacLean. He is more ambitious, and is demanding that he be made Governor of the hill tribes inhabiting a great part of Northern Morocco.

Furthermore, he seeks compensation for a mulitutde of flocks and herds, which he alleges have been taken from himself and his relatives; insisting that some of his former friends be put in chains, and wants to be supplied with magazine rifles and ammunition.

Sir Harry MacLean is reported to be well. He now has his own tent and bed, and his own servants.

SHARES SLUMP.

STREET IS WORRIED BY BREAK IN STEEL.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A sharp break in the shares of the United States Steel Corporation was a feature of the dealings on the stock exchange today which created in Wall street a great amount of concern.

Steel common broke in the course of the trading to 27 1-2, a loss of 2 1-8 points from yesterday's last price, and the preferred stock fell to 90 1-4, a loss of 2 7-8, with but slight recoveries in either stock at the close.

The movement of these shares held practically the entire attention of the street, as it was generally feared that the heavy declines reflected a condition in the steel industry or the imminence of conditions analogous to the demoralization in the copper industry.

Ominous forebodings of a continued heavy reduction of the demand for steel have been afloat ever since the steel corporation in its last quarterly report, issued in July, stated that the business for the previous month had fallen off, although the business for the quarter previous had been the best in its history.

RUMORS HAVE EFFECT.

The feeling that the steel industry is approaching a similar crisis to that of the copper industry has been accumulating, and it was manifested today in heavy selling. The circulation of rumors that the corporation was soon to undergo a government investigation in the matter of rebates, similar to that undergone by the Standard Oil Company, added to the nervous feeling in regard to the stock. The rumors had no confirmation whatsoever, but they were effective nevertheless.

Steel common today sold 5 1-2 points lower than the low point touched during the March slump in stocks and the preferred stock was 5 1-4 points lower. The fact that the preferred stock, which is the best dividend-payer, broke further today than the common was regarded by many as significant yet unexplained conditions in the affairs of the corporation.

All the other metal shares continued weak, Anaconda losing net 1 1-2 and Amalgamated net 7-8. The railroad securities lost from fractions to a point, and the whole market reflected the pessimism that enshrouds the industrials.

COPPER MINES NOT TO BE CLOSED DOWN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BUTTE (Mont.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] There is no present intention on the part of the big mining companies to close the mines, but a very general policy of curtailment has been inaugurated, the intention being to cut the copper production at once to about 40 per cent. of the normal output.

Normal production is from 28,000,000 to 30,000,000 pounds a month, but the September output will be less than 20,000,000 pounds. To bring about the contemplated reduction fully 50 per cent. of the miners will be laid off. In August the production was about 8,000,000 pounds below the normal, but that was in part due to the strike of machinists, which resulted in the closing of some of the big mines. The companies hope to avert the necessity of again shutting down, but it may be forced to close if there is no improvement in the metal market.

It is estimated that the Amalgamated Copper Company has now on hand in Montana and the East about 100,000,000 pounds of copper, and the intention is to continue reducing the production further.

TO CURTAIL OUTPUT OF BIG COPPER MINES.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

DULUTH, Sept. 14.—The directors of the North Butte and Calumet-Arizona today decided to curtail the production of their copper 50 per cent.

This will mean a reduction of 700 tons a day at the Calumet and Arizona mines and 500 tons a day at the North Butte

JOHN D. DONE IN BRONZE.

Texas Admirer of Rockefeller Is Erecting Monument to Oil Magnate.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENTON (Tex.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A monument to John D. Rockefeller is being raised two miles south of this town, where two much-traveled roads cross.

Of course, it is unusual to put up a monument to a man before he has been gathered to his fathers, but E. G. Lee, who greatly admires Mr. Rockefeller, and who is building the monument with the sweat of his brow and the toil of his hands, says President Roosevelt and Andrew Carnegie have set precedents which any American citizen should be proud to follow.

"I know that monuments should be post-mortem," said Mr. Lee, who is a man of great intelligence, today. "I know you cannot write epitaphs in the present tense, but Andrew Carnegie and Theodore Roosevelt set the example, only Carnegie is working up building libraries and the President is working down digging pits.

"I consider John D. Rockefeller the greatest man in the world," Mr. Lee continued with emphasis. "I am trying to induce him to come here and live, where he won't be hunted and persecuted. I want him to run on the Democratic ticket next time. He would be elected. You see the pedestal is nearly completed. It symbolizes Mr. Rockefeller's strength, depth and breadth. I have ordered the statue itself from a bronze-casting firm in New York City. I am spending about $10,000 on the statue and pedestal."

BAD NEWS EXPECTED.

CLEVELAND IS FAST FAILING.

HAS LOST FORTY POUNDS IN LAST THREE MONTHS.

Former President Does Not Appreciate Gravity of His Condition, but Mrs. Cleveland Does—Bad News May Be Expected from Princeton at Any Time.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "We must all be prepared for bad news from Princeton," said a Democrat of prominence tonight who passed through New York City on his way to his home upstate. "Mr. Cleveland's health is failing rapidly. He is troubled with gout in his feet, which is spreading to his knees and he has fallen off in weight forty pounds within three months. Mr. Cleveland does not quite appreciate his condition, but Mrs. Cleveland does."

No communications of public or private importance are now submitted to Mr. Cleveland. Mrs. Cleveland is acting practically as his confidential adviser and secretary in all matters, and she is fully acquainted with her husband's real condition.

"Mr. Cleveland has remained at his home in Princeton all summer. The Cleveland children have been at Mr. Cleveland's New Hampshire home with their grandmother. Mrs. Cleveland has believed it necessary to remain with her husband at Princeton.

"His recovery is not looked for. He may live for a number of weeks, but he will never return to his offices in the Equitable Life building. Not only is he afflicted with gout in his feet and knees, but he is subject to frequent attacks of acute indigestion and an intestinal difficulty."

From other sources it was learned that Mr. Cleveland has given up all interest in public affairs.

BIG PRICE FOR CHICKENS.

Thief Drops Pocketbook Containing $900 and Owner of Fowls Is Satisfied.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTUMWA (Iowa) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] An Ottumwa woman has received for nine most extraordinary chickens a little over $900. The involuntary purchaser thought he was getting them at a bargain when he carried them off, for he had not figured on paying a cent for them, but now that he has found that they cost him $100 each, he is keeping beautifully in the dark and is not boasting of his deal.

A few days ago the woman missed two chickens, and the following night three more were stolen. Two days later, when she went to feed her flock, she found that the last four also had bten removed. However, near by, the woman found a upocketbook containing a little over $900 in currency.

Later in the same day, she was visited by a stranger in quest of chickens. She explained that she had just sold her nine for a good price. The man asked if he might inspect her chicken coop. She consented, and both went to the yard. The man made the minutest investigation, but naturally failed to find the $900.

ABDUCTION.

PRISONER ON YACHT.

Girl Is Rescued by Newport Police.

Declares She and Another Artist's Model Were Abducted.

Accuses Youth Who Has Spent Fortune Seeing Life in Gotham.

He and His Chum, Also Involved in Charges, Have Disappeared.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] From Newport, R. I., comes a dispatch reciting that a handsome young woman, calling herself Nina Francis of New York, was rescued by the police from the motor yacht Mariquita in that harbor last night, and that she accuses Oliver W. Barnes of this city, and his chum, Capt. Sedley, of abducting her and holding her prisoner on the yacht.

She is now at the United States Hotel in Newport, without money. Miss Francis told the Newport guardians of the peace that she is an artist's model.

ON YACHT TWO WEEKS.

With another model, she said, she was enticed by Barnes and Sedley aboard the Mariquita in this city, and kept a prisoner aboard for two weeks. In that time the yacht traveled to Newport.

Yesterday, she continued, Barnes and Sedley left the boat at Newport, telling the Japanese servants aboard to continue to hold her prisoner, but she gained the deck and screamed and a fisherman heard her and notified the police and then she was rescued.

A HIGH ROLLER.

Oliver W. Barnes, who stands accused of stealing the model, has spent $100,000 since he first struck New York, a little less than a year ago. His re- [illegible] of the Mariquita, a half interest in a lease on the Hotel Rand in Forty-[illegible] street and [illegible] in cash.

He has not been seen around New York for six weeks and there is a basketful of mail waiting for him at the Rand, in the management of which he has been associated with Wilson Mizner, who was the husband of Mrs. Charles T. Yerkes for a brief period. Barnes is 22 years old and comes from Fishkill, N. Y.

YOUTHS DISAPPEAR.

Barnes and Sedley left the Mariquita at Newport yesterday afternoon and are believed to have taken the train for New York. After she was taken ashore, Miss Francis seemed inclined also to return to the city. Then she seemed to remember that she had no money. Her jewels and dress, however, were such that she could readily be admitted to any of the hotels. She was escorted to the United States Hotel.

"You can depend on it that I am going to stay here and see this thing out," she said, after she had told her story. The other girl, whose name Miss Francis refuses to reveal, was put ashore at New Haven because she was seasick.

TO INVESTIGATE STORY.

The police say that if the girl's story proves true the youths who are responsible for the outrage she charges will find themselves in a very serious predicament.

A careful investigation and every effort to find the other girl in the case will be made. If Miss Francis continues in her present state of mind prosecutions are almost sure to follow.

FATHER TIME FADED.

MRS. PALMER GAINS RECORD.

FASTEST TRIP BETWEEN LONDON AND CHICAGO.

Traveling on New Steamer Lusitania and Eighteen-hour Special on Pennsylvania Road, Society Leader of Lake City Goes 4300 Miles in Less Than Week.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Disaptch.] Mrs. Potter Palmer stepped from the Pennsylvania eighteen-hour special from New York at the Union Depot today as fresh and radiant as though she had just led the grand march at one of her famous charity balls, instead of having traversed 4300 miles in less than a week.

With the aid of the steamer Lusitania she established a new record for actual traveling time between London and Chicago.

After sailing a quarter of the distance around the world in the most splendid ocean liner afloat, and one of the fastest and most sumptuous trains ever made, Mrs. Palmer rode to her Lake Shore Drive home in a Canal-street cab, which her son, Potter, called. Neither the Palmer automobile nor the Palmer carriage were at hand.

Before getting into the cab Mrs. Palmer characterized as "nonsense" stories that she is to marry King Peter of Servia or any other European.

POLITICAL.

THIRD TERM IS POPULAR.

Some Reasons Why the Talk Still Continues.

Senators and Congressmen May Need Help.

Fear Defeat If President Is Not at Ticket's Head.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Politicians are beginning to realize, through the strength of talk among members of Congress for the renomination of President Roosevelt, that a large number of Senators and Representatives are going to keep trying to force the renomination of President Roosevelt for their own purposes.

In the last campaign for the election of House members, plenty of candidates who did not like Roosevelt went out on the stump and shouted themselves hoarse for Roosevelt and the Roosevelt policies. They did this because they knew it was popular in their sections and because they were aware it would help them to reëlection.

That the same motives are working now with a good many members of Congress is becoming clear. Many in the House and Senate see that, if Roosevelt is once more at the head of the ticket, the Republican party will carry the State, or district, as it happens to be. Senators in some cases see that the renomination of Roosevelt will help powerfully in electing a Republican Legislature. Members of the House, seeking reëlection in shaky districts where Mr. Roosevelt is popular, want his renomination in order to help carry those districts. Under such circumstances, it is to be expected that the Roosevelt third term talk, coming from members of the House and Senate, will be voluminous until it is settled whether Mr. Roosevelt can be swerved away from the stand he has taken.

Many a member of Congress takes the view that with Taft, Fairbanks, Knox, Cortelyou, or some other man than the President, at the head of the ticket, the Democrats might be able to sweep the country. As a large number of members of the House got in on the Roosevelt tide they feel naturally that it would be desirable to have the assistance of the Roosevelt popularity once more.

If the Democrats should elect a President, it would mean more Democratic Legislatures than now and Democratic gains in the Senate. Senators, of course, in close States, realize the importance of this fact as bearing on their own futures. It is to be understood that they believe Mr. Roosevelt is the one man whom the country is calling to head the Republican ticket.

Further than this, the feeling in Congress is pronounced that the third term talk is not displeasing to the President. Many members have patronage they want and favors they have to seek for constituents. They reason that no hurt can be done their popularity at the White House by commending Mr. Roosevelt and talking of him for a third term, so they talk accordingly.

Secretary Taft's friends, however, say much of the Roosevelt third term talk is kept up by Taft's enemies and with the deliberate purpose to hinder Taft.

PARKHURST AS PARTY CRITIC.

CALLS PRESIDENT AN AUTOCRAT, BUT LIKES HIM.

Third Term Out of Question—Chief Executive Often Un-American. Taft Pleases but Does Not Suit as Nominee—Democrats Lack Good Material—Hearst Insures Defeat.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Dr. Charles Parkhurst of New York has returned here from Switzerland, and he will sail for home on the Celtic on September 19.

Your correspondent, who called on him this afternoon, found him well and full of energy.

Concerning the political situation in the United States, he said: "As to the Presidential election, Mr Roosevelt must not be considered a candidate. It would be a breach of his own declaration, and the country would lose confidence in him.

"We must have no third-term man, anyway. It is absurd to say that we can find no one but Roosevelt—still I have great respect for him. He is right in fighting the trusts, which have become a menace to private citizens, and good has already resulted.

"But Roosevelt is too autocratic. He gives the impression that his personal will should count for more than the Constitution. He seems to forget that he is the servant, not the master, of the American people.

"His way of running the Presidency has often been un-American. That sort of thing must not be allowed to grow.

"I am greatly pleased with Secretary Taft's Columbus declaration. I object to Taft, however, as the nominee of the outgoing President. It is bad principle, I think, that Taft, in proposing to postpone the revision of the tariff for eighteen months, showed himself an unworthy trimmer. He wished first to secure funds for his campaign. Still, Taft is a good man.

"As to the Democrats, it is unfortunate that they have no stronger men in view. It is unfortunate, even, for the Republicans that the Democrats cannot get a "look in" oftener, as it would serve the purpose of affording a useful criticism of their administration.

"Mr. Bryan has twice brilliantly led the party to defeat, as is too well known. It is a pity that the Democrats cannot heal up their differences, and rally around a good, strong man, if such could be found.

"If Hearst appears in the field, it will simply give the Republicans a walkover, no matter who they run."

Mr. Fairbanks, in an address, eulogized the devotion of the Methodist clergymen, saying in conclusion:

ANOTHER MAN FINDS AFFINITY.

PUTS ASIDE WIFE AND CHILDREN FOR "SOUL'S MATE."

Dr. E. Luther Stephens of Des Moines, Well-Known Tuberculosis Expert, Church Worker and Philanthropist, Follows in the Footsteps of Artist Earle.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DES MOINES (Iowa) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Following in the footsteps of artist Ferdinand P. Earle, Dr. E. Luther Stephens of Des Moines, well-known tuberculosis expert, church worker and philanthropist, has put aside his wife and two children because, it is said, he has discovered an "affinity."

Just who Dr. Stephens's "soul's mate" may be is shrouded in secrecy, and Dr. Stephens refuses to discuss her in any way, but, in a letter written to his wife, who is visiting in Taylorville, Ill., Dr. Stephens says:

"My heart is elsewhere. I could no longer live with one wife, when I love another."

Dr. Stephens was an obscure physician in Decatur, Ill., when Dr. Charles Woods Hutchinson discovered him and advised him to specialize on tuberculosis. Stephens followed his advice, and is now president of the Iowa Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis.

ANTI-CLERICALISM.

CARDINAL TO BE PROTECTED.

CARBINEERS AND POLICEMEN SENT TO CASTLE GANDOLFO.

Merry del Val, Papal Secretary of State, to Be Accompanied on His Return to Rome by Government Soldiers—Italian Papers Protest Against Action of State Officials.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ROME, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Italian Minister of the Interior has ordered twenty-five carbineers and thirty policemen of the bicycle squad to Castle Gandolfo to protect Cardinal Merry del Val, the papal Secretary of State, from further insults.

It will be the duty of mounted carbineers to cover the route to Rome whenever the cardinal notifies the police officials that he will ride in his carriage to the Vatican.

As to the bicycle policemen, they never leave the papal villa at Castle Gandolfo, and four of them are now always stationed in front of its imposing gates, ready to follow the cardinal whenever his carriage makes an appearance.

The Italian papers are now protesting against this unusual display of force in a town which is said to have been sold to the popes in the sixteenth century by the Savelin family for $150,000 and which at present does not number more than 2500 inhabitants.

It is claimed by the Italian newspapers that the size of town does not justify a daily expenditure for police purposes of $50 a day, and that the cardinal could find enough protection within the Vatican grounds and relieve the government from the burden of looking after his personal safety.

However, the government has now embarked on the plan and Cardinal Merry del Val is determined to stay at Castle Gandolfo until the end of September, when his vacation will end and he will return to Rome.

DONATION TO UNIVERSITY.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 14.—Thomas Welton Stanford has given a $1200 collection of books on Australia to the university library. The presentation was made to President Jordan.

The Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University will receive a gift of $150,000 from Mrs. James B. Oliver of Pittsburgh for the erection of a new lecture hall as a memorial to her son, a student in the Sheffield Scientific School, who died last June. It will be called the "Oliver memorial hall."

BANK ROBBERS TERRORIZE TOWN.

COMPEL CITIZENS TO REMAIN IN THEIR HOMES.

Order All Lights Turned Out While They Blow Up Safe and Make Way With Two Thousand Dollars in Cash—Men Intimidated by the Bandits.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ABERDEEN (S. D.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ferney a small town fifteen miles from here, was raided by bandits last night, and $2000 in cash was stolen from the First State Bank. A posse is now in pursuit of the thieves.

The robbery was one of the boldest in this section of the country. Six men composed the band. Finding three men in a blacksmith shop, the bandits warned them not to move, and then visited three or four houses where lights were burning and commanded the occupants to extinguish the lamps and remain indoors.

A few minutes later, the people were terrorized by the explosion at the bank, where the safe had been blown open.

This is the fourth bank robbery in this vicinity in the last few weeks.

POSTAL ISSUES FINAL WORD.

TELEGRAPHERS' STRIKE OVER, NEGOTIATIONS DENIED.

General Manager of Company Considers Union Troubles Closed. Only Oldest of Former Employees to Be Taken Back, and These Only Where Available.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Because of certain rumors that have been afloat the last two or three days to the effect that the telegraph companies had decided to "treat" with the strikers, Vice-President and General Manager Nally of the Postal Company, today issued a statement which he calls the last word from the company. The statement follows:

"The reports which are being circulated by strike leaders to the effect that there are negotiations pending, or influences at work, or pressure being brought to bear, on the telegraph companies, to bring about a settlement of the strike through a compromise, or otherwise, are untrue.

"We consider the strike over, hence there is no need for further negotiations.

"I can only repeat what I have reiterated before—that we will deal with such of our old men who individually apply for work, so long as we have places for them."

A copy of Mr. Nally's statement was shown to Mr. Brooks of the Western Union. He said that it showed almost exactly the feeling of his company, except in the matter of taking back employés.

"We are in a different position to that of the Postal," said Mr. Brooks, "because the Postal telegraphers, who went out, were all organized. Our men were not.

"There are very few of our old and highly-prized men among the strikers, because most of them remained at work."

LODIANS BRING GRAPES.

Great Tokay Carnival Is Boosted by Committee of Two Hundred and Fifty.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

STOCKTON, Sept. 14.—Close upon 250 Lodians traveled to Stockton tonight to boost the great Tokay Carnival, the first of its kind ever held, which is to take place in Lodi next week, commencing Thursday.

A feature of the affair was that a carload of Tokay and other varieties of grapes were distributed to the thousands of people instead of literature, as is most usually done.

Twenty-five thousand dollars will be expended in decorating the city. Gov. Gillett will open the festival Thursday afternoon.

ZION CITY FACTIONS.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Rival conferences were called today in Zion City to determine who shall be the permanent leader of Dowie church. Wilbur Glen Voliva, the present general overseer, has called for a conference to begin tomorrow, while Overseer John A. Lewis, who was named by Dowie in his will as his successor, has called a conference to be held on September 22. Delegates will attend from all over the world, and will be appealed to by the advocates of rival leaders for their support.

WHO IS HE?

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Is she his wife or isn't she? The question remains unsettled, but perhaps, divorce proceedings will decide it. Still insisting that Miss Tillie Tolan, No. 63 Potomac avenue, is his wife, who deserted him a year ago, John Klimoviez, today instructed his attorney to institute a suit for divorce. "No matter what she says, that woman is my wife," said Klimovicz, "but if she doesn't want me, then I will get a divorce and let her have her freedom."

MRS. PALMER'S SUCCESSOR.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Potter Palmer returned to her home on Lake Shore Drive today, after several months' sojourn in Europe, and prepared again to take up the scepter of society's realm. Hints of rebellion against her leadership exercised from London and Paris were quieted the moment Mrs. Palmer set foot again in Chicago. Conjectures as to who would become Mrs. Palmer's successor was set at rest indefinitely. She returns to succeed herself.

FLOUR TRUST RAISES PRICE.

Advance of Twenty Cents Per Barrel Is Ordered.

Profit to Mills Now Sixty-three Per Cent.

San Francisco and Neighboring Cities Are Hit.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The flour trust has raised the price of flour 20 cents a barrel or 5 cents a sack.

The trust has also notified grocers that they must charge the consumers this advance. The order went into effect yesterday. All the principal flour mills in this and neighboring cities belong to the trust.

The order of the trust has been that the consumers should pay $1.55 a sack for flour. The new order provides that the consumers shall pay $1.60 a sack for the same flour. Wheat is $1.60 a hundred. Flour is $2.26 a hundred. The result of the trust order is that Oregon flour can be bought in this city cheaper than California flour.

There is a waste of about 18 per cent. in rolling wheat. The cost of manufacturing flour is not more than 5 per cent., as all the work, even to the handling, is done by automatic machinery. A bookkeeper and oiler can run a flour mill. The waste and cost of manufacture cannot exceed 25 per cent. With wheat at $1.60 a hundred, and most of the mills have contracted for their wheat below this figure, the cost of flour is $2 a hundred. It retails for $3.26 a hundred and the profit therefore, is 63 per cent., on the greatest food staple that enters into human consumption.

This trust has been driven to fix the price by the activities of the Associated Retail Grocers of San Francisco and the San Francisco Retail Grocers' Association.

Gross Earnings Over Past Year Given Out at Pacific Grove as $2,-000,000—Lay Delegates Reject All Amendments Proposed by Eastern Division.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PACIFIC GROVE, Sept. 14.—In the closing session of the California conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church this morning, some interesting figures were given of the transactions of the Methodist Book Concern.

It shared in the general prosperity and its business shows an increase of over $102,000. Its vested capital now amounts to $4,000,000. Its earnings over the past year were $2,000,000 and its profits furnish $150,-000 to conference claimants, or $20,000 more than the previous year.

Bishop Neeley next presented a deputation from the lay electoral conference, which announced that the lay conference had voted against all the amendments proposed by various eastern conferences.

After many ballots, the names of E. W. Angwin and E. R. Dille were added to the list of pastor delegates to the general conference at Baltimore.

In the afternoon Rev. C. G. Milnes preached the semi-centennial sermon. The anniversaries of the Epworth League, Church Extension and Home Missionary societies occupied the evening.

PATRIOTISM AT PRESIDIO.

Joint Celebration Is Participated in by United States Army Officers and Civilians.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 14.—A joint celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the capture of the City of Mexico by United States troops, and the ninety-third birthday of the "Star-Spangled Banner," was held today at the Presidio.

Col. John L. Clem, assistant quartermaster-general, acted as president of the day. A military and civil parade preceded the signal for the beginning of the exercises, which was a shot fired by Capt. H. B. Rand of Oakland from a musket used by his grandfather at Bunker Hill. After the singing of "America," Col. J. A. Lundon introduced Col. Clem, who delivered a brief address, which was followed by prayer by Rev. Stephen R. Wood.

Maj. E. A. Sherman spoke of the Mexican War, and Chaplain Lucien Young told of the exploits of the navy. Addresses were also delivered by Senator George C. Perkins and Brig.-Gen. Carl A. Woodruff.

REDDING, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Frank Jones waked up this morning in a lodging-house in Kennet to find that he had been sleeping with a corpse.

Jones, and a man whom he did not know by name, arrived in Kennet yesterday from Red Bluff, where they had worked together for two days on the Ross & Kimball ranch. They retired early in Kennet last night, and occupied the same bed.

When Jones awoke this morning, the rigid arms of his companion were around his neck. Jones had chummed with the man for nearly a week, but never asked him his name nor where he came from. His death is supposed to have been due to heart trouble.

LOS ANGELES WOMAN SUBMITS MUSHY LOVE LETTERS.

Says Her Husband Also Bought Jewelry for Detroit Schoolmarm. Gives Deposition That Surprises Him When He Seeks Divorce—Alleges She Made Him Sick.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Christina S. Rubly of Los Angeles, who is being sued for a divorce by her husband, Charles G. Rubly, in Detroit, is conducting a long-distance defense by deposition.

Although Mrs. Rubly is offering a sensational defense, she does not ask the court for a decree for herself.

Rubly accused his wife of deserting him and of taking their children to Los Angeles two years ago, when he says she refused to return to him.

"She was repulsive to me," declares Rubly. "She never wanted to go where I wished. She said it wasn't God's word. After she got to Los Angeles, she notified me that she and the children would live without me in peace."

Rubly was greatly surprised when his wife's attorney produced a long deposition from her and began reading several mushy letters from other women, including a Detroit school teacher.

"He frequently told that I made him sick at his stomach," declares Mrs. Rubly.

"I found the letters in his pocket, and when I told him he cried like a child. He was expelled from church in Cleveland, O., because he bought jewelry for a Detroit school teacher, instead of for me.

"One day he said he lived at a Chicago boarding-house where girl typewriters lived, and his eye fell upon one girl and he prayed three whole nights for the Lord to give her to him."

The city directory gives Mrs. Rubley's address as No. 513 East Eleventh street.

NEW YORK STATE CLERGYMAN CREATES SENSATION.

With Wife in Insane Asylum and Two Children, Utica Divine Publicly Announces Belief in Freedom of Love and Takes Widow as "Heaven-made Bride."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A serious breach among the clergymen of Utica, which has startled society there, was disclosed tonight, when Rev. W. P. Sims, formerly of New York City, and Mrs. Ellen Burlingame Dudley Dorn publicly declared their belief in the freedom of love, heaven-made affinities, and prenatal marriages.

The case promises to become of even wider celebrity than that of Ferdinand Pinney Earle and Miss Julia Kuttner.

Dr. Sims's attitude is as implacable as that of Earle. Veiled threats of ostracism uttered even from the pulpits have failed to move him, and earnest letters from prominent Utica clergy have been powerless to influence the minister against his "soul's bride," whose home he has made his own for the last three months.

This state of affairs caused by the actions of this strange couple and which has been carefully guarded from general publicity, can be better realized when it is known that Mrs. Dorn is a high officer of the King's Daughters, and has held almost every office at the disposal of the Good Templars. Her husband is dead. Rev. Mr. Sims comes from a well-known New York family. He has a wife living and two children. The former, however, has been confined in an asylum for the insane for nearly ten years.

PRINTING OFFICE DYNAMITED.

Two Presses and Four Linotype Machines in Missouri Newspaper Plant Are Wrecked.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

JOPLIN (Mo.) Sept. 14.—Unknown persons exploded dynamite in the two presses and four linotype setting machines of the News-Herald, the local afternoon paper, causing damage amounting to $20,000.

Six packages of dynamite of two sticks each were used. One package had been placed in each of the two presses and the four linotype machines. All of the linotype machines were wrecked and one of the presses was badly damaged. The dynamite in the other press failed to explode.

P. E. Burton, manager of the News-Herald, said tonight: "The outrage was perpetrated by persons who oppose the policies of decency advocated by the News-Herald." Mr. Burton offered a reward of $1000 for the apprehension of the guilty persons.

Every window in the building which is situated in the heart of the business district, was broken. No one was in the building when the explosion occurred.

MURDEROUS PLOT.

BOLD ROBBERS ARE FOILED.

Attempt Made to Slay New York Promoter.

Stenographer and Clerk to His Rescue.

Woman Employee Suspected of Conspiracy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Two men entered the office of Frank W. Beardsley, president of the Industrial Finance Company at No. 1286 Broadway, during one of the busiest hours of the afternoon yesterday, slashed him with a knife and attempted to rob him.

Ethel Levine, a stenographer, and John Michael, a clerk, were in the office at the time. They went to the assistance of their employer, and fought the robbers, who succeeded in making their escape. The attack was not reported to the police until today.

President Beardsley said he did not attribute much importance to the matter at first and it was not until a woman employed in his office, disappeared after the attack that he decided that it was a plot to kill him and that the woman was one of the conspirators. According to Beardsley, the two men called at his office on Thursday and said they were inventors of a device which they wanted him to examine with a view of financing a company to put it on the market. An appointment was made for the next afternoon.

President Beardsley declares he thought no more about the matter and suspecting from his unfavorable reception of the proposition, that the men would not keep the appointment.

BRING THEIR "DEVICE."

Both appeared at the appointed time, however, and one of them laid a knife on Mr. Beardsley's desk, with the remark that it was the device in question. The banker was in a revolving chair, tipping back to a comfortable position, when he was seized by the neck and his chair drawn back so that his feet were higher than his head. Half-choked and almost helpless, Mr. Beardsley struggled as best he could. Miss Levine, who had seen the attack, ran screaming into the hall. Michael, the clerk, tried to help his employer, but the men put him to flight.

Beardsley's struggles and cries for help caused his assailants to cease their attack, but not until he had been slashed in the face by the alleged newly invented knife. Then the men ran to a lower floor, from which they took an elevator to the street.

Other tenants of the building expressed surprise today at the story of the assault. No sound of scuffling or cries of help had been heard, they said.

Mr. Beardsley declared that the attack undoubtedly had its motive in robbery. "I had $60 in my pockets at the time and the safe door was open," he said. "One of my office force, a girl employé, has failed to appear since the attack, and I think she was in league with my assailants."

BOLD ATTEMPT AT ROBBERY.

Aided by Woman, Three Men Wearing Red Dominos Try to Rob San Francisco Saloonkeeper.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 14.—A bold attempt was made at a late hour tonight to hold up the saloon of H. Pundet at Fifth and Howard streets by three men and a woman, all of the party wearing red masks.

The woman entered the saloon and asked for a pitcher of beer, leaving, when supplied, by the side door. Shortly afterward Pundet was attracted by an unusual noise and went to the door and looked out. He was immediately covered by three pistols in the hands of three male robbers. He promptly closed the door in their faces and opened fire with an automatic discharge gun.

Nine shots went through the door, whereupon the men fled and Pundt took to the street and continued firing until the party disappeared in the darkness, with the police in pursuit.

STRANGLER SUSPECT ARRESTED.

Columbus, O., Man in Jail Accused of Murdering Two Cincinnati Telephone Girls.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

COLUMBUS (O.) Sept. 14.—Chryst Koehl was arrested here today on suspicion that he is responsible for the strangling mysteries in which two telephone girls of Cincinnati lost their lives, over two years ago.

The crimes had been attributed to Oliver Haugh, the Dayton fiend who was electrocuted for the murder of his father, mother and sister.

NEW STAR TO FLAG.

NEW MEXICO IS NOW KNOCKING.

SEEKS ADMISSION TO SISTERHOOD OF STATES.

Campaign for Single Statehood Is on in Earnest, and Gov. Curry, Who Will Go to Memphis This Month, Will Endeavor to Influence President Roosevelt.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SANTA FE (N. M.) Sept. 11.—The campaign for single Statehood for New Mexico in 1908 is on in earnest and plans are being formulated for the holding of a constitutional convention in this city in November, at which the delegates elected at the November election in 1906 will meet and draft a constitution to be submitted by Delegate W. H. Andrews at the convening of the Sixtieth Congress, praying that New Mexico be admitted into the union under its present name and within present boundaries.

In addition, a large delegation, regardless of politics, headed by Gov. George Curry, National Committeemen Solomon Luna, Chairman H. O. Bursum of the Territorial Republican Central Committee; A. A. Jones, chairman of the Democratic Territorial Central Committee, and other leading politicians will journey to the national capital to impress upon the President and Congress the fitness of this Territory for Statehood.

Gov. Curry, in an extended interview just given out, has declared himself unequivocally in favor of single Statehood in 1908 and heartily indorses the plan of holding a constitutional convention at an early date. He has called a conference of leading politicians of both parties to meet here within a few days, with a view to securing their united action in favor of single Statehood and to agree upon a method of procedure.

Gov. Curry goes East two weeks hence to attend the Deep Waterways' Convention at Memphis, Tenn., and he will broach the question of single Statehood to President Roosevelt, who will be the principal speaker on that occasion. The Governor stands close to the President, as every one in the Territory knows, and it is confidently felt that New Mexico's executive will have some pleasing news to bring back, when he returns to the capital.

Since President Roosevelt has announced that he would abide by the voice of the people of the Territories and no longer insist upon joint Statehood for New Mexico and Arizona, it is believed he will not oppose a proposition now to have the Territories admitted as separate States into the Union.

Don Tarlinia Criticises the Almanac de Gotha.

Say Publisher Wanted Money to Include Him.

Italian Ambassador Offers Strenuous Denial.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Almanac de Gotha, an accepted authority on all titles of nobility, is issued by the long-established publishing house of Jules Perahes, in Gotha. Reports having reached the firm that Don Marino Torlinia, who recently married a daughter of Charles A. Moore of New York, had made an accusation to the effect that his name had been excluded from the almanac's pages because of his refusal to pay an exorbitant fee, an indignant denial has been sent by the publishers to your Berlin correspondent. Don Marino was quoted as saying:

"Six years ago my brother, Leopold, the Duke of Poli and Guadagnole, who had attended to the sending of the family history to the Almanac de Gotha in the past, filled out the blanks that were sent to us, and mailed them to the publishers of the almanac as usual.

"In a very short time there came a demand that we pay an enormous sum to be represented in the almanac, otherwise the next edition would not mention us.

"My brothers and I decided that the Torlinia family was too well known to pay a big amount of money to be mentioned in a book that was supposed to include all members of the nobility, so we refused to have anything more to do with it. That's the reason why you don't see the Torlinia family in the almanac any more."

CASE HAS PRECEDENTS.

Controversies over admission to the coveted pages are not new. The question has been raised frequently, especially by nobles or quasi-nobles, whose names do not appear therein, but all accusations have fallen for lack of foundation.

There is declared to be no fee charged, and high officials say Don Marino's accusation is absurd.

The Almanac de Gotha is a scientific work, an authority in courts of Europe on the particular matters to which it relates. Neither the publisher nor the persons whose names adorn the pages of the almanac have, it is said, any choice in the matter.

The publisher may have a personal hatred of a noble house, but he has no choice. If the title to his house is entitled to a place in the almanac, he cannot be omitted. Were such a course within the power of the publisher, the book would lose its authority, and also lose the high position which it undoubtedly holds throughout the world.

For each land, the almanac has its own rules, which are carried out with iron rigidity. In the case of Italy, to which Don Marino Torlinia of Rome belongs, there are also hard and fast lines, which the almanac observes.

Count Lansea Di Busca, the Italian Ambassador to Germany, discussed the matter with your correspondent.

"The Torlinia family," he said, "does not appear in the Almanac de Gotha because it is not old enough, and because its quarterings are deficient in number.

"The patent, I think, only dates back to the beginning of the last century, and was conferred by the Pope. Against Papal creations, as such, there is absolutely nothing to say. The Papal creations include the highest nobles in all Italy.

NO OTHER REASONS.

"Apart from this, there is no reason why the Torlinias should not appear in the almanac, and, as a matter of fact, this is the only reason of their omission.

"To marry Miss Moore will not increase his chances of admission by adding anything to his quarterings.

"Taking it for granted that this is actually the Duc Marino Torlinia of Rome," added the Ambassodar, "Miss Moore has made a very notable marriage. The Torlinias are well known in Rome. They are allied to the Borhese by marriage, and to a lot of other high Roman families as well. They are also rich.

"The first Duc was a very large owner in the Papal States. All Rome knows the Torlinia as a fine old family, against whom absolutely nothing can be said."

The Ambassador confirmed the statement that it was absurd to suppose the Duc's name was excluded from the almanac because he objected to pay exorbitant fees.

"There are no fees," he added. "When his family is old enough, and his quarterings numerous enough, and when he has obtained the recognized position high enough in the nobility, it will appear in the Almanac de Gotha.

"If he is not competent, the paying of millions of francs would not get him into its pages, nor would the paying of millions get his name struck out were it once there."

BREAD RIOTS OCCUR.

Advance in Price by Trust Results in Serious Disturbances as Protest in Triest.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

VIENNA, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The increase in the price of bread has occasioned serious riots in Triest.

Last night the Socialists organized a demonstration of protest and marched through the streets, singing revolutionary songs, smashing windows in stores, storming cafés and demolishing furniture. Several persons were injured. The affair is likely to be repeated elsewhere.

The Budapest Council has voted $100,000 to establish a municipal bakery in opposition to the bread trust. The Vienna Council yesterday considered a proposal to establish a municipal meat and provision market to protect the public from the extortion of the agrarian classes.

AMERICANS IN PARIS.

Jacob Astor in Old-fashioned Hotel; Senator Warrens Holds Down "Historic" Lounge.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] John Jacob Astor has taken a suite at the Hotel Hollande. While he looks out on the busiest part of Paris he enjoys the seclusion of an old-fashioned and comfortable hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Smith of Boston gave a farewell dinner at the Hotel Continental, before returning to their "ranch" in the Rocky Mountains. Mr. Smith has recovered from the automobile accident he met with in Belgium, and was able to receive his guests.

United States Senator Warren of Wyoming is at the Hotel Regina and has taken possession of the corner seat of a lounge where Judge Gerrys of Baltimore used to receive his friends.

Miss Payn of Maryland sails for America early in October. She and her mother intend to pass the winter at Nice.

The news that Miss Evylena Palmer of New York has married Angelo Sikelanos, a Greek, vastly surprised the American colony. Sikelanos is unknown here. Before her marriage, Miss Palmer passed much time in Paris with her brother, Courtland Palmer. She is very popular and a good actress, having studied under the best French masters.

NORDICA LIKES OLD PAGEANT.

FAMOUS SINGER TO BRING ST. ALBANS IDEA HERE.

Prima Donna Enthusiastic Over Historic Procession—Thinks American History Affords Ample Characters and Setting—Plans Outdoor Pastorals.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "I have never seen anything more educative, or more in keeping with the noble traditions of the Anglo-Saxon people."

It was Mme. Nordica who spoke in these enthusiastic terms of St. Alban's pageant. The great prima donna was staying at Claridge's Hotel, but had spent most of her time in the Old World town of St. Albans, where Queen Elizabeth, Boadice and various ancient Britons masqueraded gaily.

Mme. Nordica is very enthusiastic about the pageant idea and she intends to carry it out at her institute in the United States, when her great scheme materializes.

"I am sure we can arrange a pageant in America just as well as they can here. We do not need to take all our history from England. We can take the best that is common to the Anglo-Saxon race.

"I believe that a pageant such as I have seen at St. Albans would be an even greater success in America than in England. We have not, of course, the medieval setting of St. Albans, with its hoary old abbey and Elizabethan houses, but we can do exceedingly well with the material we have. We have William Penn, Sir Walter Raleigh, John Smith and Pocahontas."

Her latest European trip has convinced Mme. Nordica more than ever of the necessity of instituting a scheme that will elevate music to the level of the other great professions and create a standard which will exclude the unfit, while it increases the natural capabilities of those adapted to the profession.

She hopes to have in connection with her institute Greek plays in the open air, and also pastoral plays, as well as pageants.

Steamer Victoria Brings Appalling Details of Terrible Conflagration. Blaze Starts iin Soap Factory. Powder Magazine Exjlodes, and Flames Spread in Strong Wind.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

VICTORIA (B. C.) Sept. 14.—The steamer Shawmut, which arrived last night from Manila, via Japan and China, with a cargo of hemp, tea, silk and general freight, and forty saloon passengers, including many naval, military and civil officers from the Philippines, brought further news of the great fire at Hakodate.

It seems the big conflagration originated in a soap factory near the Higashigawa school, and spread with great rapidity, sweeping away hundreds of bamboo houses.

During the fire a powder magazine at Kishomachi exploded, involving much loss of life.

In all 300 lives were lost during the fire and 13,000 houses burned, a strong wind fanning the fire, which spread with great rapidity.

All the foreign consulates, administrative offices, banks, company offices, schools, theaters, etc., were burned, with the exceptions of the American consulate, courthouse, railway station and customhouses.

One steamer, the Nanaye Maru, was burned and sank in the harbor after breaking from her moorings.

Ten large junks filled with coal were also burned. The loss of insurance liabilities carried by eight Japanese companies, amounts to 3,500,000 yen.

The Tokio press speak pessimistically of the obligations of the insurance companies, some of which are liable for more than their paid-up capital.

KING HONORS LADY PAGET.

British Monarch Dines With Her at Coombe Warren and Enjoys a Dainty Repast.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] When King Edward arrived in London, Saturday, he sent a message by wire to Lady Paget, formerly Miss Minnie Stevens of New York, that he would lunch with her at her country place, Coombe Warren, the next day.

Lady Paget assembled an informal party to receive and welcome the royal guest. One of the charms of Coombe Warren is its old-fashioned hedges, walks and the bowling green, where Lady Paget every afternoon plays croquet.

After luncheon, where the King drank coffee, the guests wandered about the grounds and later in the afternoon tea was served in the open. The King put on a top loose coat, for there was just a light coolness in the air, and settled down comfortably in a low wicker chair.

"I could not do this a month ago," he said with a happy laugh over the disappearances of his muscular twinges. "Nor this," he added, as he ate and enjoyed a hot-buttered cake, "the first I have had since I left England for Marienbad."

At the tea table, His Majesty presented Lady Paget with small souvenirs as tokens of his friendship.

Mrs. George Keppell and Mrs. Lewis Harcourt and Whitelaw Reid, with whom the King had half an hour's private chat, were four other prominent guests.

CAST-OFF WIFE HOME AGAIN.

Mrs. Frederick Pinney Earle Tells Her Story.

No Bitterness for Husband or His "Affinity."

Mother's Life Now Wrapped Up in Her Boy.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BOULOGNE (France) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Frederick Pinney Earle, wife of the American artist, who has voluntarily relinquished her husband to an "affinity," reached here last night on the Rhyndam.

As the tug bearing friends of the passengers came alongside the steamer the young woman, who stood close to the rail, peering anxiously into the faces below, suddenly recognized her brother.

With a cry of joy she lifted her little son in her arms and rushed toward the gangway. Their greeting, if less effusive than is usual with the French, was deeply tinged with feeling. Her first question was for her family at home. Assured that all was well and waiting to welcome her, she said softly, "Then I am happy."

Mrs. Earle has faced her strange situation with a singular generosity toward both her husband and her rival. The depression, which, as she admitted, had almost overcome her at the outset of her voyage, has completely vanished. To the correspondent she recited the story of her matrimonial life, with simple directness, and devoid of bitterness.

SOCIALIST BY TEMPERAMENT.

"I am convinced," she said, "that this is the only solution. I have neither jealousy of Miss Kuttner nor feeling against Mr. Earle. It is ordained by fate. She is a woman of excellent character, and I am convinced my husband will be happy with her."

Mrs. Earle flushed as she denied intentional ill-treatment on the part of Earle. She said he had struck her only when under the strain of intense nervous suffering. It is probable, nevertheless, that cruelty and incompatability of temper will be the grounds for divorce. The wife acknowledges that she is a Socialist by temperament, but she rejects the suggestion that she has sympathy with free love.

"From the first," she went on, "my marriage was a mistake. Although it was a love match, I soon perceived that we were unsuited for each other. My husband was moody, and in fits of temper he has lifted his hand against me. But I remembered my marriage vows and forgave him. He would then overwhelm me with remorseful tenderness. This, of course, indicated a lack of balance. My family was congizant of his behavior, and my father reproached me for enduring it. He said it degraded me, but in spite of all I dearly loved my husband.

LIVES FOR HER BOY.

"When Miss Kuttner came upon the scene the incompatability became more and more apparent. I did not fight against their attachment. She was good looking and very attractive. The end seemed to me inevitable. It is far better they should be together.

"My future—ah, that remains to be talked over with my father. My life is wrapped up in my boy. He asks after his father now, but he will soon forget. I hope to make him, first, a good man. If his tastes tend that way, he may become an artist. I shall always speak to him in English, that he may regard that as his mother's tongue."

Mrs. Earle will resume her maiden name after the divorce and live as if Earle had never existed.

Berlin Public Is Elated Over British Ships Failure to Lower Deutschland's Record, but Officials of German Companies Think Cunarder May Yet Capture Blue Ribbon.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Public attention is centered upon the reports of the steamship Lusitania's performance.

The press comments generally reflect the elation felt because the laurels of trans-Atlantic speed records still belong to the Germans. The building of the English turbine boats has been regarded here all along as a measure aimed expressly at their German rivals. The Lusitania's inability to lower the Deutschland's average-speed record is considered a sign that the blue ribbon will remain here.

Officials of German steamship companies, however, are less jubilant.

"The Lusitania failed to break the average-speed record," said an officer of one German line to The Times' correspondent this morning, "but this trial is not conclusive. Nobody can tell what she will do later. It is still possible for her to capture the prize, and the Germans will then be obliged to make heroic efforts to retake the supremacy. Probably we must consider the advisability of following the British example and adopt turbines."

VOYAGES IN AIR.

Many Ascents Are Made With Maj. Parseval's Dirigible Balloon Near Berlin.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—Maj. Parseval's dirigible balloon was virtually placed at the disposal of the public today at Temel, near here, by the company which constructed it, in order that experimental voyages may be made to show the progress reached in the building of airships.

About a dozen ascents were made successfully during the day. Each time the airship carried one passenger in addition to the aëronaut in charge and the engineers. Minister of War Von Einem and other leading military officers and ministers enjoyed voyages in the air, during which every possible maneuver was carried out with precision. There was almost no wind blowing.

Maj. Parseval said that more powerful motors are necessary to drive the airship against a fairly strong [illegible]

BATTLE ROYAL.

KAISER FIGHTS WITH COUSINS.

DISPUTE IS BLOODLESS, BUT VERY BITTER.

Princes of Two Duchies Resent Action of Emperor in Presenting Flags to Regiments Recruited from People in Their Respective Domains.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Between the Kaiser and some of his princely cousins a battle royal is now waging, which, while kept within the terms of ceremonious politeness, is intense enough to afford huge enjoyment to Socialists and other mockers.

The Kaiser claims the privilege of presenting flags to every regiment throughout the Fatherland, according to his royal pleasure. A few weeks ago he decided to honor the Seventh and Tenth Army Corps, but the Princes of Oldenburg-Detmold and Buckeburg claimed this as their exclusive prerogative, since these regiments were recruited from their people and quartered in their domains. Finally, with the exception of the grand duke of Oldenburg, the princes withdrew their objections.

The Duke, however, roundly swore he would rather see his regiment with the raggedest colors in the world than to have the Kaiser give them new ones.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

LIVERPOOL, Sept. 14.—The Mary Kingsley medal, instituted by the Liverpool School for the Study of Tropical Diseases, to commemorate Miss Mary Kingsley, the African traveler, has been awarded, among others, to Dr. Charles Finlay, chief sanitary officer of Cuba, who originated the theory that yellow fever is carried by mosquitos; to Col. W. C. Gorgas, U. S.A., who, as chief sanitary inspector of Havana, gave practical effect in 1902 to the discovery of Dr. Finlay and the American commission in connection with the investigation of the cause of yellow fever and succeeded in banishing the disease from Havana, and to Dr. Theodore Bald Smith of Harvard, who discovered a new kind of blood parasite in his investigations of the so-called Texas cattle fever.

Col. Gorgas is now chief sanitary officer of the Panama Canal zone.

ENGLISHMAN WOULD HAVE NATION OF EARLY RISERS.

Head of Watch and Clock Makers' Guild Proposes Setting All Timepieces Up One Hour, so That Citizens Would Get Up Earlier—Astronomical Obstacles Are Ridiculed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] President Wright of the British Watch and Clock Makers' Guild, has undertaken to transform the English into a nation of early risers.

At the annual meeting he proposed the simple expedient of putting forward all clocks one hour, so that noon should fall at 11 instead of 12.

Thus every one would go to bed and rise one hour earlier than at present. Many objections to the scheme were raised, on the score of the enormous difficulties to be overcome in upsetting the basis on which all astronomical and other calculations were made.

Although the president belittled these obstacles, the guild refused to pass his measure.

MAKES KISSING SAFE.

German Professor Urges Wearing by Men of "Toothbrush" Moutaches.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] If you wish to be healthy, wear the new tooth-brush moustache. It may be uncomfortable as the complement to a kiss, but it is absolutely safe.

This is the dictum of Prof. Wallnitz, who has been active in the controversy raging among the eminent bacteriologists. The "tooth brush" is the invention of clever Americans, and it is urged against the popular moustache a la Kaiser. The latter necessitates a moustache binder, and Wallnitz, after submitting several binders to a careful microscopic examination, has discovered fragments of diseased hair and skin and an incredible number of horrible bacilli. Some innocent guinea pigs, inoculated with the cultures, suffered tortures.

The short bristle decoration of the upper lip is all, he declares, that will save a sweetheart or wife from infection.

Don't Buy a "Dummy Suit"

HERE'S the kind of Man upon whom the ordinary Suit looks mighty Good—

He's made of Wood—this Fellow—he doesn't move around very much—Consequently the ordinary Suit looks as Good a year after he has worn it as the first day he had it put on.

If Mr. Dummy were the only one to wear the ordinary Suit—all would be well.

For then the Improper Cutting, the Unskilful Tailoring and above all the Hot Pressing—Old Doctor Goose's "Dope"—that are usually in the ordinary Suit, wouldn't be observable.

Unfortunately a Flesh and Blood Man—the kind that doesn't stand still, but moves around a good deal—gets such a Suit and then there's trouble.

Old Doctor Goose's Dope "fades" away gradually, revealing the Glaring Imperfections of Cutting and Tailoring.

The Lapels Bulge—the Collar Sags—the Shoulders Break—Sleeves Twist—and the Ordinary Suit looks a very Sad Affair.

Now you shouldn't buy a Dummy Suit, Mr. Man of Flesh and Blood—

You should get a Suit that will stand Wear—

—A Suit in which Style, Shape and Fit are not merely "doped" in temporarily by Old Doctor Goose but are sewed into the Fabric permanently by careful needle work.

ORDER FROM CHAOS.

CLEMENCEAU IS MAKING GOOD.

PREMIER HANDLES MOROCCAN IMBROGLIO CLEVERLY.

Even Radical Socialists Are Satisfied With His Achievements. French Irritation Over Germany's "Captious" Criticism Disappears. Fanatics Amenable to Suasion.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] M. Clemenceau's manipulation of the Moroccan imbroglio continues to receive the support of all Frenchmen. Even Jean Jaures and Herve, the "stormy petrels" of Gallic Socialism, will concede that with all the Premier's faults they trust him in this delicate business.

French irritation over what seemed at first to be the captiousness of Germany's criticism of Clemenceau's proposal that a provisional police force be established, is disappearing.

The German press, semi-officially and independently, replies gravely to the Paris suggestion that an affront was implied, and says Germany is more sympathetic than it seems to suit the political enemies of M. Clemenceau to admit.

The assurances given by the latter to Berlin—assurances of satisfaction with the reply of the German government to the French note, as to the police scheme—have cleared the air.

In the decision to hold Morocco responsible for all indemnities, the French bring the strongest pressure to bear upon the Sultan and upon Mulai Hafid, who has usurped authority in the south.

Even fanatical tribesmen are amenable to moral suasion of this kind. Meanwhile Raisuli, alternately assuming the roles of dervish and clown, provides the French cartoonists with diverting material.

SULTAN MULAI HAFID STARTS FOR COAST.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The movements and intentions of the rival Sultans, Abdul Aziz and Mulai Hafid, are shrouded in mystery. The latest advices from the interior of Morocco are that Mulai Hafid, with an army of about 8000 men, recently left Morocco City for Rabat, on the coast, and that his uncle, at the head of a second army, will soon follow him. Mulai Hafid, it is added, has announced that he will pay the cost of the French expedition to Morocco on condition that France evacuates the country.

The latest advices received from Gen. Drude, the French commander at Casa Blanca, said that if the delegates tribes suing for peace did not appear at noon today he intended to immediately assume the offensive again and, with the assistance of the guns of the French cruiser Gloire, destroy the camp of hostile Moors situated near Fedala.

MOORISH TRIBESMEN ARE DISAPPEARING.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

PARIS, Sept. 14.—Sultan Mulai Hafir, it is reported, has announced that he will pay the cost of the French expedition to Morocco on condition that France evacuates the country.

Only two columns of tribesmen are now reported to be under arms in the Casa Blanca district. The others have disappeared.

The latest advices received from Gen. Drude said that if the delegates from the tribes suing for peace did not appear at noon today he intended to destroy the Moorish camp near Fedala.

KING OF HEARTS.

RULER PLEADS WOMAN'S CAUSE.

EDWARD GIVES MARLBOROUGH FATHERLY TALK.

His Majesty Interests Himself in Duke's Unhappy Family Affairs and Tells Him Not to Endeavor to Separate Duchess from Her Two Sons.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Let your wife be, man, let her be. It would mean for more to her to be separated from your sons than it can mean to you."

King Edward, first gentleman and first diplomat in Europe, so advised the Duke of Marlborough the other day. Lady Paget, who takes the deepest and most disinterested interest in the Duke and Duchess, has arranged that the King see the Duke several times. On the last occasion His Majesty talked most paternally to Marlborough about his unhappy family affairs.

Plainly the absence of his children, the Marquise of Blonoford and Lord Ivor Churchill, hits the Duke hardest. He complained most bitterly of it to his sovereign. He complained that the Duchess will yield nothing, and insists upon having their boys in her constant care.

"Let her be, man, let her be," said the King, laying his hand on the Duke's shoulder. "Remember, she is a young, pretty and wealthy woman, without an occupation to divert her thoughts, and her marital affairs are all wrong. It would break her heart in no time were she left without her only consolation."

AERIAL.

WELLMAN IS OPTIMISTIC.

REGARDS HIS "FAILURE" AS SUCCESSFUL TEST.

Is Convinced That the Balloon America Can Reach the North Pole in Normal Summer Weather and That His Plan Is Entirely Practicable.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 14.—Walter Wellman, head of the Wellman air-ship exposition, has sent the following telegram to the local papers from Tromsoe:

"After the steamer Express cast off the cable the balloon America did excellently, but an increasing wind soon gave us a hard struggle and the strong wind drove us towards jagged mountains near the coast, where the airship would have been destroyed if she struck.

"There then ensued some hard fighting between the storm and the motor. The latter triumphed. Our confidence in the America had so increased in the meanwhile that I gave the order to start for the North Pole. The wind, however, increased to twelve miles an hour and the snow fell so thickly that we could not see a quarter of a mile.

"Just then the compass failed to work owing to defective construction. We were lost in a snowstorm above the Polar Sea and threatened with destruction. After a brief deliberation, we decided to try to get back to the Express to rectify our compass and start again. It was impossible, however, to keep in one direction, and we were again carried into dangerous proximity of the mountains. Vaiman, the engineer, then put the motor to top speed and the America moved against the wind which probably was blowing fifteen miles an hour. She circled three times in the teeth of the wind.

"We saw the Express for a moment, but immediately lost her again. We could have returned to the Express if we could have seen where to steer, but under the circumstances, the only thing possible was to try to land. With this idea, we stopped the motor and let the America drift over the glacier. At the end of Doul Bay, we used a trailer filled with provisions and a brake rope. Both acted well and dragged over the ice wall 100 feet high without damage.

"After crossing the glacier, we opened the valve and landed on the upper glacier half a mile inshore. The landing was effected so successfully that material weighing nine tons descended 300 feet and touched the ice with no shock or damage whatever excepting several bent tubes and broken wires. Numerous delicate instruments were not injured. The self-registering biographs, metographs, and manometers continued running after the landing. The mantle of the balloon can be easily repaired.

"The America was in the air three hours and covered about fifteen miles with her own power. She made three loops against the wind proving her power and capability of being steered; the ascent was successful in every respect.

"The America is from every standpoint the strongest airship and most durable for a long journey that ever has been built. She held the gas splendidly. Later in the same day, the Express brought men and sledges from camp. The entire airship, including even a part of the gasoline, was returned to camp in three days.

"The balloon and the entire outfit have been made ready for the winter.

"After this successful attempt we all are convinced that we can make our way to the Pole in normal summer weather. We all regard this plan as rational, practicable, and feasible. The thing can be done, and what can be done, shall be done."

PLOTTERS NOT GOING AWAY.

Requisition for Mexicans Is Denied by Governor.

Revolutionists Gain Point in Fight for Liberty.

Will Be Held Here, Though, on Other Charges.

Gov. Gillett refused yesterday to grant requisition papers in the cases of Ricardo Magon, Librado Rivera and Antonio Villarreal, Mexican revolutionists, wanted in Missouri on charges of libel.

The men, however, will not be released at this time, nor at any near future time, according to authorities interested in the case. Local officers have apprehended correspondence addressed to these men, which mark them as prisoners of great importance. Letters from the leading anarchists in the country and even communications from "Reds" in Europe, were received in Los Angeles, to be handed over to Magon and Villarreal.

Several missives from Emma Goldman, the famous anarchist, whose presence in any city or town in the country has called for extra vigilance on the part of the police, were apprehended by the police.

Despite the failure to secure the requisition papers yesterday, the eastern authorities are not despairing, but have prepared new papers, asking for the transportation of the men eastward on criminal charges.

The men were captured in a little house on Pico street, August 23, last. At that time they put up a desperate fight against Detectives Furlong, Talamantes and Rico. A later search of their rooms brought to light heaps of revolutionary literature.

From their station on Pico street they had directed the editorial columns of a local paper known as Revolucion. This paper counseled the downfall of the Mexican government and the dethronement of Diaz. Allied with this paper were men and women favorable to an upheaval in Mexico. Socialists and anarchists were among the number. One woman, who was active in support of the paper and the leaders of the revolution movement, openly advised death to the President of the United States.

TRACKED FROM EAST.

The men were tracked here by eastern agents in the employ of the Mexican government. Gov. Folk issued a plea for requisition papers, asking that the men be sent back to Missouri to face trial. Yesterday Gov. Gillett, on the ground that the crimes had been committed while the conspirators were out of the State, declined to extradite the men. There remain other charges, however.

Yesterday local attorneys representing the Mexicans called upon Capt. Flammer at the Police Station to release the men. The captain refused on the ground that there were other charges against them and that the United States government had an interest in the case. Should the State offense fall through, a charge of violation of the neutrality act will be filed in the Federal court against the three men. They will be charged with having planned the Cananea trouble while on American soil.

The story of the tracking of the Mexicans all over the Western Hemisphere has just come to light. A woman led to the capture of the much wanted men.

For three years the eastern agents followed a beautiful Mexican woman who loved Ricardo Magon, the leader of the conspirators. She followed him from place to place and the officers followed her, knowing that, sooner or later, the love the woman held for the man would draw her to him. Then would come their opportunity. And so it happened that in Los Angeles the officers, untiring, trailed the woman to the Pico-street house.

SECRET MAIL SERVICE.

Details of the mail system as carried on by the revolutionists were also made known yesterday. Mail addressed to Magon and his comrades was received by a patriot in Long Beach. He in turn sent the mail to a man in Highland Park. This friend in Highland Park in the course of time turned the mail over to the care of a man who lived in his neighborhood. This man gave the mail in charge of a confederate who lived on South Main street and this fellow handed the letters over to a woman anarchist who made regular calls for it. Then by this round-about method the mail was finally handed over to the Mexicans.

This mail is causing no end of interest, especially since some of the letters intimate that eastern officials, well known as statesmen, can be relied upon for support of the revolution spirit.

The letters from Mrs. Goldman and others are held as evidence and should the case finally reach the hands of the Federal authorities sensational developments are expected.

During the next two weeks the Mexicans will be tried in the local police courts on charges of interfering with officers in pursuit of their duty.

HELD ON SUSPICION.

Police Take Man Believed a Highwayman, in Company With Possible Victim.

P. E. Rodgers and C. F. Meyers were arrested on suspicion in an alley near First and Ohio streets last night. The police believe that Rodgers is a hold-up man and that Meyers was an intended victim. The officers who arrested the pair had a fight with Rodgers, who is tall and strong. Myers was under the influence of liquor.

In Myers's pockets was found a ticket to Kentucky and $266.70. Meyers says he is a miner and recently came to Los Angeles from Tennessee. Rodgers claimed to be from Kentucky. He represented himself as a "bad man," and in proof exhibited a gun.

Detectives were detailed to investigate the past of Rodgers.

KILLED BY CAR.

An inbound Watts local Pacific Electric car struck and fatally injured an unidentified Mexican laborer two miles north of Watts station last night. The Mexican was brought to Los Angeles and sent to the Pacific Electric Hospital, where he died at 11 o'clock. His body was removed to Pierce Brothers' morgue.

RING AND COIN GONE.

A sneak thief entered the home of Mrs. W. G. Henry at No. 315 East Fifty-third street last night, and stole a diamond ring valued at $75 and took $65 in gold coin. Detectives investigated the case, but say they were unable to ascertain how the thief gained entrance into the house without being discovered.

A new tasteless and odorless discovery which can be given secretly by any lady in tea, coffee or food. Heartily endorsed by temperance workers. It does its work so silently and surely that while the devoted wife, sister or daughter looks on, the drunkard is reclaimed even against his own will and without his knowledge. Many have been cured in a single day.

HA-HA! HO-HO!

JOKESMITHS DUE TONIGHT.

PRESS HUMORISTS WILL COME ON EVENING TRAIN.

Forty of Them, so Far as Known, on Salt Lake Limited—Monrovia Tomorrow, and the Week Is Well Taken Up With Plans for Their Entertainment in Our Midst.

There ought to be a lot of fun in Los Angeles tonight, for some of the most prominent jokesmiths of the country are to get in at 8 o'clock on the Los Angeles Limited of the Salt Lake line. They are members of the American Press Humorists' Association, coming to attend the fifth annual convention, which isn't so much of a convention, after all, but a round of pleasure arranged for fellows whose daily work is supposed to be that same kind of a round.

Anyway, the convention opens in Los Angeles tomorrow, with the departure of the visitors for Monrovia, and there will be doings hereabouts for something like a week.

There are thirty or forty men and women in the party that is coming over the Salt Lake this evening—the women, for the most part, being the wives of the humorists. They come from all parts of the East and Missouri. A committee of local members of the association, including Secretary Frank T. Searight, Winfield Hogaboom and J. C. Stuart, and Tom Peck and Douglas White of the Salt Lake line will meet them at Barstow and escort them into town. Headquarters will be at the Alexandria.

There will be a Spanish luncheon at the Vista Grande at Monrovia tomorrow noon, and in the afternoon the visitors will see the San Gabriel Mission. In the evening there will be a banquet here at the Alexandria, tendered by the local members to the visitors and to representatives of the local newspapers.

On Tuesday the Cawston Ostrich Farm will be visited, likewise Pasadena, where, at noon, a luncheon will be served at Robert J. Burdette's Orange Grove-avenue home, "Sunnycrest." Then at 2 o'clock in the afternoon there will be a reception at Hotel Maryland, followed by an automobile tour of Pasadena. In the evening the Pasadena Board of Trade will give a banquet at the Maryland in honor of the humorists.

On Wednesday there will be an excursion to Mount Lowe, and in the evening, A. J. Taylor, The Times cartoonist, will give a reception at his home, No. 933 Valencia street, in honor of Jud Mortimer Lewis of the Houston Post, one of the visiting party. This will be known as a "Night in Holland." Later the same night there will be a dinner at Levy's for Strickland W. Gilillan, formerly of Los Angeles.

Thursday morning the party will visit Long Beach or Venice and in the afternoon, from 4 until 7 o'clock, there will be a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Mitchell, directed by the Women's Press Club. In the evening, Joseph Scott will give a dinner at the California Club for Thomas A. Daly of the Catholic Standard and Times, president of the association, and for Messrs. Searight, McGroarty and others. There also will be a reception by local Knights of Columbus for Mr. Daly, while numerous members of the association will attend the Mason, while Louis James will present the "Comedy of Errors."

On Friday morning the business session of the association will be held and the visitors will see Los Angeles while doing nothing else. That evening an entertainment is to be given at the Auditorium for the benefit of the "Bill" Nye monument fund. On Saturday evening the party will leave for Goldfield, where they are to be entertained on their way home.

SAYS HE STOLE.

Charles Norton was arrested on a charge of petty larceny last night on the complaint of Mrs. L. W. Moreland of No. 1124 South Alvarado street. According to the police, Norton was employed by Mrs. Moreland to move some household goods. She charges him with having stolen $31.25 from her house.

ASSAULT CHARGED.

A. Bias was arrested at Fifth street and Central avenue last night on the charge of assaulting Ed Carson of No. 521 Ceres avenue, with a knife. It is said that the two men became involved in a wordy dispute, and that Bias attacked Carson first. He inflicted five small knife wounds on Carson.

Prince and Congressman Praises Pe-ru-na

PRINCE JONAH KALANIANAOLE

I Cheerfully Recommend Pe-ru-na As a Very Effective Remedy.

Prince Jonah Kalanianaole, 1522 K St. N. W., Washington, D. C., Delegate in Congress from Hawaii, writes: "I can cheerfully recommend your Peruna as a very effective remedy for coughs, colds and catarrhal trouble."

NO OTHER remedy in the world has received so many testimonials from people of high station as Peruna. Not only by people of high station, but of lowly station, from prince to pauper, from millionaire to day laborer, Peruna has been lauded and recommended for the various climatic ailments of summer and winter.

Read the following sincere testimonials from notable people:

An Invigorating Tonic.

Hon. C. Slemp, Congressman from Virgina, writes:

"I can cheerfully say that I have used your valuable remedy, Peruna, with beneficial results, and can unhesitatingly recommend your remedy to my friends as an invigorating tonic and an effective and permanent cure for catarrh."

System Badly Run Down.

Hon. W. H. Kelbaugh, ex-Member W. Va. Legislature, 204 9th St. N. E., Washington, D. C., writes:

"You can use my name and word at all times for Peruna as a medicine and tonic unequaled. I have tried it for a stubborn cold and badly run-down system.

"I tried all sorts of other medicines and paid several expensive doctor bills. Peruna cured me, strengthened me more than ever and saved me money."

A Bicyclist's Experience.

Mr. John Perrault, 235 Davidson St., Boulevard St. Paul, near Montreal, Canada, writes:

"I have been a bicyclist for over five years, and last spring I caught cold and did not take anything for it, for I thought it was not bad enough, but it came to catarrh.

"I was so discouraged that I didn't know what to do. I could not sleep. I always felt tired and troubled.

"Finally I began to take Peruna. After I had taken one bottle I felt better. I took another one, and now I am well. I would like always to feel as I do today.

"I often recommend Peruna to my friends."

Pe-ru-na in Tablet Form:—For two years Dr. Hartman and his assistants have incessantly labored to create Peruna in tablet form, and their strenuous labors have just been crowned with success. People who object to liquid medicines can now secure Peruna tablets, which represent the solid medicinal ingrediants of Peruna. Each tablet is equivalent to one average dose of Peruna.

CHOOSE FROM NINE LEADERS.

Methodists Will Have Five Representatives.

Annual Conference to Meet Here Wednesday.

Wesleyan Plan Is Favored by Laymen.

PICK THE WINNERS.

Methodists who ought to know say that the five ministerial delegates to the general conference will be chosen from the following nine names:

E. J. Inwood,
A. W. Adkinson,
Robert McIntyre,
George F. Bovard,
J. L. Pitner,
Harcourt W. Peck,
S. A. Thompson,
J. B. Green,
E. A. Healy.

As the time approaches for the opening of the Methodist annual conference in the First Church on Wednesday next, interest increases. The final summing up on the dominant matter of electing delegates to the General Conference gives an increase of one minister and one layman over the representation at the last session of that body.

It was at first thought the Southern California conference would have only four ministerial delegates, but the number of men who are likely to be retired, those who will be placed on special lines of work, and the consequent coming in of new men, will increase the number to five. The rules provide that the number of laymen shall be equal to the number of ministers.

It now seems apparent that the "slate," as arranged a couple of weeks ago, is likely to be broken into several pieces, and that Rev. E. J. Inwood of Riverside will land safely on one of the largest chunks.

THE NINE LEADERS.

There are among the ministers just nine leading candidates, and from among these the shrewdest politicians assert that the five delegates will be chosen. They are all of highest standing and peculiar fitness.

E. J. Inwood may be placed first on the list because he is declared to be a sure winner. As he is yet a young man, many persons will be surprised to learn that he has been in the Southern California conference for twenty-five years, and that for many years he has been the efficient secretary of that body. This record is supplemented by the fact that he is a popular pastor, wherever he goes, and leaves every church stronger than when he took charge of it.

Dr. A. W. Adkinson was appointed presiding elder of the Los Angeles district at the time it was cut in two, and when there was much bewailing of the fact that the district, always one of the greatest in Methodism under Dr. G. F. Bovard, would now lose its prestige and fall behind. But the district now has many more churches than before the division, and the benevolences are far ahead of what they used to be. Dr. Adkinson has shown himself a judicious and successful executive, and therefore has many warm friends in the delegate contest. He is also picked as a winner.

The friends of Dr. Robert McIntyre, pastor of the largest flock in Pacific Methodism, the First Church of this city, put him up as an ideal candidate because of his peculiar fitness for reaching the masses, whom to reach is the great problem of the church. Dr. McIntyre was a bricklayer at the time Chicago was destroyed by the great fire. He laid brick in its upbuilding and fitted himself for the ministry while he did it. Not many years later he was pastor of St. James, the greatest Methodist church in Chicago. His phenomenal eloquence needs no commendation, and his chances for becoming a bishop, say his friends, will be vastly increased by sending him to the General Conference. As a bishop, his eloquent discussions of the labor problem, from the highest standpoint, would have a wide and beneficial influence on the country.

Dr. George F. Bovard is a logical candidate for several reasons. He was chiefly instrumental in securing the General Conference for Los Angeles four years ago. As president of the University of Southern California he is a member of the University Senate, composed of university presidents of America, and has a wide influence on educational affairs of his church. He was also a member of the book committee when the bad management was rooted out at San Francisco.

Dr. John L. Pitner, presiding elder of the San Diego district, and one of the orators of the conference, has done a distinctive work in the development of Methodism in the new Imperial Valley. His army experience stood him in good stead when he was called upon to "rough it" over this undeveloped territory. The successful launching of the Huntington Beach assembly grounds enterprise in his district is also largely due to his untiring endeavors, and has made him strong in the conference. The salaries of all the ministers under him have been advanced from $100 to $400 during his administration and he is popular in his district. It is said that his attitude toward the women's work is so changed that, if elected, he will offer a resolution rescinding the rule that limits their rights.

Harcourt W. Peck has made a splendid record during his first year as presiding elder of the Fresno district and has won the favor of the church authorities by his efforts to secure to the Southern California Conference the neutral strip between it and the northern conference. It was he who led the fight against the heresy teacher, Prof. Mitchell of the Boston Theological Seminary, during the last General Conference, though he was not a delegate. It is no secret that Mitchell's friends are to be at the next General Conference to secure, if possible, a better status for their champion. Peck, they say, ought to be there to "buck the center."

Perhaps no man in the conference has had a more varied experience than Dr. S. A. Thomson, presiding elder of the Pasadena district, and no one knows better the needs of a growing territory than he. He is personally popular with everybody, and has a faculty for seeing the best side of every proposition. When he sees it, there's no use in talking anything else to him. His campaign is being pushed by his friends.

DR. ROBERT McINTYRE
REV. E.J. INWOOD
DR. JOHN L. PITNER
DR. G.F. BOVARD
DR. S.A. THOMSON
DR. E.A. HEALY

Six of the nine prominent candidates for ministerial delegates to the Methodist General Conference.

One of the oldest, keenest and most valuable men in the Southern California conference is Dr. J. B. Green, who was last year retired from a presiding eldership and placed in charge of the superannuate endowment fund. He is an expert statistician, and a far-seeing financier.

Dr. E. A. Healy, the logical preacher and ideal pastor of University Church, is being urged by his friends, as it is about his last opportunity to reap the honors of going to the general conference. No better indorsement of him as a man need be cited than the sorrow expressed by his congregation when he announced that he would ask to be sent to another church, to make room for a younger man for the university.

THE WESLEYAN PLAN.

There is likely to be a decided move in the general conference for the adoption of what is commonly called the "Wesleyan Plan," the abolition of the office of presiding elder. Some of the laymen declare that by virtue of his position, the elder has too much influence over the ministers and laymen of his district, when it comes to such a matter as the election of delegates to the great representative body of the church. There is also a strong desire for the repeal of "Article 48," the amusement-proscribing clause in the discipline. The leaders of thought among the laymen are said to favor both these changes, and resolutions may be offered in the lay conference.

Gossip still keeps A. J. Wallace and W. L. Cleveland in the lead for choice as lay delegates to the general conference, with a great host in the running.

Drew of Fresno takes exception to being classed by B. P. Dayman as a winner with Mr. Wallace, for he says he wants it to be understood that he is running on his own merits.

The annual meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held in Trinity Church, this city, on September 24, 25 and 26.

CUPID'S DOINGS.

MOTHER FINDS RUNAWAY GIRL.

SAN BERNARDINO LASS, THOUGH, MAY NOT STAY HOME.

Left Because She Didn't Like Surroundings and Got Work Here as Domestic Through Aid of Admirer Who Threatens Again to Help Her Get Away—Engaged, They Say.

Although pretty Cora Hackney of San Bernardino was restored to the custody of her mother, Mrs. J. B. Hackney, by the police, Friday night, Oscar Southerland, a local admirer of the girl, has threateend to take her away from her home again. Charges made by the mother were met by counter charges by Southerland. As yet no arrests have been made.

Cora is about 15 years old, and Southerland is two years her senior. According to the girl, they met some time ago, and recently she became engaged to him. Against the will of her mother, Miss Hackney continued to keep company with Southerland and to correspond with him. When Mrs. Hackney told her daughter that she forbade her writing to Southerland, about two weeks ago, the girl decided to take a final step.

Miss Hackney communicated with Southerland, who is employed in the Globe Mills here. He is said to have furnished her with money with which to come to Los Angeles. He obtained employment for her as a domestic with Mrs. M. L. Anderson at No. 5903 Compton avenue.

Mrs. Hackney followed her daughter and with the assistance of detectives she searched three days, at last locating the girl through Southerland.

The young woman at first refused to go home. She found fault with affairs at home. They finally went to San Bernardino together. Southerland said he would furnish Miss Hackeny with means to runaway from home again. He said her home was no place for her. He spoke of a man there who was too attentive to the young woman.

Captain of Detectives Paul Flammer said he had not handled the case. The young woman and her mother claim they were taken before the captain and that the case was settled by him.

AFTER "OILERS."

Pacific Electric Will Wage Campaign Against Miscreants Who Grease the Car Tracks.

Preparations are being made by the Pacific Electric Railroad to prosecute miscreants who oil its rails with malicious intent. During the past two months a number of accidents have narrowly been averted in Pasadena by the cool headedness of crews in coping with oiled rails on grades.

On August 22, at 8:30 o'clock, p.m., outbound Altadena car No. 564 struck a stretch of oiled track at Lake and Pasadena avenues as it was entering Altadena. The crew of the car made a quick stop and prevented an accident.

For this crime Melvin Clark, William Jarvis and Alfred Hickingbottom were fined $20 apiece. George Beckwith of Pasadena was also said to have been in the gang. Recently he returned from a prolonged stay in Avalon and was arrested Monday. His trial was set yesterday by a Pasadena justice for October 12. H. Williams, Hasper Williams and Clarence Mollu were arrested in Pasadena on the same charge. Their trial has also been set for October 12.

"An appropriation will be set aside for the prosecution of the persons who oil our tracks," said a Pacific Electric official last night. "They imperil the lives of car crews and passengers. We are determined to prosecute to the full extent of the law. Hallowe'en is approaching and a warning should be given all practical jokers not to attempt this sort of a 'joke.'"

DIZZY DRIVER.

FOUR HURT WHEN CAR SMASHES AUTO.

FOUR persons were hurled from an automobile about 8 o'clock last night when Pico Heights car No. 353 crashed into the side of a touring car at the Albany-street crossing. All escaped serious injury. The tonneau of the machine was crushed, and the entire automobile boosted out of the path of the rapidly-moving street car. The party consisted of five persons from the Hotel Acacia. G. W. Hooper, a mining man, who was operating the car, was arrested for drunkenness. He was the only member of the party who escaped injury.

The injured:

Mrs. Charles Ussher, shoulder blade broken, hip sprained. Taken to the California Hospital.

Mrs. C. R. Hodges, left leg bruised and sprained. Removed to the California Hospital.

The street car and automobile were traveling at full speed. Hooper took a wide swerve into Pico street as he sped along Albany. He cut ahead of the east-bound car, but failed to keep out of its way. The street car smashed into the tonneau, lifting it off the body of the automobile. Mrs. Ussher, Mrs. Hodges and Smith, who occupied the tonneau, were carried with it. They were thrown about ten feet from the car tracks.

The body of the auto was overturned and Ussher and Hooper, who were in the front seat, were thrown out. Ussher was slightly injured, but Hooper escaped without a scratch.

Mrs. Hodges and Mrs. Ussher were unconscious when picked up and carried to the sidewalk. An ambulance was called, and the women were taken to the hospital. Ussher went with his wife to the hospital, where his scalp wound was attended. Smith was removed to the hotel.

Hooper, who owns the machine, remained at the scene of the smash. When the police arrived he refused to give any information in regard to the accident. He became abusive, and threatened to shoot any patrolman who approached him. He was arrested and taken to the City Jail, where he was booked on the charge of drunkenness. He gave the name of S. B. Matthews to the desk sergeant, but Mr. Ussher said afterward that his name was Hooper.

THROWN FROM AUTO.

Charles H. McFarland Injured When His Machine, Dodging Wagon, Crashes Into Curb.

Charles H. McFarland was pitched from his automobile and slightly injured about 5 o'clock Friday evening at Pico and Arapohoe streets in dodging a Los Angeles Dairy Company's wagon which drove in front of the machine. McFarland's chauffeur was driving the machine and ran into the curbing to avoid a collision. Mr. McFarland, who lives at No. 1147 West Twenty-Eighth street, was taen to his home, where his bruises were attended.

The auto was going at a high rate of speed when a dairy wagon drove along Arapahoe into Uico street. The chauffeur was unable to swerve across the street on account of a rapirly approaching street car. With all his might the chauffeur turned the automobile into the curb. Mr. McFarland was thrown head foremost across the sidewalk. He landed in a vacant lot and escaped serious injury.

HAS STACK A "PULL?"

Reputed Partner of Tom Savage Boasts He Has "Fixed" Charge on Which He Was Arrested.

The case of Charles Stack, reputed half-owner in Tom Savage's Bouquet saloon at Commercial and Los Angeles streets, is causing considerable comment at Central Police Station. Stack was arrested about 3 o'clock Saturday morning in front of the Saddlerock restaurant on Spring street. According to the officers, he was attempting to engage a woman in fistic encounter. About an hour later Savage bailed Stack out.

According to the bailiff's sheets, "no complaint"—signifying that the case was dismissed, is marked after Stack's name. The officers declare that they will prosecute Stack for carrying concealed weapons and disturbing the peace. Stack says he has had the case "fixed."

On Monday the mix-up will be straightened out, and it will be determined whether or not Stack has the pull which he claims to have.

COURT IS INQUISITIVE.

Judge Will Ascertain Definitely If Henry H. Rogers Is Unable to Appear at Trial.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

BOSTON, Sept. 14.—Several prominent business men of New Bedford have been summoned to appear before the Supreme Court here on Monday next to give testimony as to the physical condition of Henry H. Rogers of New York, who has been declared by a physician to be unable to appear in court.

The persons summoned include Walter P. Winsor, president of the First National Bank, and Rufus A. Soule, former president of the Massachusetts Senate.

The object is to determine whether Mr. Rogers is physically able to appear in connection with a $50,000,000 suit brought against him by C. M. Raymond, which was continued indefinitely upon the testimony of a physician that Mr. Rogers was physically unable to be present and would not be able to attend to business for at least three months.

SUIT MAY STIR HIGH SCANDAL.

CONSUL-GENERAL TO CUBA SUED FOR FRAUD.

Former Judge Reilly Begins Action Against Steinhart to Recover $35,000 Alleged Due on Santa Clara Railway Option—Case May Be but Beginning of Series of Revelations.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Frank Steinhart, who, until [illegible] was United States Consul-General at Havana, and who for some time has been the leading American [illegible] in Cuba, was served tonight [illegible] in a suit which promises [illegible] the beginning of a series of [illegible] regarding closely-allied [illegible] conditions on the [illegible]

[illegible] who was appointed Consul-General by President Roosevelt [illegible] the post for five years, despite the efforts of enemies to oust him, had the summons and complaint thrust in his hands as he was dining with friends at the Hotel Imperial.

The suit is instituted by ex-Judge H. J. Reilly to recover $35,000 alleged to be owed by Steinhart on an option for the purchase of an electric railroad in Santa Clara province, Cuba.

The plaintiff is a contractor, who was the builder of several cross-town street car lines in this city. He is now largely interested in Cuban affairs, having constructed the Santa Clara road.

Reilly says that in April, last, Steinhart offered to purchase the property. The ex-Consul is now the manager of the Havana Street Railway Company, having resigned his government position to take the place.

Reilly alleges that the price agreed upon was $1,500,000. According to the complaint, Steinhart took an option on the property at that sum, and agreed to pay $50,000 by April 22.

Reilly alleges that in the meantime the ex-Consul sold a half interest in the option for $50,000, and only turned over to him $15,000 on the date agreed upon. He says Steinhart promised to pay the remainder within a short time, but that he never did so. In fact, Reilly says Steinhart put him off with promises until his patience was exhausted. He therefore brings suit for the remaining $35,000, alleging fraud and deceit.

GIANT TRUST WOULD CONTROL ST. LOUIS CAR COMPANY.

Failure of French Syndicate to "Come Through" in Three-Million-Dollar Preferred Stock Deal, Brings Out Report of North American Company's Negotiations.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It was reported in financial circles today that the North American Company, controlling all the street railway, electric light and power corporations of St. Louis, is seeking to acquire control of the St. Louis Car Company.

A reorganization of the St. Louis Car Company has been expected by brokers for some time. Reports to this effect originated from the alleged failure of a French syndicate to take up $3,000,000 of the car company's preferred stock. President Kosbusch denied a few days ago that the negotiations with the French syndicate had been suspended. It is pointed out by brokers that by obtaining a dominating interest in the St. Louis Car Company, the North American Company would be enabled to lessen its expenditures for rolling stock.

The St. Louis Car Company is capitalized at $5,000,000. It is one of the largest concerns of its kind in the United States. About three months ago it was reported that a French syndicate had decided to buy a new $2,000,000 issue of its preferred stock on a basis of $90 a share.

President Kosbusch was instructed by the French syndicate to deposit the stock certificates with the National Bank of Commerce, and that the sum of $1,000,000 would immediately be placed at the disposal of his company. It was declared positively by bankers two weeks ago that the French syndicate had refused, or was unable to carry out its agreement.

GIRL CAPTURES BOY BURGLAR.

Calmly Catches Him by Arm and Holds Him While Child Goes for Officer.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Miss Amelia Engler, aged 19, stood in the doorway of her mother's bedroom at their home, No. 1327 South Thirteenth street, yesterday, and beheld a youth rifling the bureau drawers.

Calmly walking to where he was, Miss Engler took hold of his arm and asked him what he was there for.

Resistance was useless, for his hands were held in a grip, strengthened by muscles trained on the tennis court.

Miss Engler went through three of his pockets, taking from him a valued old brooch, a breastpin, two earrings and a watch chain. Then she dragged him to the front door.

She saw a little child named Genevieve Werfs, sitting on a bench, and told her to hurry for a policeman. Twenty-five minutes afterward the child returned with Officer Leinert, but the grasp on the thief's arm was still tight.

The intruder gave his name as Marvin Orman. He is just a day over 16.

ROBBER USES HAMMER.

Book-keeper in Goldfield Broker's Office Knocked Senseless and Safe Looted.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 14.—Herbert E. Riggs, book-keeper for E. H. Newland, broker, was found unconscious on the floor of his office last night. The door of the safe was open, and the cash, amounting to $1300, had been taken.

A physician was summoned and Riggs was revived with considerable difficulty. Two big lumps on his forehead showed where he had been struck with some blunt instrument. Riggs says he was working over his books when a stranger appeared at the cashier's window and asked for money. There was a stack of gold on the desk in front of the book-keeper at the time. Riggs says he knows nothing more until he recovered consciousness. When he was found by Harry Greeve, a nephew of Newland, a heavy hammer was picked up from the floor near where he lay. It is thought that the robber used the hammer on his victim.

The case has some peculiar features and the Sheriff is making an investigation.

PASTOR OUTWITS SWINDLER.

Rector of Episcopal Church in Nebraska Town Hands Man Over to Police.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

FREMONT (Neb.) Sept. 14.—Rev. W. H. Frost, rector of the St. James Episcopal Church, last night outwitted David B. Richardson, an alleged swindler, and handed him over to the police.

Richardson made preliminary calls on ministers, arranged for a baptismal service and later returned to report a distressing accident. Under this plea he would secure funds.

Frost entrapped him and an officer caught the schemer.

Fifteen Thousand Pounds of Powder Explodes With Terrible Effect in Illinois Factory.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

ALTON (Ill.) Sept. 14.—Fifteen thousand pounds of powder exploded today at the Equitable Powder Works at East Alton, two miles from here, killing Charles McGinnis and shocking Charles McGilson so that his mind is gone.

The shock of the explosion was felt throughout Alton. Houses trembled, windows rattled and many people thought there was an earthquake. Parts of McGinnis's body was found near the mill. The cause of the explosion is a mystery.

HORRIBLE.

BOY CHAINED LIKE A DOG.

MOTHER BELIEVES HE WILL BE CURED BY MIRACLE.

Child Injured His Head in Fall and Has Been a Wild Boy Ever Since. Police Now Guard Big Ranch from Grape Raiders—Gives Up Bequest to Avoid Notoriety.

PASADENA, Sept. 15.—Down near the Cawston Ostrich Farm, Marvin Bailey, son of Thomas and Mrs. Bailey, who reside near the Arroyo Seco, spends most of his time chained to a tree like a dog. He frets and worries, but the humane officers and others acquainted with the case are loath to interfere with the parental discipline. Marvin is only 9 years of age, but in appearance he is 15. Experts have examined him and for some time the lad was an inmate of the Los Angeles Detention Home.

He presents queer psychological developments. He is an incorrigible truant. On one occasion he got a file from his sister and escaped by severing a link. Again he took two cobble stones and broke his chain. On one of these occasions he was accused of setting the grass afire and endangering the buildings of South Pasadena. His parents say other boys were responsible for this outbreak.

During childhood this boy fell and depressed the crown of his head. Experts in mental diseases say that he could be cured if placed under treatment. His mother is a member of the Nazarene sect and staunchly believes that he will be healed by miraculous means. She says the family are doing everything possible for the boy and that he should be left to the care of his parents. She thinks he would be utterly ruined if placed in a sanitarium. She says, "My husband objects to the chain, but I have told him he must either take the whole responsibility or arrange for some proper care of the boy."

This lad when freed from his chain will run away. When he desires food he is likely to appear in a neighbor's house and take what he wants like a wolf. He has startled several families by his queer actions and his mother, in answer to repeated complaints, has chained him fast. The humane officers are doubtful of their authority to interfere with parental discipline, but neighbors of the Baileys want the boy placed in a proper institution.

GRAPE RAIDERS.

"You can get all the grapes you want out on the Pasadena Heights tract," said a little woman of talkative disposition, and thence spread the rumor. Hundreds came. Men and women in automobiles, buggies, push carts and baby carriages hurried to the tract east of Hill and north of Villa streets intent upon eating grapes. Green corn feasts and the summer festivals of Indians were not in the same list. Little girls wheeled babies out there in "go carts." The vehicle was for the purpose of bringing away more grapes.

The grapes are ripe enough to eat, and Etienn brothers, who lease the tract, intend to use the grapes for wine. This is the famous Dorsey ranch of several thousand acres. It does not look like taking much to take a bunch of grapes. Nobody before objected, but when the rumor spreads that the grapes are free because the owners intend to open the tract as a town lot addition and have no use for the growing crop, it is wonderful how the news spreads. Tons of grapes have been taken from this ranch. Whenever the thieves are halted they tell the same story, "a woman told me that the grapes were free."

Now the order has gone forth that every one taking grapes from the lands of the Pasadena Heights Company will be arrested. Three officers are on duty today to prevent thefts of grapes. At present the fruit of the vine is not ripe enough to pick for wine making, but it is luscious to eat, and the depredations have been extensive. Neighbors say that several automobiles and buggies have gone away loaded.

AVOIDS NOTORIETY.

Just to avoid the publicity of the bequest, Miss Lottie Livingston, physical culture teacher of the Pasadena High School, resigned her claims to a $5000 legacy in the will of G. Crawford Smith. She says she prefers to give up the money rather than submit to the recriminations incidental to the suit. She is said to be one of the "spiritualists" who influenced the testator during his last days, but she makes a complete resignation of any claims on his estate by her failure to appear in Judge Rives's court at the hearing of the will contest.

PASADENA NEWS NOTES.

Bithulithic paving of Los Robles avenue is revived in a tiresome manner by the assertion that residents along the highway will be compelled to pay 40 cents a yard for grading under the contract now recognized by the City Council. On this subject Mayor Earley says: "There is no truth in the rumor. There is nothing behind the claims. The grading matter has been settled some time ago. The contract to be let is for the paving of the street, and nothing but this paving will enter into the question."

Rev. William Rader will occupy the pulpit of the First Congregational Church today. He is well known in San Francisco. He will preach at both morning and evening services.

It is rumored that property owners do not readily offer deeds to land needed for the storm-water conduits in the northwest section of the city. The obstinacy in this respect is found north of Pepper street on the Lincoln-avenue wash. In other sections property owners cannot be reached.

PROHIBIT GAMBLING.

Trustees Seek to "Purge" Glendale. Street Names to Be Changed. Building Report.

GLENDALE, Sept. 14.—Resolutions have been adopted by the City Trustees prohibiting gambling in the city. This ends a bitter controversy which has been waging since the opening of the Hadrick pool-room several weeks ago, when a mass-meeting held in the First Presbyterian Church failed in the desired effects.

"Is there, or is there not, gambling in the pool-room?" has been the hotly contested point between different factions for six weeks. L. F. Hadrick claims not, and he closes on Sundays. The religiously inclined protest that it is against the nature of poolrooms to be run along strictly moral, uplifting lines, and the trustees have hardly been allowed to sleep since the opening of the room on Fourth and Glendale avenue.

It has been decided by the City Council also to change the names of certain streets, particularly those using letters, as "A" street, "C" street to "Adams" "Carroll," etc.

Most important was the report submitted by Joseph P. Shropshire, Building Inspector. April shows the largest number of permits, seventeen, valuation, $22,060. August shows fourteen permits, valuation $15,760. The total valuation for the six months is $78,025, making a fine showing for Glendale.

HOLLYWOOD.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 14.—At a special meeting of the Board of Trade and the City Trustees last night, it was unanimously voted to accept the recommendation of the postoffice department that Hollywood be made a station of the Los Angeles office. This will insure the installation of free delivery in this city within ninety days. Under the new arrangement Postmaster Ashcroft will lose his position and an experienced superintendent will be placed in charge of the office.

Miss Luella Woitzel and Guy Johnson were married Wednesday night at the home of the Misses Kinder. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fred Miller. The bride was attired in a handsome costume of white bolting cloth embroidered in blue, over a white silk slip. About thirty friends witnessed the ceremony.

The Misses Arnie and Marion McPherron gave a handsome garden party Tuesday evening at their home on Sunset boulevard. All sorts of outdoor amusements were provided, including an inspiring bonfire. First prizes were won by Miss Hazel Harrison and Arthur Hill.

The Morning Bridge Club met Monday with Mrs. Oliver Stratton. Prizes were won by Mrs. Lois Clark and Mrs. Arthur Straus. The club will meet next with Mrs. Le Roy at Hotel Hollywood.

PERSONALS.

Miss Edith Brooke has been appointed to fill the vacancy at the Fremont school caused by the resignation of Miss Sackett.

Frank Leavelle left Wednesday for his home in Oxford, Miss.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank L. Dodge have returned from Seattle and are in their new home on Carleton Way.

Mrs. Henry Morgan and family have returned from San Diego.

MONROVIA.

MONROVIA, Sept. 14.—Monday the Press Humorists of the United States will be guests of Monrovia. Accompanied by their wives, they will arrive on a special Pacific Electric car at 11 a.m., and will be welcomed by Board of Trade reception committees. Wives of Board of Trade members and members of the Southern California Woman's Press Club will assist in receiving. The visitors will be given an auto tour through the city to the crest of the foothills overlooking the San Gabriel Valley. Luncheon will be served under the live oaks on the lawn at Hotel La Vista Grande.

Mayor McGuire and Councilman Hamilton of Ventura, have been making a careful investigation of Monrovia's method of petrolithic road building and state that they are so favorably impressed with results obtained that they will advise the adoption of Monrovia specifications by their municipality. Ventura is soon to vote on an $80,000 bonding proposition for street improvements. Under the guidance of Street Superintendent Moore they made a tour of the city thoroughfares and were shown the mistakes of the earlier work and the evolution of an oiled road that is equal in many respects to asphalt.

Work on the foundation of the Pacific Electric station began today. The structure will be in the mission style of architecture, of reinforced concrete with metal tile roof. It will have a frontage of twenty-six feet on Myrtle avenue and 121 feet on Olive avenue. On Myrtle avenue will be a handsomely-appointed arcade waiting-room 21½x16 feet, and adjoining it an inclosed waiting-room 12½x26 feet. It will be one of the largest and handsomest stations on the suburban lines of the system.

SOCIAL NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Little returned today from a three months' visit to Long Beach, Ocean Park and other beach resorts.

Mrs. Mary Morgan is arranging to build a residence on West White Oak avenue near her present home.

Miss Eva Thomas of Riverside, and Miss Short of San Gabriel, are guests at the home of their uncle, J. M. Thomas, in Clover Leaf Cañon.

Mrs. D. H. Neilson and daughters have returned from a pleasant stay at Avalon.

Misses Edna Chess and Martha Schmerier have entered one of the Los Angeles art schools for the coming year.

CLAREMONT.

CLAREMONT, Sept. 14.—Svenson's fumigating gangs have begun their season's campaign to clean up the orange groves around here. The orchardists generally are taking special efforts this season to present the cleanest orange groves in this county.

The outlook for the coming winter's supply of fuel is gloomy. There is not a sack of coal in town, and no prospect of any arriving for some time, and firewood has advanced from $10 to $12 a cord, and the supply is limited.

The foundations are being laid for a fine residence to cost $6000 on the ranch of Charles Loop. The house will be of the Mission style of architecture from plans of Architect A. S. Barnes of Los Angeles.

FIRST SCHOOL FIGHT BEGINS.

CHARGES ARE FILED AGAINST SCHOOL PRINCIPAL.

Huntington Park Excited and Citizens May Call Mass Meeting. Hearing Before Board of Trustees Lasts Until Midnight and Principal Is Defiant.

HUNTINGTON PARK, Sept. 14.—This pretty town is all wrought up over a fight between Miss Mary A. Ward, principal of the local school, and a number of citizens of the place whose children attend. Miss Ward has recently been reappointed by the school trustees.

Written charges have been preferred against Miss Ward and the hearing before the school board was held last night. The protestants claim that the trustees broke faith with them when they reappointed her and charge that County Superintendent of Schools Keppel advised them to do so.

Trustee Hund, Garlow and Lindsey were present last night, with Miss Ward. Complaints were filed by Rev. Edward H. Emett, L. T. Corey, C. F. Schertzinger, Mrs. Daniels, F. E. Cremer, Mrs. Emma Timmons, Anna C. Geck, W. T. Grider and Mrs. H. M. Hunt. Six of the complainants were present and supplemented their written statements.

In addition to calling the children "liars," "laggards," and "gossips," it is claimed the principal ruled by fear and not by love, many of the children alleging fear of her. Other children had been stigmatized as unfit to associate with, and their parents told they didn't know how to raise children.

Rev. Emett, in a letter addressed to Superintendent Keppel, complained that his son was kept in school in wet clothes in the face of his father's written appeal that he should be sent home; that the boy's mother having written messages to Miss Ward on mourning notepaper he was made to bear insulting messages back to her in an open envelope, which Mr. Emett claimed was not likely to promote a proper feeling of respect toward parents; that Miss Ward failed to appreciate the tender relationship between parent and children; and that the expressions "fools" and "idiots" created fear and positive dislike in children. Further, he claimed that Miss Ward maintained a kind of confessional, at which children were asked questions which they were told not to tell their parents.

An attempt of Prof. Garlow, secretary of the board to shelve this statement, being unsuccessful, Mr. Emett supplemented it by the statement that the nagging attitude of the principal affected the boy physically, and it was a hard job to keep him at his studies.

Miss Ward characterized the statements of the boy as "absolute falsehoods," as also the charges of all the other children. She denied calling the children "idiots" and "fools."

"Then all these children have conspired to say it!" declared Mr. Emett.

Miss Ward retorted that if the parents kept out of the deal she and the children would get on all right. As to the mourning paper incident, she "didn't want a death notice brought before her."

Further discussion between the principal and the Rev. Emett brought out the exclamation from Miss Ward, "Oh, get out!" and a protest by Mr. Emett that he hadn't come there to be insulted.

The deposition of Mrs. L. T. Corey, former janitor, introduced an air of comedy into the procedure. Mrs. Corey alleged that Miss Ward had suffered from nervous prostration and unbalanced mind, was a confirmed coffee drinker, so much so that on Miss Ward's own admission the stimulant was absolutely necessary for her to do her work. She had further declared to witness that she "could run the school secretary."

After several more complaints had been heard and met with denials by Miss Ward, Trustee Lindsey spoke of the indifference of parents in not visiting the school. He claimed that Miss Ward had brought the school from a very rough one to a state of discipline. He excused Miss Ward if her nerves were wrought up at times. At the same time, he thought she had shown lack of judgment and discretion. He pleaded for the burial of the hatchet.

Rev. Emett asked if the parents consented to again send their children would there be any change in Miss Ward's attitude to them? In justice to their children, they couldn't be expected to surrender everything. If Miss Ward could say without humiliating herself that possibly her judgment had not always been correct, the parents would meet her half way.

This appeal was unsuccessful, Miss Ward still holding that the parents were to blame, and the meeting abruptly terminated at midnight.

Feeling in town is strongly against Miss Ward, and there is talk of a mass meeting to consider the situation.

NEW PLANS READY.

Bids Invited for Work on the Soldiers' Home—Inmates Discharged. Recent Deaths.

SOLDIERS' HOME, Sept. 14.—Several months ago, invitations to bidders for construction of a combination dining hall and kitchen as an annex to the old men's barracks, were recalled in order to meet changes in plans determined on by the board of managers, when visiting this branch. The later plans have been returned "approved" from New York, and bids have been again invited.

Incidentally the site of the new structure is also changed, involving the removal of the lavatories. The original site of the dining hall was at the northeast end of the building, but for greater convenience it was decided that it should occupy the center of the barracks. The new building will be of one story and basement, 36x68, and the dining-room will have a seating capacity of 126 guests.

A contract is also to be let for construction of a steel tank wagon, twenty feet in length, for hauling from the several kitchens non-come-backs to the swine.

DISCHARGE INMATES.

By general orders No. 30, the following-named members of this branch are discharged for "absence without leave more than sixty days:" Melville L. Bateman, J. E. Corbett, Joseph Devinney, G. W. Jenks and George Marshall, and the following for failure to renew furloughs for more than sixty days: John Bayer, G. W. Bever, Wilfred Blackman, C. S. Clary, F. L. Ewing, David Lahiff, Jr., O. H. Leefeldt and Reuben P. Smith.

HOME NOTES.

The seventeenth concert of the Home orchestra, which is announced for the evening of Thursday, next, will, Prof. Geissenger says, be one of the best yet.

Mrs. J. H. Dobbings will assist the choir on Sunday morning in the absence of Mrs. M. E. Dickens, soprano, who is prostrated by the recent sudden death of her brother.

RECENT DEATHS.

Charles W. Dryer, late Co. H, Twenty-fourth New York Cavalry, a native of Ohio, admitted from Sawtelle in 1904, died September 7, aged 67.

Abraham Wolf, late Co. B, Third Missouri Mounted Infantry, Mexican War veteran, admitted from Shasta in 1905, died September 11, aged 86.

Martin Hansen, late Co. L, Fourth New York Cavalry, a native of Denmark, admitted from San Pedro in 1900, died at Sierra Madre September 4, while on furlough, aged 65.

Edward L. Rugsdale, late Co. I, Sixteenth United States Infantry, Mexican War veteran, and first lieutenant of Co. I, Sixteenth Iowa Infantry, Civil War, a native of Indiana, admitted from Sacramento in 1894, died September 13, aged 84.

Martin P. Witmer, late Co. C, Eleventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, a native of Pennsylvania, admitted from Santa Monica in 1898, died September 13, aged 78.

Samuel Sherrill, late Co. D, Forty-fifth Illinois Infantry, a native of Illinois, admitted from Idaho in 1901, died September 14, aged 71.

EMBRYO PIRACY.

Four Young Men Arrested for Taking Launch at Naples—Loses Strip of Frontage.

LONG BEACH, Sept. 14.—Marshal Young and Officer Phillips today arrested four young men of Naples, Al Delaney, Tom Somerville, Steve Hall and Will Dixon, on a charge of stealing a launch.

The complaint of grand larceny was filed by Edgar D. Carey, wharfinger at Naples, and owner of the gasoline launch Catalina. Two of the quartette are in his employ, and he says took his launch without his permission whenever they saw fit. Thursday night they took the boat for a little cruise and ran her aground on the bar at the bay entrance and instead of a pleasure trip, they spent the entire night endeavoring to float the craft. Early yesterday morning Carey missed the launch and discovered her just as the boys succeeded in floating her. In order to stop further depredations he caused the arrest of the four, who were brought before Justice Steglitz and released on cash bail of $25 each.

LOSES A STRIP.

City Attorney Skinner today received a long-distance telephone message from Attorneys Hunsaker & Britt, that the Supreme Court had denied a motion for a rehearing of the case of McConnell against the city of Wilmington, and in which Long Beach was interested by reason of her annexation lines taking in some of the disputed territory.

City Attorney Skinner, however, says the decision does not affect North Long Beach, the only point at issue being where the lines overlapped territory claimed by Wilmington on its reincorporation. The city of Long Beach is affected only in that it loses a short strip of water frontage to which it laid claim.

LONG BEACH NOTES.

Robert Hankins and William Murphy created a riot at the Bethel Mission at West Long Beach Friday night and were arrested by Officers Taylor and Auburn. Today Justice Steglitz, sitting for Justice Brayton, sent Hankins to the County Jail for twenty days and fined Murphy $15 or the alternative of fifteen days in jail.

The Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association have determined upon a vigorous effort to have the service rendered by the Home Telephone Company bettered or quit it. The secretary has presented the local managers with a resolution signed by forty retail merchants, members of the association, in which they say that unless immediate improvement is noted, something will happen, or in other words, their Home telephones will be ordered out.

Beginning Monday morning the Pacific Electric will operate its Willows local and Redondo avenue cars on a belt line, using the Huntington Beach tracks between Willows Station and Zaferia Junction. Cars will be run on a 20-minute schedule in each direction, doubling the local service and giving street car facilities to a new section of territory near Signal Hill.

Former Chautauqua County, N. Y., people, now in Southern California, will hold their annual summer outing at Long Beach on Wednesday.

Ella Wheeler, aged 9, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Wheeler, last night tipped over a lighted lamp on the table and her dress catching fire, the little one was badly burned on the arms before the blaze could be extinguished.

Caryl Neibel, of this city, a stenographer, has been appointed an assistant secretary in Senator Flint's office at Washington, succeeding F. R. McReynolds, who resigned to take a position in a Los Angeles bank.

Marso Ampaleo and John Scopa, two Italian gondoliers at Naples, were arrected today for creating a disturbance at a dance at Alamitos Bay last night. Both men were drunk and because they were not permitted to dance attempted to clean out the hall. They were fined $25 each.

Attorney W. H. Nesbitt, who defended George Crocker and James Roddick, drug clerks convicted of illegal liquor selling, has secured a postponement of sentence and notice of appeal until next Tuesday, when it is probable both fines will be paid and the matter of appeal abandoned. Roddick's fine was $250 and Crocker's will probably be the same, the violations being similar.

A deal was consummated today by which the business colleges of Long Beach, Ocean Park and San Pedro, owned by the Private Schools Company, pass into the hands of Heald's Associated Colleges of San Francisco and will be operated as one of a chain of private schools. R. S. Knudson goes to San Francisco and V. E. Neilson becomes local manager and principal of the Long Beach branch.

In a strong batting rally in the ninth inning, Company H team of the Indoor Baseball League last night defeated Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. by a score of 24 to 23.

PRAISEWORTHY GRAFTING.

Hundreds of Inches of Skin Contributed by Friends to Help Burned Woman.

POMONA, Sept. 14.—A remarkable case of skin grafting is being successfully accomplished at the Pomona Valley Hospital. The patient upon whom the operation is being performed is Mrs. E. L. Watts, who was severely burned on the limbs and chest here on July 16. Several hundred square inches of flesh were burned, and some of Mrs. Watts's friends have given of their cuticle to assist in the healing.

Messrs. B. Gimmel, Albert Roseberry, John M. Allen and Mrs. Fred Young have contributed about 325 square inches of skin, which has been removed from their backs, chests and shoulders and grafted surgically upon the patient. The skin grafting is proving entirely successful, and Mrs. Watts is nearly free from pain, and although still unable to move, her body is healing.

POMONA PARAGRAPHS.

Two sleek wildcats on display in the Russell Hardware Company's window on Second street are attracting attention. The cats were caught in a trap by W. Ashley on his ranch in the hills, south of Chino. Four large coyotes have also been recently caught on the Ashley ranch.

Miss Mabel Adams left for Santa Monica today, where she will teach in the public schools this term.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Dreher have left for a six weeks' trip to San Francisco, Berkeley and Oroville, where they will visit their children.

AZUSA.

AZUSA, Sept. 14.—T. W. Gillenwaten, senior member of the firm of Gillenwaten & Co., was thrown from his wagon on Center street this afternoon. He is not hardly hurt. His horse became frightened at an automobile and ran away, throwing Mr. Gillenwaten violently to the ground as the wagon made a sharp turn near the City Hall. The animal ran about a block and upset the wagon, which collided with a tree. The driver escaped with a cut in the ankle and a few bruises.

Work has begun on the new county bridge which is to be built across Little Dalton Wash on Azusa avenue.

Constable W. I. Hamblin arrested three boys yesterday at the Santa Fé station. They were stealing a ride on the train and threw stones at the son of the Duarte stationmaster.

SALES AT EAGLE ROCK.

Ernest and Anna Becker report the following from Eagle Rock: W. Budden sells to H. Hamilton a two-acre chicken ranch, improved with a four-room house, for $3500. J. A. Gates has sold to H. Haley and A. M. Cook, a lot 100x150 feet, $800. To A. W. Bunker, a lot 100x150 feet, on Park avenue, for $800. To F. G. Connaugh, a lot on Kenneth street, for $175. To J. E. Wight, a lot on Viola street, for $150. It will be improved. F. Bottsford sold to C. R. Stocker, a lot 85x110 feet, on the corner of Park and Central avenues, for $850. H. Crerar has sold to H. Hamilton, a lot 100x100 feet on Forest avenue, for $550. The Rock Castle Land Company has sold to G. Patton, two lots, improved with a seven-room cottage, for a consideration of $3200.

REAL ESTATE RECORD.

The Victor G. Kleinberger Company reports that the West Jefferson and Seventh Avenue tract, which lies in the southwest section bounded on the east by Seventh avenue, with Jefferson street running through the center, and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh avenues, extending north and south through the tract, has been sidewalked and curbed. All the streets are graded, and are now being oiled. There is great building activity in this section, fifty bungalows having been started within the last month. The sales in this tract have reached a large total, and many inquiries were received from homeseekers. This indicates that there is demand for moderate-priced lots ready to build on at once.

C. P. Bowers of C. P. Bowers & Co., has returned from Mexico, where he spent two weeks investigating the tropical lands tributary to Tampico, which is now the biggest port tonnage in the republic of Mexico. While absent Mr. Bowers secured 630 acres of irrigable banana land, with one and one-half miles of river frontage on the Tamesi River. He will begin work at once of setting this land to bananas, and plans to subdivide a portion of it to be sold in small tracts.

THORS COMES HERE.

Louis Thors, a noted professional photographer of San Francisco, who suffered an irreparable loss through the destruction of thousands of negatives by last year's disaster, will open a studio Wednesday in Los Angeles, at No. 512 South Broadway. Of 60,000 negatives lost by Thors, 44,000 were of prominent professional men and women of the United States and Europe.

ACID FLAMES DESTROY CAR.

Second Mysterious Fire in Santa Fe Yards Cause Much Damage.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 14.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Another Santa Fé freight car was destroyed tonight by ignition of sulphuric acid. This afternoon, by heroic effort, the company was able to rescue a number of big glass casks of acid from the car which caught fire last night. These were placed in another car and formed part of a train to be taken to Los Angeles tonight.

Shortly before the freight was scheduled to leave, the new car was found ablaze, and the company's fire department had a second battle with the poisonous fumes, with difficulty cutting the burning car from the train and snaking it to where the ruins of the first car were smoldering.

The company has about despaired of saving any of the acid. The consignment was billed from San Francisco to Los Angeles. The cause of the leakage is wrapped in mystery.

There is some opposition to the proposed union high school, but it is only in evidence on the part of a few in Ontario, and it is generally conceded that the verdict in favor of the plan will have a fair majority.

A petition, carrying the names of 242 residents of Upland, was presented to the Board of Trustees, at the last regular meeting, commending the action of that body, recently, in refusing to grant a restaurant liquor license to a local applicant. The petitioners also asked that the board continue to refuse such license in future.

HEMET.

HEMET, Sept. 14.—The grammar school opened last Tuesday with the largest enrollment in the history of the school, and over 150 pupils are in attendance.

The pear crop at Hemet this year is a large one, over 200 tons having been harvested. Half of them have been shipped green.

The W.C.T.U. gave a farewell reception to Mrs. Armbrust, the retiring president, Thursday afternoon, at the home of T. S. Brown. Mrs. Kingsbury presented Mrs. Armbrust with a book of poems in behalf of the union. Mrs. Armbrust will leave in a few days for her new home at Gardena.

Eleven tons of iron and many barrels of cement have arrived for the vault to be placed in the new rooms of the Merchants' and Farmers' Bank.

James T. Stone of Pasadena has bought the Jordan place of ten acres, southwest of Hemet, this week. Samuel Black and D. R. Kelley have also invested in Hemet property.

ELSINORE.

ELSINORE, Sept. 14.—A through car to Elsinore is to be put in use from Los Angeles to Elsinore October 1. This will be a great convenience to the many invalids and people who come here crippled with rheumatism for the hot sulphur baths. The passenger service is to be improved in other ways also, as there is a steady increase in the travel to and from Elsinore.

A large crop of prunes are being dried at the head of Lake Elsinore. Help in caring for the fruit is hard to get.

Mrs. H. L. Dunning and two daughters left today for Perris, where Mrs. Dunning will teach in the public school. Mrs. Dunning and daughters have spent the past year or two in Elsinore.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Beaumont, and Mrs. Beaumont's mother, Mrs. H. H. Henderson, are here from Los Angeles, looking after property interests. Mrs. Henderson owns a home on Heald avenue.

The central office of the Sunset Telephone Company has been moved from the store of Macy & Co. to the Crescent bath-house on Spring street.

BEANS JUMP UP.

Automobile Prices Now Demanded by Ventura Growers and Old Crop Out of Sight.

VENTURA, Sept. 14.—The lima bean men are happy at the outlook for good stiff prices for their product this year. Though the harvest has not fairly commenced, the buyers are rushing hither and thither in the field and making offers which has had a tendency to make the price climb suddenly to a dizzy figure and one which means riches for the growers. The buyers started out with offers of $4 a hundred pounds. There was an instant jump to $4.25, than to $4.35, and finally to $4.50 a hundred pounds at the machine.

Usually beans are purchased in the warehouse and recleaned by the grower. At the prevailing price, which is a good one, quite a number of growers refused to let go. Many of them insisted that they would not take less than 5 cents a pound, and from appearances it looks as though the price would yet reach 6 cents a pound. There is not a single bean of last year's crop left in the county.

This is an unusual state of affairs, for as a general thing a number of old crop beans are each year left in the county to act as a sort of buffer to good prices. Last year a number of bean raisers purchased automobiles. The coming year is looked upon as another auto year and many new machines will be purchased by the farmers the coming season, judging by the outlook.

BUYS BON DISSUE.

Santa Barbara Bank Takes All and Now There Is Money for Roads.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 14.—The $50,000 bond issue for the repairing of the Ocean boulevard was bought today by George S. Edwards, of the Commercial Bank of this city, at par with accrued interest from September 3 and a $50 bonus. The only other bidder was the Los Angeles Trust Company, who bid for the bonds at par value with accrued interest only.

The bonds are payable twice yearly in denominations of $625 each. This is the second time the bonds have been offered for sale, the first purchase having been made by Ronalds & Son of Boston. The bonds, however, were rendered invalid, according to Ronalds' counsel, by being $250 in excess of the authorized maximum and were thus repudiated.

DOESN'T SEE WHY.

Seventy-five Years Old and Thinks He Has a Right to Get Married, Son Objects.

SANTA ANA, Sept. 14.—Benjamin Holland, over 75 years of age, can't see why he should not be allowed to live on a chicken ranch and get married.

"I'd be happy, then," said he, on the witness stand yesterday to Superior Judge West, before whom Holland was petitioning that letters of guardianship over him be revoked.

"I can't see why my son objected to me getting married," said the old man. "He has been married six times, and I suppose if this wife dies he would marry again, and yet he don't want me to get married."

Holland said he had no one in sight for a wife, but he said he thought he could get the right kind of a woman. He owns considerable property in Los Angeles.

Judge West took the old man's petition under advisement, saying that while he seemed to talk rationally there was evidence to show that Holland had not proper judgment to take care of his own business.

LEGAL NOTES.

Suit to foreclose a $6500 mortgage has been brought by Kate S. Parker of No. 726 Bonnie Brae street, Los Angeles, against John S. and Claire P. Carroll, who gave notes to her and covered them by a mortgage on a forty-three-acre ranch near Anaheim.

The Summit Thread Company brought suit here today against D. W. Scott and Ely Loda, charging that the defendants had refused to pay $1655.74 on a bill of $2063.52 for thread.

SAN DIEGO.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 14.—The directors of the Chamber of Commerce have been asked to indorse the movement for securing dry dock facilities at Pearl Harbor, near Honolulu.

The Federal officers of this section are preparing an energetic campaign against all persons who maliciously or accidentally set fire to forests in the government reservations. No plea of carelessness will be accepted as an excuse.

The funeral of Mrs. Sarah W. Hodge, widow of Noah Hodge, an attorney, who died here in 1891, was held at the home, No. 505 Twenty-first street, this morning. Five children, E. O. Hodge of this city, George Hodge of Los Angeles, Mrs. C. O. Moss of Arizona and Miss Mary and Miss Clara Hodge of this city, survive.

SOCIETY AT IDYLLWILD ROMPS A LA WILD WEST.

Tilt at Rings, Snatch Chickens, Dance Reels and Ride Races—Camp Fires and Fine Dinners as Contrasts—Arrivals and Departures of Guests—Society Notes.

IDYLLWILD, Sept. 14.—Various equestrian sports have occupied the attention of guests at Idyllwild for the past week, three events having taken place. The sports of Saturday in front of the old lodge were interesting, racing, tilting for rings, and the "sacara el gallo," or lifting the chicken, contest exciting much interest. Purses were hung up in the various events.

Tuesday afternoon a Virginia reel on horseback was a novel sight, and music was furnished for the dance by a phonograph. Those participating in the picturesque horse-dance were Mrs. Bland, Mrs. Sheppherd, Miss Gertrude King, Miss Katharine Graves, Miss Fannie Sheppherd, Jim Sheppherd, F. T. Griffith, Harrold English Archie Macleish, Mr. and Mrs. Sheppherd leading the grand march. In the races Miss Graves, riding "Chiquita," won over Mrs. Sheppherd, riding "Johnny;" while Selwyn, riding "Tommy," with handicap of ten feet, won from Harrold English, riding "Brownie."

Friday most of the guests rode over to the meadows, where tilting for rings and other equestrian sports were enjoyed. Miss Senna Bland of Pasadena, riding remarkably well, won for the ladies, while Jim Sheppherd won for the men.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Graves, Selwyn Graves and Archie Macleish left Wednesday morning in the Graves machine for their Alhambra home, Miss Graves and Miss King going down in the stage with Mrs. Graves's brother, Frederick T. Griffith, and Mrs. Griffith of Los Angeles. The Graves party spent two days at their Alhambra home, leaving Saturday for their Terminal Island cottage, where they are giving a house party.

Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Griffith and daughter, Margaret, with Mrs. Griffith's mother, Mrs. Hahn, who have occupied one of the cottages here for the past five weeks, left Wednesday for their Los Angeles home.

Miss Harriet Roth, who has been spending a week with her sister at Banning, returned Tuesday to Idyllwild for the remainder of the season. Miss Kate Roth will remain till later this week, when she, too, will return. She will be accompanied by Miss Rockwell and Miss Jessamine Rockwell of Pasadena, who will spend some time here.

The last night of their stay Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Graves of Alhambra gave a farewell dinner in the private dining-room, the table being prettily decorated with mountain wild flowers and ferns. Covers were laid for twelve, those dining beside the host and hostess being Miss Gertrude King, Miss Katharine Graves, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick K. Griffith, Mrs. Hahn, Miss Margaret Griffith, Mrs. Gaylord, Harrold English, Selwyn Graves and Archie Macleish. After enjoying a dance, the party adjourned to the Sign of the Four Pines, where a camp fire, whose jollity lasted into the wee small hours of the morning, was enjoyed. A camp supper, with hot biscuit and other good things, was served late in the evening.

Thursday evening Mrs. Flora Goodall Bland and the Misses Bland of Pasadena entertained a merry party of friends with a taffy pull at their camp under the trees. Sag seats covered with steamer rugs and blankets and hung with Japanese lanterns, a carpet of ferns and a glowing fire in the al fresco fireplace, made of the place an ideal spot for entertaining. Corn was popped as an accompaniment to the molasses candy, and the evening was one of great pleasure. Those enjoying Mrs. Bland's hospitality were Mrs. W. M. Friesner, James Friesner, Mrs. Gaylord, Mrs. Sharp, Jack Sharp, Mrs. Case, Miss Josephine Case, Miss Olga Atherton, Miss Grace Tower, Harrold English, Paul Radir, Mrs. Charles Green.

Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Llewellyn of the Llewellyn Iron Works arrived this week for a stay among the pines.

Dr. and Mrs. Henry B. Stehman, prominent West Side people of Pasadena, arrived on Thursday's stage for a short sojourn here, having just come up from several weeks' stay at picturesque La Jolla.

Other arrivals at the week end were A. J. Martz, R. W. Bennett, Los Angeles; H. L. Lanning, Pomeroy, Wash.; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Bowers, Santa Ana; George Whitburn, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Woodburn, Colton.

MYSTERY IN WEDDING.

Couple from Pasadena Rout Out County Clerk and Minister at San Bernardino.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 14.—McCubban Luigan and Ida Williams, both of Pasadena, were married here tonight in the parlors of the Stewart Hotel by Rev. M. B. Shaw of the First Baptist Church. Under the auspices of a youthful newspaper reporter of Pasadena, the couple were guided to this city, every step in the nuptial proceedings being most carefully hedged about with mystery, the trio, for some unknown reason, not wishing news of the marriage to become public.

They reached here shortly before 8 o'clock on the Santa Fé, going at once to the County Clerk's office, evidently by pre-arrangement. While the bride-elect waited in the hotel parlor the prospective groom and the reporter went in search of a minister. Both clergyman and County Clerk were sworn to strictest secrecy.

Following the marriage the trio with Ernest Martin, a local newspaper man, partook of a simple spread at the coffee club. It is understood the groom is employed on the Pasadena Star.

ORGANIZE TO FIGHT.

Settlers Join Association to Keep Claim Jumpers Out of Imperial—Clash Feared.

IMPERIAL, Sept. 14.—More than 500 settlers in this valley in the last twenty-four hours joined the Settlers' Protective Association, organized yesterday to meet raids on lands by jumpers and contesters. It is reported that a carload of jumpers is being organized in Los Angeles to raid lands in the valley and to hold by force against original claimants.

A number of claims have already been jumped, including several well-cultivated farms and it is the intention of settlers to drive off the jumpers by force, meet invaders on arrival and order them to leave.

During the last three weeks the situation has been drifting towards a critical stage, through the operations of an organized band, which sends men here, charging them for alleged information on which land can be contested or jumped.

Indications point to a serious clash between jumpers and organized settlers.

SUDDEN SUMMONS.

Death Comes Quickly on Street to T. J. DeLamere of Santa Fe Car Service.

T. J. DeLamere, chief of the car tracing service of the Santa Fé railroad, died suddenly at Ninth and Flower streets last night about 9 o'clock. While walking alone, he was attacked by illness, believed to have been heart failure. He was carried into a grocery store but before the ambulance from the Receiving Hospital arrived he had expired.

For years DeLamere had been in the railroad service. He worked up from the bottom of the ladder. Among his intimate associates it was well known that it was his desire to die "in the harness."

For eighteen years DeLamere was in the railroad service. The most of his life in business was spent with the Union Pacific. About five years ago he came to Los Angeles and took a position with the Santa Fé.

One of the pathetic incidents of the death is that his wife is visiting friends in the East. All efforts to find relatives at his home at No. 1076 West Sixth street were without avail. The body is at Bresee Bros.' morgue. An inquest will be held tomorrow.

AMONG THE ARCHITECTS.

Many Residences Planned by Local Designers for Home Builders. San Diego and Pasadena.

Following details of new work in the hands of the local architects and designers are taken from the columns of the Builder and Contractor.

Garrett & Bixby have drawn plans for a two-story frame residence to contain eight rooms and reception hall to be erected on Kensington Road for Tony Milovich. The same architects are also drawing plans for a nine-room frame residence to be constructed on Helen street for Mrs. Garibaldi. It will have modern conveniences. They have also in preparation drawings for a two-story ten-room frame residence to be built on Dorchester street, for C. M. Hough. The same firm also is drawing plans for a two-story frame building to contain four five-room flats, to be built on Grand View avenue near Tenth street for Jos. F. Kazinsky. This building will be modern in every way, and will cost about $7000. They also have plans for a six-room bungalow, to be built at Covina for F. A. Fitzgerald. It will have a living room, 18x30 feet, and music room 18x12 feet. Cobblestones will be used for mantels and front porch tiers.

S. Tilden Norton has drawn plans for a two-story ten-room frame residence to be erected on Arapahoe street between Ninth and Tenth streets for Mrs. Marguerite Jonas.

The plans submitted by Train & Williams to the Board of Supervisors of Kern county, for a Hall of Records to be built at Bakersfield, have been accepted. It will be of reinforced concrete construction and it is estimated to cost $40,000.

Julius W. Krause has drawn plans for a two-story brick building to be erected at the southeast corner of Main and Macy streets for Mrs. Mary Hammel.

Lester S. Moore has made plans of a two-story store building, 40x68 feet, to be built at No. 4317 South Park avenue for J. R. Stead. It will be constructed of cement blocks. The second story will contain two five-room flats.

A. C. Smith is drawing the plans for a two-story brick warehouse building, 60x140 feet, to be constructed at No. 1131 South Los Angeles street, for Neal Colgan.

Plans have been completed for a large laundry building to be erected on I street, between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, San Diego. It will be one story, 100x140 feet, and faced with pressed brick. A full equipment of the latest models of laundry machinery will be installed. Nelson Snyder of the Excelsior Laundry Company, is in charge of the enterprise.

You Will Save Time! You Will Save Money!

$5 You Will Save Suffering! $5

By Beginning Your Treatment for Catarrhal Diseases at Once

RIGHT NOW is the time to be cured. When summer's balmy air—and Nature's kindly aid are here to HELP YOU—it is your duty to take advantage of the favorable season and be CURED. ONE month's treatment NOW is worth THREE months during the winter, and to emphasize this fact, and enable every Catarrhal victim to be cured, Drs. Shores are making the very low rate of $5 a month, all medicines included, for all Catarrhal Chronic diseases of every name and nature. If you have Catarrh, Asthma, Hay Fever, if you are Deaf, if you have Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver, Lungs, Kidneys, Bladder, or any combination of Catarrhal Diseases, $5 a month pays the bill until cured if you begin treatment NOW.

Consult Reliable Doctors Only

If you would avoid shame and disappointment, if you would save your time and money, don't go to a fake Medium, a fake Clairvoyant, or self-confessed fake medical institutes or companies of any description. Look up a doctor's standing and ability before paying out your money for treatment or medicine. CONSULT RELIABLE DOCTORS ONLY. If a good doctor cannot cure you, no faker can, and if a doctor is honest he will not take you money unless he KNOWS HE CAN BENEFIT YOU. BUT THE FAKER WILL ROB YOU ANYWAY.

You can always consult Drs. Shores free of charge for any disease at any time, and your case will positively not be taken unless there is every possible reason to believe a cure can be made or great benefits obtained. It costs you nothing to consult Drs. Shores; it costs you only $5 a month if your case is CURABLE, for any Catarrhal Chronic disease or combination of such diseases.

CATARRH OF THE HEAD AND THROAT.

This form of catarrh is most common—resulting from neglected colds—quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is your nose stopped up?"
"Does your nose discharge?"
"Is your nose sore and tender?"
"Is there pain in front of head?"
"Do you have to clear the throat?"
"Is your throat dry in the morning?"
"Do you sleep with your mouth open?"

You can be easily cured now—don't let it run into complications.

THE BRONCHIAL TUBES.

When catarrh of the head or throat is neglected or wrongfully treated it extends down the windpipe into the bronchial tubes, and after awhile attacks the lungs. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Have you a cough?"
"Do you take cold easily?"
"Have you pain in the side?"
"Do you raise frothy materials?"
"Do you spit up little cheesy lumps?"
"Do you feel you are growing weaker?"

Don't risk neglecting these warnings—stop the disease before it reaches the lungs.

OF THE EARS.

Catarrh extends from the throat along the eustachian tubes into the ears, causing partial or complete deafness. Quickly cured with little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is your hearing failing?"
"Do your ears discharge?"
"Is the wax drying in your ears?"
"Do you hear better some days than others?"
"Is your hearing worse when you have a cold?"

Don't neglect this until your hearing is irreparably destroyed

OF THE STOMACH.

Catarrh of the stomach is usually caused by swallowing poisonous mucous, which drops down from the head and throat at night. Quickly cured at little cost by Drs. Shores' famous treatment.

"Is there nausea?"
"Do you belch up gas?"
"Are you constipated?"
"Is your tongue coated?"
"Do you bloat up after eating?"
"Is there constant bad taste in the mouth?"

Now is the time to be permanently cured. Drs. Shores' are curing hundreds every year.

TALKS ON TEETH

BY THE REX DENTAL CO.

ENJOYS HIS Alveolar Teeth

It is a great source of satisfaction to us to be able to publish a testimonial from a man who admits that his teeth were in a desperate condition and that through the Alveolar Method we had restored all that he had lost, so that now he could eat anything and enjoy using his teeth, whereas before he was in misery most of the time.

A testimonial of that kind means a great deal to some other man who may chance to read it. It makes him want to know more about such a remarkable method of restoring teeth and sooner or later that man will come to one of our offices.

It is a very difficult matter to explain the Alveolar Method of restoring missing teeth without the use of plates or ordinary bridge work at long range or in the brief space of a newspaper advertisement. If people would only come to our offices and talk to our examining dentist they would soon be convinced that we could do all that we claim we can do. We are going to ask you to read the letter of Mr. Alexander J. Mitchell, vice-president of the State Bank at San Pedro. He is delighted with them, and he wants us to publish his testimonial broadcast so that others who suffered and are suffering as he did may hear the glad tidings and follow his example.

Terminal, Cal., Aug. 28, 1907.

The REX DENTAL CO.
Los Angeles, Cal.

Gentlemen:—It gives me much pleasure in writing you that the work you have done for me is perfectly satisfactory, and is all that you claimed for your Alveolar process. I consider it the best thing possible next to the original teeth. I shall take pleasure in so stating to any one you may refer to me.

Yours truly,
A. J. MITCHELL.

Where it is possible we try to have people come to our offices and have a special examination made of their mouth. If this is not possible the next best thing is to send for our book entitled "Alveolar Dentistry," which goes into full and complete particulars of this marvelous method of restoring missing teeth without plates or bridge work. We send this book free of charge, and the reading of it brings us patients from all over the country, which shows that it must tell its story in a forceful manner. We invite you, if your teeth are going or nearly all gone, to come and see us and have an examination made of your mouth, free of charge, or send for the book, which is also free.

A perfect set of teeth is the best investment you can possibly make.

Yesterday's Forecast and Report.

U. S. WEATHER BUREAU, Los Angeles, Sept. 14, 1907.—[Reported by A. B. Wollaber Local Forecaster.] At 5 o'clock a.m. the barometer registered 29.88; at 5 p.m., 29.88. Thermometer for corresponding hours showed 62 deg and 67 deg. Relative humidity, 5 a.m., 81 per cent.; 5 p.m., 71 per cent. Wind, 5 a.m., southeast, velocity, 3 miles; 5 p.m., west, 11 miles. Maximum temperature, 76 deg.; minimum temperature, 58 deg. Barometer reduced to sea level.

Weather Conditions.—There has been little change in the barometric conditions on the south Pacific slope since Friday, while in the Northwest the pressure has decreased considerably. This distribution of pressure has caused unsettled weather with more than the usual amount of cloudiness in Southern California during the last 24 hours, but no precipitation of consequence has occurred west of the Rockies. Only a few reports were received this morning from the East, but these seem to indicate generally fair weather at most places east of the Rockies. Light frost is reported in North Dakota and Southern Idaho. While the pressure continues low in the Southwest, the weather in Los Angeles and vicinity will continue more or less cloudy and unsettled.

Forecasts.—Local forecast for Los Angeles and vicinity: Unsettled, cloudy to partly cloudy weather tonight and Sunday. South to west winds.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 14.—The area of low pressure over Northern Washington and British Columbia this morning has moved slower eastward, causing cloudy weather over Washington with rain on the coast. The weather was fair in other portions of the Pacific slope. The temperature has risen over the eastern portions of Washington and Oregon and over Idaho, and fallen slightly in California, conditions are favorable for fair weather Sunday in California with fog along the coast in the morning and afternoon. Forecast:

San Francisco and vicinity: Fair Sunday with fog in the morning and afternoon; fresh west winds.

Santa Clara Valley: Fair Sunday; light northwest wind.

Sacramento Valley: Fair Sunday; light south wind.

San Joaquin Valley: Fair Sunday; light north winds.

Los Angeles and vicinity: Fair Sunday; light west wind.

UPS AND DOWNS.

JOHNNY LEADS IN TRADING ON 'CHANGE.

THE mining call was the feature of the session on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange yesterday. Johnnie Consolidated was the leader in the trading, and showed a slight return to life and greater strength. A total of 16,000 shares of the stock was handled at 13⅛@13½, cash, while 3000 shares additional were traded in at 13¾@14 on buyer thirty contracts. The close quoted the stock at 13½@13⅝.

The sale of 100 shares of Furnace Creek Copper at 35 also was a feature in that it presents an interesting study in the instability of mining stock values. Scarcely more than twelve months ago this so-called mining security was selling at $6.50, and was in great demand at those prices. Brokers find it difficult to give it away now. The stock closed at 50, with no bid for it. Clark Copper, a kindred issue, and one which has passed through almost the same stage of inflation, although in a shorter space of time, was handled to the extent of 2000 shares at 5 cents a share. This sold as high as 96 last fall.

Consolidated Mines came in for a fair amount of trade. Fifteen thousand shares of the stock were sold in at 3@3⅛. The stock was quoted at 3@3½ at the close. One thousand shares of California Hills sold at 1¼. The close was at 1 cent bid, with none in the market.

On the early call the only trade of consequence was the sale of two $1000 bonds of the Pacific Light and Power Company, one at $940 and the other at $950. The close was at 90@96. More offerings of local bonds were made yesterday than have been made for several months. Almost the entire list shows on the quotation sheet, with asked prices posted. Few bids were made.

Associated Oil was the only trader among the oil stocks. Ten shares, only, were sold at 29, seller thirty days. The close was at 28.50@29. Mexican Petroleum was bid for at 1.28 and offered at 1.35. Union closed at 182@188. Western Union was wanted at 355 and held firmly at 390.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The week's trading was very satisfactory, sales showing an increase over any week during the previous month. The added demand was due to the return of many from the beaches, and other resorts. Staples were in adequate supply, and all lines were in fair request, barring the general run of vegetables.

The features of the week were the stiff prices asked for eggs on the call, and the remarkable and unexpected drop in creamery butter. Eggs demanded outside figures, with small offerings and close bids. During the fore part of the week butter held firm to full prices, with bids within one cent. A surprise was struck on Thursday, when creamery was offered at a decline of 5 cents. Potatoes asked high all week for liberal offerings, apples following at top figures. The sessions were unusually animated, and sales were in excess of weeks past.

Eggs—Day's receipts, 139 cases. The market continued firm all week, closing with a one-cent advance on fresh local ranch. Other grades are firm as quoted.

Butter—Day's receipts, 13,396 pounds. The decline on creamery is thought to be temporary, and an early return to a higher level is anticipated. Closing quotations were firm.

Cheese—Day's receipts, 4076 pounds. Steady request characterized the market, especially for Coast brands. Supply ran about even with demand, prices ruling strong, with outlook for better.

Potatoes and vegetables—Day's receipts of potatoes, 3843 sacks. Highlands closed the week at a decline to $1.85 and $2.10, and local Burbanks to $1.75 and $1.90. Fancy Salinas maintained figures, and in some instances went above outside quotations. The market was very firm on extra prime grades, with a tendency toward weaker on under sizes. Sweets were in good demand, and firm at a shade lower.

Onions—Day's receipts 491 sacks. Yellow Danvers were wanted, but in light supply and dear. Other varieties were scarce, and figures very firm. Fancy tomatoes were plentiful, and had heavy sales, prices ruling easy at 25 and 25 cents per box. Choice and soft goods went as low as 15 cents. There was a fair call for fancy celery at 65 and 75 cents per doz. Other vegetables were abundant, but without interest.

Fruits—Inquiry was excellent, the week closing with the market, practically cleaned up. There were no quotable variations in prices. Black and raspberries were scarce and good sellers at listed figures. Pears had a good run at unchanged prices. The scarcity of apples held figures very firm, bellefleurs especially commanding full value. There was excellent inquiry for an ample supply of all varieties of grapes, with prices easy as quoted.

Poultry—The call for both dressed and live was normal. The fowl was in excellent condition, and prices closed firm.

Hay and Grain—Hay is at a standstill, with heavy spot stock and receipts and a dull market. The State yield will average 25 per cent. over last season's, owing to an increased acreage previously planted in grain. Consequently grain rules very firm, and the new crop will be light and high priced.

The receipts of produce as reported for yesterday were as follows: Eggs, 139 cases; butter, 13,396 lbs.; cheese, 4076 lbs.; potatoes, 3843 sacks; onions, 491 sacks; beans, none; sweet potatoes, none.

NEW YORK MARKET.

SHARES AND MONEY.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—The disordered conditions in the metal markets were the dominating influences again in the stock market and defeated any tendency toward improvement prompted by other considerations. The distinction was marked again between the railroad list and the metal industrials, the former being moderately affected by the depression in the latter and showing some disposition to rally at the last. The feature of the day's market was the heavy liquidation in the United States Steel stocks, both classes falling to new low levels for the year, the common stocks selling at 27½ and the preferred stock at 90¼. Evidently the speculative assumption was that the conditions that have overcome the copper trade might develop in the iron and steel trade. No news was forthcoming to indicate any fresh changes in the iron and steel trade. An effect was felt from the publication of a report from Pittsburgh that the producers of iron had determined to meet any falling off in demand with a curtailment of productions. Reports that the United Metals Company, the selling agency for the Amalgamated Copper Company, had cut its price of electrolytic copper to 16½ was an effective instrument in the hands of the bear party. The principal product of Amalgamated Copper is not lake, but electrolytic copper. The copper stocks were not so acutely depressed as yesterday, neither Amalgamated Copper nor American Smelting selling at yesterday's low figures. Sentiment continued very despondent, however. The bank statement did not reflect the expected gain in cash, but the changes in the averages of fifteen items were small in spite of general transactions concluded during the week. Payment was made today of the $6,000,000 Standard Oil dividend distribution. The undertone of the market remained weak in spite of some feverish rallies in the closing dealings. Bonds were irregular; total sales, par value, $1,186,000. United States 2's, registered, advanced ⅛, and the coupons ½ per cent. on call during the week.

Boston Copper Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

BOSTON, Sept. 14.—The improvement in the local market, recorded in yesterday's late trading, was continued with opening of the local market this morning. There was an absence of the pressure to sell which had characterized the market for practically every day this week. Orders were well distributed, though the volume was comparatively small. Sentiment on copper shares was improved on the announcement that a further decline in the price of copper to 16½c had encouraged purchases by consumers. At the first half hour the tone become weaker and prices declined moderately in sympathy with the heaviness of Amalgamated in New York. The close follows:

GENERAL EASTERN MARKETS.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 14.—Wheat today recovered much of yesterday's loss on buying brought about by the low temperatures prevailing over the wheat fields in Western Canada. The Weather Bureau forecasted frost tonight for that section of the country and this tended to stimulate the buying of wheat here. Reports from New York, which claimed that an active export business was being transacted at seaboard, were additional strengthening influences.

The sharp break in corn caused considerable profit taking at times, but prices held firm the greater part of the day. The market closed firm. December opened ⅛ to ⅜c higher at 98¼ to 98⅜, sold off to 97⅝c, and then advanced to 98⅝. The close was at 98⅝c. The corn market was extremely weak during the entire session because of liberal realizing sales was based on the favorable weather. The close was weak. December opened unchanged to half cent lower at 58 to 58¼c, sold off to 56⅝c and closed at 57⅛c. Trade in oats was quiet. The market closed easy. December opened unchanged at 52¼c, sold between 51⅝c and 52⅛@52¼, and closed at 52. Provisions were dull and weak, the bearish feeling being due to the break in corn prices. At the close January pork was off 20 cents 15.25; lard was down 10@12½c at 8.62½@8.65; ribs were 10c down at 8.00.

New York Cotton Market.

[BY PRIVATE WIRE TO FRED DORR.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Cotton reached new low levels today with January selling at 11.67 before the middle of the forenoon, which is a decline of more than 100 points from the high level reached ten days ago. The slump has been accentuated by the tendency to feel for the bottom on the ground that the market was oversold. Cotton bought for rallies has been for sale on every break. Liverpool declined sharply under the weight of hedge selling. Sales against actual cotton are not as heavy as usual, but market is so narrow that it cannot resist pressure. The trade seems to have become resigned to the fact that the crop will be about 1,000,000 bales smaller than last year.

THE WEATHER.

The weather forecast calls for occasional showers over the eastern and central belts. Fair over eastern belt.

Visible supply statement favored the bears. Visible showed its first increase for the season, a little over 12,000 bales.

Our market was due three to five points lower, although part of the selling in Liverpool may have been for straddle account. On the face of the cable, however, October was due at 11.59 and January 11.68.

Spinners takings, according to the New York Cotton Exchange, were 126,792 of American cotton, against 153,886 last year. According to the Chronicle the visible supply of American cotton is 1,298,000, against 916,000 last year. Market letters this morning counsel conservatism on account of the large short interest, which, it is claimed, exists.

Following is range of prices today—

HINDUS IN DISTRESS.

tee that the Asiatic quarter will not be invaded by a mob.

The Japanese Consul declared that his countrymen are not arming themselves to resist an attack, and he insisted that the Japanese would do nothing to incite trouble and relied wholly on the police force to protect them.

Efforts of the exclusion league to compel the Chief of Police to disarm the Japanese and Chinese will not have any effect upon officials. They will pay no more attention to storage of arms in foreigners' homes than they will in American homes, but they will arrest any persons, native or foreign, who is found carrying a gun.

BRUTES OF THE BLUDGEON.

AGITATORS HERE BACK OF RIOTS.

A. F. OF L. BLAMED FOR VANCOUVER TROUBLES.

Former Editor of Leading Newspaper There Gives History of Labor Troubles and Justifies London Press for Placing Responsibility on American Union Leaders.

In view of the anti-Asiatic disturbances in Vancouver, Mr. Harold Sands, who for eleven years was a resident of that city, and managing editor of the Vancouver World, but who is now living in Los Angeles, has prepared an interesting history of conditions there especially for The Times. Mr. Sands's article follows:

British Columbia people now in Los Angeles, who are well acquainted with all the events in connection with the anti-Asiatic question, which have led up to the serious troubles at Vancouver, say that the London Times and Sir Hibbert Tupper have justification for the belief which they have expressed that the riots were brought about by American labor agitators of the sort whose intrigues brought San Francisco under the domination of Ruef and Schmitz.

There are more labor agitators in British Columbia than in any other Canadian province, and the census returns show that more Socialists and anarchists live in that province than in the rest of the Dominion put together.

Owing to the fact that one-third of the male adult population of the province is composed of Indians, Japanese, Chinese and others of that class, who are not allowed to vote at provincial and Dominion elections, organized white labor, politically, is more than usually powerful. This does not cut much figure in regard to Dominion elections, as British Columbia only sends six members to the Federal Parliament at Ottawa; but it counts for a great deal in provincial elections, with the inevitable result that the politicians truckle to the labor vote.

CONTROLLED BY AMERICANS.

Organized labor in British Columbia is directed largely from the American side of the line. Hundreds of miners in British Columbia allow themselves to be ruled by the Western Federation of Miners, which has its headquarters on soil foreign to them.

In the same way the Canadians employed in the printing trade obey the behests of American leaders and agitators. The same thing is true in regard to a large number of other trades, with the result that American agitators have a great deal to say concerning British Columbia affairs, and the United States is placed in the ignominious position of being accused—and not without cause—of helping to swell the anti-Asiatic riots at Vancouver.

It can be further stated that, comparatively insignificant as were the indignities to which the Japanese were recently subjected in San Francisco, they had their effect in Vancouver, and it may be added that the action of the mob at Bellingham two weeks ago, in driving Hindus out of the city, directly encouraged the rioters in Vancouver. Indeed, it is probable that had not the mob in Bellingham shown the way, there would have been no such disturbances in Vancouver as have just disgraced that city.

METHODS ONCE PEACEFUL.

In order to uphold these views, it is only necessary to point to the fact that although the people of British Columbia have been conducting an anti-Oriental agitation for thirty years, they have hitherto sought only peaceful means to achieve their object. Not until the San Francisco and Bellingham mobs showed them the bludgeon route did they seek to travel it.

In 1881, the labor party in British Columbia was as firmly opposed to the immigration of orientals as it is today; but it did not resort to the use of thug weapons to keep out coolie labor from across the Pacific.

In the year mentioned the Canadian Pacific Railway found great difficulty in securing enough labor to rush the building of the transcontinental railway it was then constructing. It sought and obtained permission from the Federal government at Ottawa to bring in several thousand Chinese.

British Columbia fought against the move, and thus inaugurated the anti-Asiatic struggle, which had been carried on diplomatically until American labor leaders, of the "undesirable-citizen" type," induced the Canadians to try mob law, and so threatened the peaceful relations which exist between the allies—Great Britain and Japan.

The Canadian government allowed the Canadian Pacific Railway to bring in several thousand Chinese, because, it said, there was no white labor with which to build the line, and it was desirable that the company should be put in a position which would enable it to carry out its important public work.

IMMIGRATION LAWS.

The British Columbia Legislature immediately passed an act to restrict the introduction of Chinese, but the Federal government, exercising the power of veto that it has over all provincial acts that conflict with Federal aims, at once disallowed the measure.

Since then, British Columbia has, from time to time, passed more laws, not only against Chinese, but against all classes of Asiatics; and these acts have all been refused the sanction of the paramount authority at Ottawa.

Of late years, this performance has been an annual feature of Canadian history. When the British Columbia Legislature took to including Japanese with Chinese as "persons who should be kept out of the province," the Mikado's government was quick to enter energetic protests.

Among the archives at Downing street, as well as at Ottawa, are letters from Japanese Ambassadors and Consuls requesting that the sanction of the Dominion government be withheld from these acts.

Baron Hayashi, Ambassador from Japan to the British court, regularly wrote to the British Foreign Minister whenever British Columbia passed one of these acts, and notified the Minister each time that the Mikado's government had taken decided objection to these laws.

By the usual red tape procedure, the Ottawa government was as regularly informed, through the British Colonial Secretary's office, and not through that of the Foreign Minister, of Japan's feelings on the subject.

LEGISLATION VETOED.

The Canadian government would immediately disallow the acts on the ground that they were inimical to the imperial policy, and, in notifying the British Columbia government of this action, invariably "begged to enclose" copies of the sometimes voluminous correspondence from Marquises, Barons, Colonial and Foreign Secretaries, Ministers of Justice and various other high personages, who had taken a hand to restrain the youthful members of the empire on the Pacific Coast from unduly mixing up with the affairs of nations.

On one occasion, when the Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was at the head of the Colonial Office, a letter of protest come before him from Baron Hayashi, regarding British Columbia's curious game of annually passing bad laws. With his customary directness, the great statesman from Birmingham indicated that he had a sympathetic feeling for the people of the Pacific Coast on this question. Mr. Chamberlain wrote:

"The exclusion of Japanese subjects, either from the province, or from employment on public or quasi-public works in the province, by the operation of an educational test, such as is embodied in the Natal Immigration Act, is not a measure to which the government of Japan can take exception. If the particular test in that law is not regarded as sufficient, there is no reason why a more stringent and effective one of a similar character should not be adopted, so long as the disqualification is not based specifically on distinction of race or color.

"Any attempt to restrict immigration, or to impose disqualifications on such distinctions, besides being offensive to friendly powers, is contrary to the general principles of equality which have been the guiding principles of British rule throughout the empire."

Mr. Chamberlain proceeded to advise British Columbia to get the Natal act adopted in the Dominion; and, if that was impossible, he said the British government felt compelled, "however reluctant it might be to cause inconvenience to British Columbia," to press upon the Ottawa government the importance, in the general interests of the empire, of canceling the British Columbia laws.

The Legislature of the Pacific Coast province took Mr. Chamberlain at his word and passed an act similar to the Natal act. But it was indicated speedily that, as on several notable occasions in the past, Mr. Chamberlain had allowed his heart to run away with his head.

Since he wrote his memorable letter, Great Britain and Japan had entered into their notable alliance, and the new act was so swiftly disallowed that it almost took the breath away from the British Columbia politicians.

GOES TO DEPORT ALL WHO HAVE NO MEANS.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

OTTAWA, Sept. 14.—W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration, left today for Vancouver to look into the question of oriental immigration.

He will decry the matter on the spot but will deport any that are, or are likely to be, public charges. This step has been taken in accordance with Premier Laurier's telegram to the Mayor of Vancouver.

New, modern machinery being built for us by Fairbanks, Morse & Co., and will be installed very soon;

Haggott-Gerand Co. of Prescott, Arizona, are the mine managers and engineers of Jerome Verde, and are the most reliable mining engineers of Arizona;

Price of stock is now 50 cents a share;

Stock in the adjoining mine (United Verde) is not for sale, stockholders having refused $400 a share.

Ex-Senator W. A. Clark tried to buy the Jerome Verde mine, and offered more than twice as much for it as he paid for the great United Verde. Four years ago he refused $60,000,000 for his interest in the United Verde. He has recently said that he would not take $90,000,000 for his stock;

$100 invested in the United Verde 10 years ago, now worth $72,000;

An opportunity just as good is offered you today;

BUY JEROME VERDE AT 50 CENTS A SHARE. It will be worth many times more than this in a year. It will grow into a fortune in a few years. Send for Prospectus.

LOSES HIS VACATION.

Naval Cadet Who Was Recommended for Dismissal Will Be Permitted to Remain.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—P.M.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—James E. Austin, of the first class in the Naval Academy, who was recommended for dismissal by Superintendent Badger for leaving his practice ship after shore leave had been refused, will be allowed to remain at the academy, but he must forfeit his vacation and will be given a number of demerits.

The cases of all four of the cadets recommended for dismissal by Capt. Badger for various reasons have now been disposed of, two of them being permitted to resign, and others remaining under punitive conditions.

NEWS AND BUSINESS.

BREVITIES.

Spier, the ladies' hatter and importer, announces himself as in readiness for the fall and winter season of 1907. Our hats our matchless by reason of their elegance, and more especially for their extreme exclusiveness. This is equally so of tailored hats and hats of our own design. Our bonnets are direct importations from Mangin Maurice, recognized in Paris as the leading house for high-grade bonnets. The A. M. Crofts hats, for which we are sole agents in Southern California, are decidedly the handsomest Crofts ever designed, and our selection the largest we ever had. A feature of our establishment this season will be the Spier round hat, which is designed exclusively by us. They are so built that no bandeau is required; they absolutely fit the head. The material is of the finest silk braid especially imported for this hat, and makes it extremely light and stylish. It is sold at the uniform price of $12. We make the positive assertion that nowhere west of New York City can you see hats with the style, quality and exclusiveness that ours have. Spier, the ladies' hatter and importer, corner Third and Hill streets. We have no branch or any connection with any other house in Los Angeles.

Hardwood Floors — The John A. Smith Floor Company begs to announce to its patrons and friends that it has moved its office and warerooms to more commodious quarters at 619 S. Olive st., where, with premises three times larger than before, it is better able to transact its growing business. The firm's policy during the last 14 years, of supplying the best the market affords, regarding material and workmanship, will be observed as strictly in the future as in the past. When your carpets wear out, let us quote you prices on our hardwood flooring; it will last you a lifetime. Remember, also, that we clean and wax old floors carefully at reasonable rates. We thank you for your liberal support in the past, and hope to merit your continued patronage. Tel. Home F6629. Sunset, Main 2668.

City Steam Carpet Cleaning Works have moved their office and work room from 507 S. Flower to their large and commodious factory, 2152 Sacramento street, where they are better able to carry on their increasing carpet and upholstering business. If you would like to see a clean, sanitary carpet cleaning establishment, we would be very pleased to show ours. We have the largest and most complete establishment on the Coast. We make over, renovate and carefully glue-size fine carpets and rugs. We thoroughly renovate all kinds of mattresses and do A-1 upholstering. Phones M. 427 and F6229. John Bloeser.

Mrs. N. E. Smith, 315 W. 3rd st., who, with her head designer, has been in New York for the past month, has returned, accompanied by Mme. Petort of Paris, who will be with her the coming season. While in New York Mrs. Smith completed arrangements for weekly shipments of the latest importations, as they appear in the market. She has also added a new department and will make a specialty of smart street hats to sell from $10 to $15. No formal opening days. The ladies are cordially invited to inspect the beautiful millinery now on display.

Wrinkles and facial blemishes painlessly removed. Hollow cheeks, thin wasted necks, arms and hands rounded and plumped out to perfection by permanent and immediate process. Saddle-back and deformed noses, scars, indents, receding chins, double chins, sagged faces corrected without pain or detention. Noses modeled to fit nose glasses. All work guaranteed. New York Institute of Dermatology. Prof. and Madame Steele, expert skin specialists and feature perfectors, 829 S. Hope street. Home Phone F6191.

Hardwood Floor—Blot out all thoughts of dissatisfaction and in future have us do your work, and we will do it right. Our men are expert mechanics, reliable and trustworthy, and all contracts are under the personal supervision of a member of the firm. We cut down plain parquet and ornamental wood floors, renovate and repolish old floors. Weighter brushes, wax and cleanser for sale. Coöperative Hardwood Floor Company, Inc., 215 Mercantile Place. Phones, Home F4297; Main 5193.

ADVERTISING MAN DEAD.

Hulburt Succumbs to Injuries Received in Street Car Accident a Year Ago.

Lewis C. Hulburt, former head of the Hulburt Advertising Agency, died yesterday morning at 3:20 o'clock at the Mona Sanatorium at Sichel street and Downey avenue. About a year ago Mr. Hulburt was injured in a street car accident, and he never fully recovered from his wounds.

About two weeks ago the sufferer first began to show signs of serious insanity, and his friends had him removed to the sanatorium in the hope that rest and proper treatment might benefit him. The hope was vain, however, and he steadily grew worse until yesterday morning the end came.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the chapel of Peck & Chase. Elks and Masons will take part in the last rites, Mr. Hulburt having been a member of both orders. Interment will be made at Evergreen Cemetery.

Mr. Hulburt was for years one of the best-known advertising men in Los Angeles and had a large circle of acquaintances among business men of the city. He leaves a widow.

BOLL WEEVILS MIGRATE.

Scientists Watch to See If Mississippi River Will Act as Barrier to Cotton Pest.

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS—A.M.]

NEW ORLEANS, Sept. 14.—The cotton boll weevil, which is about to begin its annual migration eastward, has today reached a point in Louisiana twenty-six miles from the Mississippi River, according to a telegram from the State Crop Commission to Gov. Blanchard.

In the destructive migration of this pest eastward for several years past, across all Texas and Louisiana, the Mississippi River has been the most interesting milestone to the cotton interests and to scientists. Scientists declare the great river will prove no barrier and will not stop the advance of the costly pest into the eastern cotton belt.

Today's news is regarded as making it probably that the attempt at crossing by the weevils will be made this season. The weevils as reported to the Governor were found at Leland postoffice in Catahoula parish.

SYSTEMATIC ROBBERY PRACTICED ALL OVER CITY. BY THE ICE MAN.

Mayor Gets Evidence of Criminal Short-Weight Deliveries, Prosecution Expected—Companies Blame Union Drivers—Facts from the Scales.

ACTING under directions from the Mayor, the Sealer of Weights and Measures has been following the ice man. He has collected evidence showing that the ice companies' employes are charging customers for at least 20 per cent. more ice than they are delivering.

In a week's work the Sealer of Weights and Measures failed to find a single instance where the ice delivered came even close to the weight chalked up by the ice man. The evidence collected will probably form the basis for complaints to be issued this week against the ice companies and the drivers. To deliver short weight is a penal offence.

Officials of the ice companies assert that the short weight is the result of systematic thefts by men on the wagons; the ice is weighed out to them at the plant and an allowance for as much as 10 per cent. shrinkage made for the returns.

During the last three months all the drivers and helpers have joined the Ice Men's Union. They use the cloak of the union to cover up their thefts.

Boasting immunity from customer and company alike by reason of membership in their union, many of the Los Angeles ice cart drivers are boldly robbing householders through short weight of at least 25 per cent. of the amount of ice for which they collect good money, and at trust prices.

The companies charge at the rate of 50 cents a hundred pounds where ice is delivered in quantities less than eighty pounds. This is the trust price; the old price was 40 cents a hundred. The short-weight methods practiced by the cutters boosts the present price to about 70 cents a hundred.

Officials of the ice companies admit that many of their men deliver short weight; but they complain that they are unable to break up the practice. Walter G. Eisenmayer of the Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company said yesterday that his company has found some of its men making as much as $5 a day "on the side" this summer through delivering short-weight ice. He says these were discharged, but that it is extremely difficult to secure sufficient evidence to justify the dismissal of a driver.

Mayor Harper does not find it so difficult. Weary with protesting to the companies, a number of consumers have complained to the Mayor that it is impossible for them to secure the ice for which they pay.

FINDS THEM ALL SHORT.

Last Tuesday the Mayor sent Sam Grant, sealer of weights and measures, to check up on some of the ice delivery men. Taking with him an assistant, Grant spent a few hours in the morning chasing the festive ice man. His official signed report to the Mayor is as follows:

We visited four houses today and weighed ice delivered by the National Ice Company, the Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company and the Union Ice Company. The results were as follows:

At No. 924 East Tenth street we found that thirty-four pounds had been left instead of forty pounds. Delivery was made by the National Ice Company.

At No. 1379 East Seventeenth street we found that thirteen and three-quarters had been left for twenty pounds. Delivered by the Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company.

At No. 1421 East Seventeenth street we found that twelve pounds had been left and twenty pounds charged for. Delivered by Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company.

At No. 531 South San Pedro street we found that fifteen pounds had been left and twenty pounds charged for. Delivered by Union Ice Company.

This investigation showed that the ice men carry no scales on their wagons. They start with a 300-pound chunk and slice it down in varying sizes, according to the order of customers. By long practice they become more or less adept, and an old hand can tell within two or three pounds the weight of any section of the chunk. By this same long practice the ice pick never drives too deep; and such a thing as a customer getting over-weight is unknown. The slips are all on the side of the ice-man.

COMPLAINTS LIKELY.

Another report from the sealer of weights and measures is:

"We visited houses this morning where the Merchants' Ice Company, the Union Ice Company and the National Ice Company had delivered ice. In each case we followed immediately in the back of the delivery wagons. The results were as follows:

"Union ice wagon No. 40 delivered ice at No. 1322 Alvarado street. Charge was made for 50 pounds; we found that 44 pounds had been left. At another house, 45 pounds was left.

"Merchants' company wagon No. 16 delivered ice at No. 1042 Alvarado street. On the card 75 pounds was charged up, but on weighing the chunk we found but 61 1-4 pounds in it.

"At the Hartman Flats, Washington and Oak streets, we found that 60 pounds had been charged for, but only 52 pounds delivered. This house was served by the National Ice Company.

"At no place have we found as much ice delivered as charged for."

The Mayor has referred these reports to the City Attorney. They will probably form the basis for complaints against the companies and drivers. To deliver short weight is made a penal offense by city and State laws.

"PUT OUT OF BUSINESS."

The Sealer of Weights and Measures expected to continue his investigations into the methods of the ice men; but Wednesday morning as he was started he met with a peculiar accident that left him with a mashed nose and a perforated upper lip. Grant says it was a meat hook that fell as he was testing some scales. But a bunch of ice men boasted in a First-street saloon Friday that they discovered that Grant was on their trail, and they managed "to put him out of business."

Since Wednesday Grant has remained at home nursing a severely disfigured face. Thursday morning a member of the Ice Men's Union called at his home and upbraided him for "interfering with an ice man trying to make an honest dollar." He told Grant that the ice men will see to it that he doesn't interfere with their affairs.

COMPANIES NOT BLAMELESS.

While the companies try to place all the blame on the drivers, attorneys say that this will not relieve them from responsibility before the law. Los Angeles enjoys industrial freedom to such an extent that it will not be easy to convince a jury that the companies are forced to let the union run their business.

HOUSEHOLDER CHEATED.

During the last three weeks a West Side householder has weighed his ice daily. He pays monthly for 100 pounds of ice a day. The chunk which the ice man brought dwindled and faded away day by day, protests to the wagon driver availed nothing; attempts to melt the ice man resulted only in thawing the ice.

During the three weeks the highest weight received was less than eighty pounds; at times the scales registered less than sixty pounds; but with each delivery the ice man charged for a full 100 pounds.

Here are the scale weights for the ice delivered, and purported in each instance to be 100 pounds: 76, 82, 57, 68 and 73. The man is a customer of the Los Angeles Ice and Cold Storage Company.

LAYS FAULT TO DRIVERS.

Speaking for the Ice and Cold Storage Company, the largest of the local ice companies, Walter G. Eisenmayer said:

"If the ice delivered from our wagons is short weight, it is because the driver steals the ice, sells it to cash customers and pockets the profits.

"Each man receives his ice from this company by weight. Our wagon records will show a shrinkage deduction of never less than 4 per cent., sometimes as great as 10 per cent. It is to the interest of the company to see that the customers receive full weight. If they weigh their ice and find it short they quit and go to another company.

"We receive a great many complaints of short deliveries and we investigate where we can. It is hard to get good ice men, men who can cut ice properly, and we cannot always discharge a man as soon as complaint is made, because we have no experienced driver to take his place.

"We have investigated some aggravated cases, and found that drivers were making as high as $5 a day on the side. This is bad for our business, and it profits us nothing."

It appears to do cheated customers no good to quit one company and go to another, since all companies treat them alike.

"AND FOUND."

Drivers receive from $65 to $80 a month on the wagons, and helpers

Palmdale's Unique Plan to Fill Its School.

Opening for Teachers With Growing Families.

Biggest Ready-made Brood Gets the Prize.

A large opening yawns in Antelope Valley for school teachers who can fill their own classes.

Teachers with big families of little ones, not necessarily their own, will be booked on sight and no questions asked. Preference will be given to those with the biggest families.

Further particulars in this interesting contest may be obtained from J. A. Biddison, clerk of the board of school trustees, at Palmdale.

Antelope Valley always is at the forefront in school matters. It was there not very long ago that a country school building was sent on a hike across the desert in pursuit of a large family of children that had moved from one part of the district to another. The schoolhouse was set down near the home of the rancher and his little ones. When they moved again, the schoolhouse was loaded onto a wagon and sent after them.

County Superintendent Mark Keppel said a few days ago that one of the greatest difficulties was to find teachers who would remain in charge of the schools. They have to board in the families of the prosperous ranchers. There usually are young bachelor ranchers who have passed school age. Pretty soon the school bell stops ringing and the wedding bells peal out.

BIDDISON'S HAPPY IDEA.

It has remained for Clerk Biddison of the Palmdale board to solve the difficulty. He not only would keep the teacher, but he has evolved a scheme for keeping pupils and teacher together.

The plan is simple: Have the teacher bring his or her own children. A fine opening is offered for young men and young women who take girls and boys to tutor.

Ever since the Palmdale school closed early in the summer Clerk Biddison has been working out his new plan. Applicants for the school are requested to state if they are married; if so, whether they have any children of school age. The replies are filed, and the applicant who can make the best numerical showing as to children probably will get the job.

W. T. Thompson of the town of Hynes is among the teachers who have got into communication with Clerk Biddison. Mr. Thompson is a country pedagogue, and once he was editor of a country newspaper. He "fell down" on the entrance requirements of the Palmdale school, but he did it gracefully, and there yet may be hope for him.

This is the letter Mr. Thompson received in reply to his application for the Palmdale school:

PALMDALE (Cal.) Sept. 1, 1907.—Mr. W. T. Thompson, Hynes, Cal. Dear Sir.—Your letter of application received today. Will you kindly inform us as to whether you are a married man, and, if so, whether you have any children of school age. As our school is quite small, we would like a teacher who would bring some children along. Please inform us at once.

Yours respectfully,
[Signed] J. A. BIDDISON.

HIS MISFORTUNE.

Upon receipt of this communication, Mr. Thompson cudgeled his brain for a short period, and then took his pen in hand, with the following result:

LOS ANGELES COUNTY POOR FARM, Sept. 4, 1907.—J. A. Biddison, school clerk, Palmdale, Cal.—My Dear Sir.—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of September 1, and in reply will say: I am sorry to disappoint you, but I am not married at present, but I think that is more a misfortune than a fault. This may seem humiliating, but it is

"GRANDMUDDER'S" NOSE'S WART.

Two Newsboys Fight About It Until the Mayor Interferes and Makes Them Shake Hands.

Mayor Harper acted as referee and later as peacemaker in a bout of fisticuffs that had not been scheduled, yesterday morning, when he pounced upon two street gamins and ordered them to stop fighting and be friends.

The Mayor was taking a stroll on Spring street. He was possibly wondering how the Burns-Gans fight would come out when right before his eyes, like moving pictures, two newsboys began to engage in the exploitation of the Queensberry rules.

How the argument started did not interest the Mayor. He put his hands in his pockets and watched. Here was as real a fight as ever he had witnessed in the ring and he watched the quick jabs and swings with interest until a crowd began to collect.

Then one of the boys began to get the best of the other and the Mayor interfered. He caught each of the combatants and read the riot act.

"Gee," remarked one of the boys in alarm, "it's de Mayor."

"Now get together and be friends," said Mayor Harper, as he handed the boys enough cash to indulge in the purchase of soda water. "What were you kids fighting about anyhow?" he asked.

"Aw dis mut says dat me granmudder's got a wart on her nose," remarked one of the juveniles as arm in arm they walked down the street.

Mayor Harper, with a smile, started for the City Hall to argue about the warts on the appropriation bill's nose.

FORTUNE FOR ROCK.

Million Tons Wanted by Highway Commission in Building Roads.

A fortune awaits the man who discovers on his land the kind of road-making material desired by the Los Angeles County Highway Commission. Something like a million tons of this material will be required.

Chief Engineer Loder is anxious to find all possible supplies of the best road-building rock in Los Angeles or adjoining counties. A hard, durable rock is desired, and at the same time a rock which has good cementing properties. To withstand the wear of a macadam road, a basic rock such as basalt or diabase has proved most successful. Some grades of granite are used with good results, but as a rule a basic rock, commonly known as "trap rock," is superior.

Some kinds of silicified rocks containing a percentage of calcium make a good road material, the experts say, if they are hard enough to withstand a wear of traffic. They usually have excellent cementing properties.

While most of Los Angeles county has been prospected heretofore for building stone and concrete material, few quarries have been developed for the purpose of producing road material.

The Lowest Price Steinway Pianos

Steinway Vertegrand $525

Steinway Miniature Grand $800

The lowest price Steinway Pianos are the Vertegrand at $525 and the Miniature Grand at $800.

These prices are absolutely net—except a 2 per cent. cash discount—and even this does not apply when a second-hand piano is taken in exchange.

So general is the practice of cutting prices on pianos that you will be surprised that we quote you a price and stand by it, regardless of argument. We absolutely refuse to consider any price other than that first quoted.

If you are not prepared to pay these prices for the Steinway Piano, there is no need to waste your time or ours.

Our prices are exactly the same as those charged by Steinway & Sons in New York City—to these prices we add $25 on uprights and $50 on grands—the actual cost of freight and handling. You can verify our prices by reference to any of the standard magazines—where you will find Steinway advertisements containing prices and illustrations as above.

If you want a Steinway piano you must make up your mind to pay the price—a proposition from which there is no appeal.

REALITY.

CLOAK OF MODESTY HIDES HIS DRAMA.

Medical Ethics Muzzle Dr. Shurtleff, Who Led Charmed Life on the Border, But Part of His Wonder Story Leaks Out.

WELL, no wonder the cowboy play of the Vaquero Club at Venice seemed so real and vivid.

It was an actual tragedy of the Wild West that was reënacted on Admission Day. Probably not one of the crowd realized that they were seeing a true incident from the life of Bill Christian, the notorious bandit. Certainly no one dreamed that one of the cow punchers who rode yelling down the Venice Midway was carrying in his carcass a bullet from the gun of the real Bill Christian.

Dr. Fred C. Shurtleff, whose magnificent horsemanship attracted universal attention, carries two fearful wounds as a memento of his days of real bandit chasing.

The story ought to be the more interesting in view of the fact that its publication is positively forbidden by the hero of it. Medical ethics, it seems, forbid a doctor to tell anything even remotely interesting about himself.

The physician who carries a bandit's bullet in his neck. Dr. Fred C. Shurtleff of the Vaquero Club was a participant in the real fight after which the cowboy play at Venice, on Admission Day, was modeled.

Wherefore Dr. Shurtleff declines to indulge in reminiscences.

Fortunately, some of his friends are not on speaking terms with medical ethics and can tell whatever they want to.

One day, years ago, a young surgeon from Boston dropped off a train in the middle of Hades; and the name of the place was Oklahoma. He came to see some old college friends and before he found his friends he saw a couple of frontier murders and perhaps a lynching or so.

And before young Boston took the train out again, he had been shot into, shot around, taught to ride anything that could run on four legs; learned to look down the muzzle of an unfriendly revolver.

Unhappily, the story of his experiences there, in those dreadful border days, has to be had second-hand. What cracking stories he could tell himself—the deuce take medical ethics.

One of the first days that the young surgeon out of Boston spent on the border, his friend took him out on a long buckboard trip.

On the way, they came to a gate through a barbed wire fence. On the other side of the gate was a tough-looking old rancher in a wagon, with a Winchester rifle on the seat.

Anxious to be of service in a new country, young Boston suddenly called out, "Hold up." He meant that he would be the one to get out and open the gate.

To his bewilderment, the old rancher's two arms went up to their full length in the air.

"You've got the drop," growled the old fellow.

"I—I—I don't understand;" stammered the young Boston man.

"KEEP HIM COVERED."

"Look out," yelled his companion suddenly from the wagon. "He's reaching for his rifle; keep him covered."

With the instinct of a life in peril, the young doctor poked out the muzzle of the shotgun and pointed it at the old man's head. Higher shot the arms in the air.

Young Dr. Shurtleff tried to explain how it was; explained that he didn't want to hold anybody up; just wanted to open the gate.

But every time he paused in the story, the old fellow's hand began to sneak down in the direction of the rifle. If he ever got his hand down it meant a simple epitaph over a Boston doctor.

There was but one thing for it; the young Boston medico got down from the wagon, keeping the shotgun pointed all the while at the old rancher's head. Walking slowly toward him, he took the old fellow's rifle from his wagon and replaced it with his own shotgun.

Then keeping him covered with the rifle, he and his friend turned and rapidly drove out of sight. When they got back to Oklahoma City, Dr. Shurtleff sent the rifle back by a messenger with a note, explaining that "hold up" does not mean the same in the differing dialects of Boston and Oklahoma.

So much for the early education of the young surgeon from Boston.

THE CHRISTIAN GANG.

This is the story of the buckshot Dr. Shurtleff's friends claim lurks somesomewhere in his carcass.

His border days were also the days of the notorious bandit gang headed by the Christian boys. The gang included Bill and Bob Christian, Zip Wyatt and the famous woman bandit, Jessie Finley, a coarse masculine specimen of femininity who wore a short dirty skirt and rode astride any wild devil of a horse that was at hand. She would shoot a Winchester with any man in the gang.

The Christians were among the boldest outlaws who ever operated in this country. They had a habit of sending word that they intended coming to some certain town on a certain day to rob the bank and they wanted the money got ready for them; then they would come just as they said—on the day and the hour—and rob the bank.

At the particular time in question, they happened to be in jail. Jessie Finley bribed the jailer; slipped two guns to them in their cells and there was a sensational jail-break. They fought their way to liberty, slaughtering, and killing as they went.

The first man they met outside of jail was the town marshal—Milt Jones.

"What are you doing out here, Christian?" demanded the surprised official. Being a man of few words the outlaw shot him dead.

In a few minutes—before the frontier town could realize what was happening—the gang shot and fought their way to horses. Each seized a horse, leaped into the saddle and tore through the streets and was gone.

POSSE IN PURSUIT.

A posse was formed immediately. Soon a body of stout-hearted frontiersmen were on the trail of vengeance. One of the pursuers was the young Boston surgeon, who "guessed he would kind of like to go along."

The Christian gang had two days start, but the posse rode at a heart-breaking pace, in spite of their pack train.

When they had been ten days on the trail, they crossed the Deep Fork River one night just at dusk. The water was very high, and the ford a poor one. It was decided not to risk taking the pack train across.

It was decided to leave part of the posse to guard the pack animals while the rest went over the ford to make a camp. Just as they got across, one of the sharp-eyed old frontiersmen of the party noticed a thin curl of smoke through the underbrush some distance beyond.

One of the men immediately volunteered to make a scout. He soon came back reporting that it was only a party of hunters camping out, and nothing further was thought about the smoke.

It turned out afterward that the man who had gone forward to investigate was a spy—one of the Christian gang himself. He had found the whole gang in camp where the smoke curled; had warned them and helped them plan the events that followed.

THE ATTACK.

Meanwhile the posse was peacefully making camp. A fire had been lighted and coffee had been made. The young Boston doctor was standing beside his horse with his tin cup of coffee in his hand, when the whole universe seemed to crash and collapse; the roar of a dozen guns came from the near-by brush and Dr. Shurtleff fell with a full load of buckshot squarely in the back of his neck.

A terrible blow on his leg brought him back to consciousness. He had been hit again in the leg. The latter wound was the more dangerous, being a rifle ball fired at closer range than the buckshot.

The bullet entered his leg and split into four pieces, coming out in four different parts of the lower leg.

He bound it up as well as he could with his handkerchief and lay uncomplaining, for the other men were fighting for their lives. His horse went down with a groan and a crash; horses were falling on every side. He could see his comrades assembling and making a hollow square to fight back to back. The fight was gradually drifting away from him, leaving him wounded and alone.

As it grew darker, there came a lull in the firing and some of the frontiersmen came back to find him. With their jack-knives, they performed a rude operation there, in the dim light, picking the shot out of his bleeding neck.

Presently the brush roared forth again, and spits of fire—bearing death—began spurting out from the dark thickets.

For four hours, the fight went intermittently on. The frontiersmen dragged their dead and wounded horses together and fought with them as a bulwark, firing at the spits of flame in the dark. In the middle of the night their ammunition gave out, and one by one they were made prisoners.

The fight had drifted down the river from where the Boston doctor lay wounded, but one of the bandits happened to come across him, lying there, half conscious.

Taking his gun away, the outlaw remarked, not unkindly, that he hoped he would get well.

Lying wounded and bleeding, part of the time feverish and delirious, the young surgeon stuck it out through the night. Once he saw a flickering fire light, and at last he heard the neigh of a horse.

Hope leaped up in his heart, and he thought this might be a portent of good for him. He thought he might find the horse and get away.

QUICK WIT TO RESCUE.

Dragging himself in agony of wounds, he painfully crawled along the rough ground and through the underbrush for 400 yards. He found the horse, but it was only one of the outlaws' mounts, a number of horses being tethered to a rope; it was at the edge of the bandits' camp. They were by their fires with their prisoners. Some of them were hurt, and they were dressing their wounds.

He realized that there would be no earthly chance of his mounting and getting away in his weakened condition, because some one would simply mount another horse and give chase.

But his good New England grit did not leave him. At the peril of his own life, he resolved to put the outlaw camp out of business.

With a sharp surgeon's knife, he crawled up to the nearest horse and cut its ham strings with one swift slash across the hock. The animal sank with a grunt, a helpless heap of flesh.

Shurtleff crept from horse to horse through the herd, destroying every one. Every move he made was at the cost of excruciating pain. As he slashed the last horse, the earth reeled before his eyes.

He woke up in an Oklahoma hospital. He afterward learned that another posse came up during the night, and the bandits rushed for their horses, only to find them all lying about on the ground, unable to rise.

The result was that the Christian gang was captured again.

PLUCK WINS HIM PLACE.

When the Boston surgeon first began going on scouts, he had to go along to cook—they didn't need tenderfeet—but his pluck won him a place in the border counsels.

Another posse pursued another bandit gang; these were desperate cattle thieves.

In a tearing ride, part of the gang was overtaken, and two were taken prisoners; the rest scudded into the brush like quail. The two bandits were hastily tied to a tree and the young doctor was left to guard them while the rest of the posse tore on across country.

The Boston surgeon was sitting on the ground with his rifle across his knees, sociably surveying his squirming, cursing captives when a sharp command, "Throw up your hands," made his hair rise.

About one hundred yards across an open stretch of ground he saw a rough-looking man with a rifle leveled straight at his head.

In that day few men would have cared to trifle with a command "Hands up."

TAKES A CHANCE.

But the young New England doctor preferred taking a chance at death rather than face his frontier friends without his prisoners.

Instead of obeying, he swung around his rifle.

"Whang" went a bullet past his head. He fired with his gun half raised, and pointed at random. Then he ducked flat on the ground. The grass was tall, and the underbrush very thick. In a second he had disappeared.

He and the other man were flat on their stomachs, wriggling around, bent on slaughtering each other. The bandit was trying to make a detour that would bring him to the tree where his pals were tied.

Suddenly he heard a Yankee voice at his ear, "Hold up your hands."

The cow thief knew better than to turn and look for some one to shoot at. He hadn't any New England reputation to lose or any disgrace to accumulate. His two fists shot skyward as fast as he could get them there.

When the posse came back, they found the young Boston surgeon cheerfully smoking his pipe, with his rifle across his knees, but there were three bandits lashed to the tree with the riata where there had been two.

The spotfin croaker is beyond doubt the favorite of all alongshore game fish so far as the average angler is concerned. Everything about him is of a sporting character. He is larger than the corbina which is his closest rival, but vastly inferior for table purposes.

Pound for pound, there is little to choose between the fish, as regards gameness, but an angler who follows both fish persistently will land ten seven-pound croakers in a season to one corbina of that size. The croaker generally is fished for from a boat also, and is taken under conditions that permit the use of bass casting tackle in his pursuit, thus giving the angler every opportunity to get all the sport out of the fish that is possible.

VORACIOUS CROAKERS.

Frequently the croakers run into the bays in great and voracious schools. Whosoever happens on the field at that time is in for a red-letter day. As high as twenty in a day has been recorded, and such occasions are never to be forgotten affairs for all who ever had the luck to participate in them.

Of late the custom of angling for croakers with the lightest possible tackle is growing steadily until many now pursue the fish with single gut leaders successfully. E. C. Conger used a light trout rod on them, last Monday, and had splendid sport with several big fellows which he hooked, taking as high as ten minutes to land a big one, and having a pretty fight all of the time. In all he caught nine croakers of the spotfin and China varieties, the largest being a seven-pounder. He fished from a boat opposite the San Pedro city landing.

Robert Campbell and Louis Streuber fished together last Monday with rather good results, although the catch was somewhat unusual. Campbell landed two good-sized spotfins and seven bass, then connected with something of size and power, but different action from a croaker. He was fishing near the rocks at the mouth of the bay while Streuber was on the other side casting off the breakwater that fringes the harbor entrance. After quite a tussle, Campbell brought up a very large sheepshead. The fish weighed not far from ten pounds.

At the same time Streuber was seen in the throes of combat with something of formidable proportions, and after a prolonged wrestle, he dragged out on the beach a sand bass of exceptional size, which he declares to have been the finest eating in the form of fish he has yet tasted. The fish would weigh not far from the poundage of Campbell's sheepshead. Sand bass are the same fish that are caught by wharf anglers near the piles, and occasionally one comes to hand that has attained truly enormous proportions. An eight-pounder was landed at Brighton Beach, several years ago, by Howard Kelsey, and another but a shade smaller a week later by Ernest Beuchel.

Mrs. Harry Slotterbeck and Mrs. Vincent tried their hands at San Pedro, Monday, with signal success. Mrs. Slotterbeck landed nine out of fifteen hooked, and Mrs. Vincent landed four out of seven, all of good size. The largest would have weighed about six pounds. This stimulated Slotterbeck to renew his efforts, and Wednesday he tried the bay again, but the fish were off watch, and out of three strikes he succeeded in landing two small spotfins, the best being about five pounds in weight.

YELLOWFINS TAKEN.

Some good-sized yellowfins are being taken in the bay, and occasionally a run of kingfish manifest itself. If these pests come in in force there will be an end to the croaker fishing. The kingfish beat the big fellows to the bait. Croakers bite very deliberately as a rule, and kingfish take anything they can see with a grab and a rush which exhausts all the fight there is in them.

John Beckwith caught a 7¾-pound croaker at San Pedro, Wednesday, as well as several smaller fish.

Surf fishing everywhere is poor. At some of the beaches the ocean is very foul with the small red seaweed known as "sea wrack." It messes the bait and gathers in knots on the leaders until no fish can be taken in it, and by getting into the gills of the fish makes life miserable for them also. Few can be taken at times when the breakers are laden with the stuff, and the angler packs up his traps and goes elsewhere as a rule when he sees the red weed in the water.

At Huntington Beach last Sunday fishing was at a standstill on account of the weedy condition of the sea. Nowhere have good catches of corbina or yellowfins been reported alongshore. A few "nippers" are biting near Clifton. Capt. Foyn Seeberg has had a little sport at Ocean Park lately, landing a five-pound yellowfin croaker from the beach, September 5, and a few small corbina at each trip since. Sea trout of one to two pounds weight are fairly plentiful, however, and afford some sport.

At Redondo the usual grist of small fish is being ground. Monday the boats brought in barracuda, which are running occasionally in a desultory manner outside. The sport is hardly to be depended upon, however.

Homer Kennedy tackled the yellowtail off one of Redondo's wharves, Tuesday, and hooked a big one which proceeded to tear up his gear. He was using a high-grade hand-made greenheart rod, but the yellowtail was disposed to break all the furniture possible, and made a mess of the reel, snapped the stout rod like a toothpick, and went off with several rods of line. Two or three yellowtail have been caught at Redondo every day. They are not running very freely, however.

P. B. Swartzel and wife and L. Hemphill and wife of Orange drove over from Santa Ana to Laguna Beach on Admission Day, in Hemphill's automobile. Sheepshead, goldfish, and smaller fry were the catch. Generally bass can be caught from the rocks at high tide, but they were not on hand Monday.

Today's tides will give the bay fishermen two periods of slack water which is generally conceded to be about the best time for croaker fishing. In the morning the water is low at 10:45; in the afternoon at 3:05 o'clock it is high, and rises five feet. This indicates a stiff tidal current in the bays, and anglers would do well to be prepared to make the most of the slack water intervals, which will not be long.

[The Times freely publishes the views of correspondents without holding itself responsible for writers' opinions. Be brief, write plainly, state clearly. License Fees.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 13.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In the proposed license schedule by the City Attorney, printed in your issue of yesterday, real estate agents are put down at $5 a quarter. A flat rate in this case would be as unjust, as for instance, a flat rate in income tax would be.

The amount of business done and the size of transactions may differ all the way from $1 to $100. The small dealer may average only $50 a month, when the largest ones may clear $5000 in the same space of time. Consequently the latter ought to pay $100 to every dollar of the former.

Neither would taxation purify the business to any extent, as the dishonest agent, who prospers on misrepresentation and sharp practice, doesn't mind a few dollars, unless a clause be inserted for revocation of license if fraud be proved.

NO PARTICULAR VIRTUE IN HIGH TAXATION.

The Times fails to see that great credit accrues to any city officials from efforts to make citizens pay as high taxes as can be squeezed out of their pockets, and to see how many kinds and extremes of license fees they can pile upon those doing business of various kinds within the municipal limits.

One of the developments of the craze against property and the rabid hatred of those engaged in business on a large scale, which have swept over the country in certain strata, is the notion that the most efficient and valuable public officer is he who devises ways and means to wring out the most taxes and to impose the greatest number of burdens upon the owners and managers of enterprises. Every day we hear a loud cheer from fanatics, who style themselves the only Simon-pure reformers, over some achievement in the way of increased taxation or a novel suggestion for a hitherto unheard-of license fee. It is an actual fact that to a large number of minds, in the present state of public feeling, a reputation for high taxes seems to be a great desideratum for a city—a thing to be encouraged and egged on and made the subject of boasts.

Now, if the money brought in from these taxes were economically and sagaciously spent for permanent improvements for the general good, it would be desirable to collect even larger sums than we raise now through the Assessor's office. But it is notorious that the larger the funds placed in official keeping, the greater the waste—and generally the larger the deficit at the end of the year. For instance, Los Angeles collected a larger sum from taxes last year than ever before, yet the city never was in such tight financial straits as she temporarily is today.

It is also to be observed that parallel with the increased tax receipts inevitably go an increase in the number of office-holders and pap-suckers and an almost constant swelling of their salaries (now being interrupted, by the way.)

One would almost be justified in the assumption that in the ordinary official mind the main object of collecting more and more taxes is to provide more and more jobs, more and more chances for the spoils-hungry and bigger and bigger pay for less and less work.

The waste of money in municipal government is terrific. No private corporation could stand it; any private business would be wrecked by it. Los Angeles has been practically free from grafting on a large scale and from shocking official scandals; but the little leaks from foolish expenditures and stupid methods amount to well-nigh one-quarter of the whole sum raised by taxation. And yet certain blind leaders of the blind hurrah for the high tax that is necessary to fill up the holes.

There has recently been observable a throwing away of money in the treatment of West Sixth street, which has had an oil bath. We do not know who is responsible for it, but the most careless and thoroughly discredited method has been adopted. Light oil has been sprinkled on the surface of the road, and then, instead of being thoroughly worked in, it has been hastily covered with a little sand. There is a scientific and efficacious way of oiling roads with excellent permanent results (such as has been adopted on Alvarado street,) and anybody connected with the street department should have known better than to authorize or consent to this wasteful, ineffective, dauby and often-condemned mode of treatment seen on Sixth street. A lot of money has been spent; it is property-owners' money that has been spent; and the benefit is not much greater than would come from sprinkling the street a few times with water.

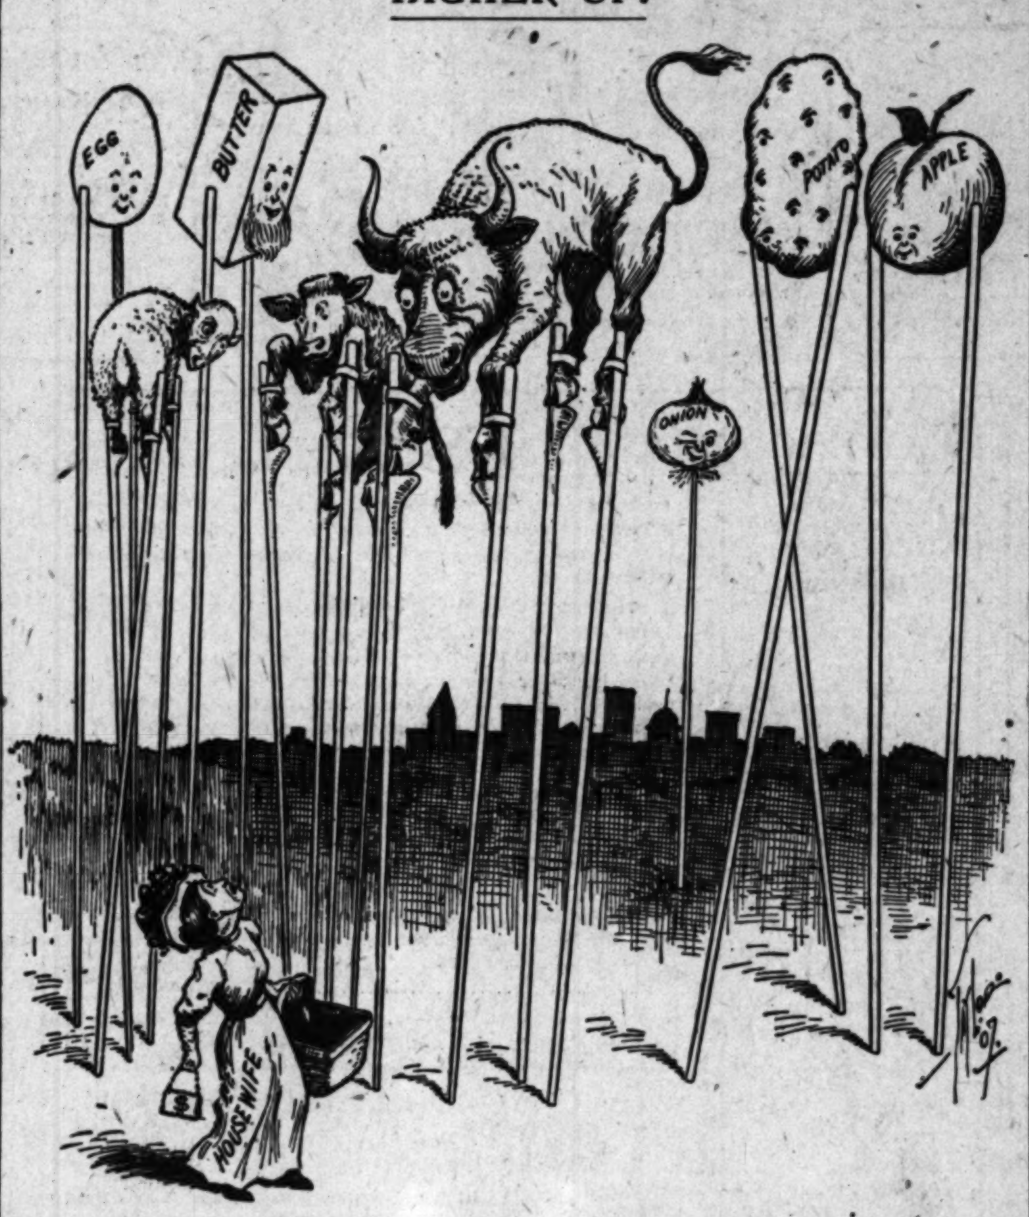
This job is a sample. It is a pointer. It is one of very numerous instances showing that what this city needs is not a painful squirming to twist more money out of taxpayers, but a serious study how to make the taxpayers' money go farther. There would be no lack of funds in the treasury if the city's officials would try, for a few years in succession, the experiment of administering city affairs with the same homely regard for economy and for getting the worth of the dollar for every dollar spent, which most of them use in running their own households and business concerns.

The Times would suggest that when the city contemplates building a monument to the most deserving city official, it select not the man who has been most ingenious in inventing new ways to squeeze out more tax money, but him whose ambition and successful effort have been to expend the tax money most economically, judiciously and efficaciously, and who has got most good out of each denarius—that is to say, every red cent.

The Times is aware that this is old-fashioned talk; it is almost reactionary; but the next popular craze may adopt it as one of its own.

The Chicago free-love school of which Emma Goldman is a leader has wisely decided to refrain from moving to Los Angeles. This town would stand for that thing just about as long as it would stand for an open sewer.

"HIGHER UP."



THE ESPERANTO CONGRESS.

It is quite a triumph for Esperanto that the third international gathering should have been held in so classic a haunt as old Cambridge, and under the auspices of the ancient university. Several of the leading professors there, like Sir William Ramsey, have given the movement their complete indorsement, and Dr. William Cunningham, a churchman who has made his mark as a thinker and writer in economic and social subjects, acted on this occasion as secretary. A British army officer, Lieut.-Col. Pollen, who is president of the British Esperanto association, presided at the meetings; and everything conduced to lend dignity to the occasion, and produce a favorable impression upon the public. Last year the gathering was at Geneva; two years ago, the first of these events took place at Boulogne. Neither of these cities has the prestige of Cambridge, and Dr. Zamenhof is to be congratulated on the step upward in public esteem.

While Oxford University has unique traditions of dignity and authority as a university center, yet Cambridge is no despicable rival. Eighty years ago, when the Cambridge apostles were at the height of their fame, and included such lights as Alfred Tennyson, Arthur Hallam, Richard Monckton, Milnes and Richard Chenevix Trench, among their number, they chose to spell Oxford with a small "o," as professing to despise the older institution. And certainly at Oxford there was nothing at that period to rival the brilliance of Cambridge. In science today, as always, Cambridge is completely in the lead. The Prime Minister, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, is Cambridge trained; so is his predecessor, Arthur Hugh Balfour; and both are scholarly men of the highest culture. Cambridge has nurtured a wonderful succession of poets: Spenser, Milton, Gray, Wordsworth, Byron, down to Tennyson. Moreover, she is the mother of universities. While Oxford has given birth to no daughter institution, Cambridge has planted shoots everywhere. The University of Dublin is an offshoot of Cambridge; so are Harvard and Yale; so is the University of Sydney in New South Wales; and the higher learning in New Zealand is also under Cambridge auspices. The international spirit has always been strong among Cantabs. The Japanese Minister of Education, Baron Kikuchi, received his education at Cambridge, and returned this year to England to deliver a course of lectures on Japanese educational problems. There is an expansiveness in the air at Cambridge, which forms a marked contrast to the formal and reticent exclusiveness of Oxford.

And so we need not be surprised if the recent gathering was remarkable for bonhomie and general good fellowship. The university and city opened their arms wide to receive the 1500 guests from every quarter of the globe, all speaking the same tongue. It was as if the Babel hoodoo had been beneficently removed, and men could meet as men once more, and not as mere nationals, fettered by artificial bonds. At the opening meeting, the Mayor and Mayoress of Cambridge, in welcoming their guests, spoke in excellent Esperanto.

The attitude of the London press was, on the whole, wonderfully respectful and favorable. The Daily Telegraph struck a discordant note, suggesting that the cult of Esperanto merely retarded the coming acceptance of English as a universal language. But the fact is that twentieth century civilization does not seem to be tending to the unification of language, but rather to the retention and resuscitation of historic tongues. Hungarian, Norse, Polish are far stronger today than they ever were. The remark is a just one, that Esperanto is not so much a language as a code. A poem in Esperanto is a mere tour de force, an exotic, with no real reason for its existence; for poetry is the final triumph of language, it is language in its essence. Esperanto does not profess to be the future language of the home; the speech used by a mother to her child, by children in the playground, by the poet at his desk. There is an inner world of feeling and aspiration, of spontaneous life, which Esperanto cannot touch, can indeed only adumbrate. But for purposes of international communication, for the grasping of ideas couched in unfamiliar speech, for business purposes, Esperanto may meet a need that is daily becoming more apparent.

The dominance of Latin as a universal language was associated with imperialism and autocracy. Latin went with the Roman legions and Roman law, and implied political subservience, and the acceptance of a certain kind of culture and creed. It is the modern democratic spirit, which would cultivate local and home aspirations and traditions, that insists on the retention and development of home languages like Gaelic and Finnish. To surrender these tongues is to give up the type of men associated with their use, and the life that the language breathes. But this very insistence upon national and racial distinctions of language makes it more imperative that we should have a handy language code, fitted for all international purposes. The attempt to foist phonetic spelling of English upon our society seems doomed to failure. The fact is, that the indefiniteness of English speech goes deeper than phonetics. Our whole vowel system is complicated and uncertain, and difficult to treat in any scientific way. Long before the necessary patching was done that would make English at all serviceable for a world language, educators and authors and business men would have risen in revolt against the tinkering.

These elements appear then to be fatal to the acceptance of English or any other existing language as a general world language; first, the taint of political domination; second, the presence of incongruities and scientific weaknesses that are too deeply rooted to be meddled with; and third, the superciliousness of society towards a crude use of the language by foreigners. All these are got rid of by accepting a new language that is rather, as we have said, a code than a language, and does not meddle with what may be termed the sanctities of language.

The idea of world parliaments is of recent growth. Sixty years ago Tennyson sang of the time when mankind would cease to practice war; when the nations would learn more humane methods.

"Till the war-drum throbbed no longer,
and the battle-flags were furled
"In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

It is fitting that in his own loved academic home one great forward step should have been made towards the practical realization of his dream.

THE BETTER WAY.

As the schools are about to open again, and the streets of the towns and villages, as well as the green lanes of the country, are filled with trooping children, the memory of grown-up people, and especially of those who have grown old, will be sure to turn to their own school days and to think of the difference there is in the schools of today and the schools of long ago.

While perhaps the higher schools—the colleges and the universities—have not changed much, the common school certainly has undergone a complete transformation. The old-time master was almost invariably selected for his ability to administer punishment, as well as to impart learning. "Spare the rod and spoil the child" was the motto. Now the school doesn't know any such thing as a rod. Children are not "switched" in these modern times. And it is not that they are gentler than they used to be, or are more amenable to discipline, but because a better way has been found to manage them.

The whole world of men and women might well take to heart the lesson that the progress of educational methods teaches. It has been said that the child is father to the man, and that men are only children grown up. This being true, why cannot the same methods that have been applied to the government of children be applied to men? The rod and the birch switch of the old red schoolhouse having disappeared, why should the club and the gun not also disappear in the government of men?

Surely men and women are no more unreasoning than children are. And surely it is no more difficult to make the most unruly man amenable to law and order than it has been to make the most unruly child amenable to the same things. There is a good deal to think about in this connection. There should and there surely will come a day when policemen will not be necessary, or, if they are necessary, they will not wear and use clubs. The men who govern will be happier and more comfortable then, because they will have found the better way to rule those who must be ruled.

PORTENTS IN RUSSIA.

The reports from blood-stained Kishineff remind us that the volcano of Russian discontent is by no means extinct. As was the case two years ago, the wretched Jewish populace of the ghetto has been assailed by anti-Semitic mobs. Eighty Jews have been massacred and an unascertained number wounded, while the reports contain the usual dreary and monotonous information that the police took no action of any kind and thereby encouraged the attackers to further frenzies of murder, outrage and destruction. The previous massacres at Kishineff provoked the protests of civilization. The present evil will hardly create a ripple in public opinion, so inured have we become to violence and terrorism in Russia.

The logical connection between Jewish massacres and the onward march of the revolution is real enough, although it is not always understood. The Russian government attributes most of its domestic misfortunes to the Jews. It is they alone who possess the rare combination of education, character, sympathy and sentiment which makes of them a tower of strength to such a movement as is now struggling for expression in Russia. The Jew, traveling from village to village, furtive, reticent and secret, is the modern colporteur of plot and disaffection, while his race connections give to him a peculiar international influence and a valuable financial strength. The Russian system has made the Russian Jew what he is today. It has persecuted him to the point where his sufferings have become a menace. Small wonder that the police were inactive at Kishineff and at a hundred other places while vodka-maddened hordes of brutes were carrying out the murderous impulses conveyed to them by their official masters.

There has now been a long lull in the Russian storm, but only the most sanguine or the least informed can believe that it has expended its fury. It was a matter for some congratulation that the recent dissolution of the Douma was unattended by violence, but the calm was actually more portentous than any amount of sporadic street combats. It simply meant that the people have learned that they can do nothing without a perfected organization and an intelligent propaganda that shall delay the blow until it can be struck successfully. In the meantime there has been a veritable carnival of assassination, and the nerves of officialism must have been set sorely upon edge with the realization that there was neither appeal nor escape from the sentence of death passed by the revolutionary committees. It is freely and reliably said that not one-tenth of these assassinations have been made public and if this is so the list must indeed be a long one.

Here in America we are reasonably content to learn the main facts of the Russian situation as they unfold themselves, but there are other facts, suggestive enough, but not sufficiently stirring, to justify transmission. It is from the press of Eastern Europe and from the mailed correspondence of German, Austrian and French newspapers that we seem really to get into touch with the position. The seizure of hidden stores of arms is of daily occurrence in spite of official efforts to hide the news. Every day some Russian newspaper is suppressed by official orders, only to reappear on the following day under a new name and to be received with the popular enthusiasm that is always given to whatever has fallen under the official ban. By the latest reports there were 6000 political prisoners in St. Petersburg alone and the Russian town must indeed be insignificant that is without its own jail. But more significant than everything else are the references by reliable correspondents to the deep sense of expectation that pervades every section of Russian society. Every one believes that something is going to happen, but no one knows what, except those to whom silence and secrecy mean life and liberty. The people are said to be waiting for the signal and the opportunity, and they are waiting in that frame of mind that comes only from long habituation with bloodshed.

Such at least are the opinions of trained observers who are on the spot. There is no note of optimism anywhere in the Eastern European press, and when we consider the circumstances we need not assume either exaggeration or alarmism. Emerson said that revolutions never move backward, and when we realize that in spite of prodigal promises and profuse pledges Russia is today as far from a constitution and from freedom as ever she was, we need hardly put a limit upon our apprehensions. Russia is as despotically governed as she was five years ago. And with this sinister condition we have to note a total disappearance of that superstitious reverence for the Czar that was once a safeguard, and the growing and passionate resentments and determinations that come from hope deferred. Indeed we may well believe that something is going to happen in Russia.

HOROSCOPE FOR THIS DAY.

Sunday, September 15, 1907.

"Undertake naught today that need not be;
Unfavorable portents doth the prophet see."

This is the 258th day of the year; moon's age, eight days.

An unfavorable day for all undertakings save only the most simple and ordinary. Dismiss this day all thoughts of business or any involved or important matter. Little will come of cogitation or discussion today. Hold over all things for twenty-four hours.

Go about pleasure or amusement-seeking without fear, but quietly and with eyes alert for danger from odd and unexpected sources. "Land threatens under the sea" today. Therefore, if you go on the water, beware of rock and reef. On land, beware especially of falling things—trees, tents and pavilions.

It is foretold that before the death of the moon, terror shall be black on the sea and red in Babylon. This points to a severe storm on the North Atlantic Ocean before the end of this month, and explosion and fire in a great city, most probably New York. Depression in financial circles is foretold also.

Those whose birth date this is must curtail sharply both the money they have been expend on pleasure and business will need all The same applies to ment. Young women will tering offers of marriage The child born today cated to be extremely industrious, as otherwise cessful career is foretold let her study all offers with exceeding care before any. It is foretold for her will marry most happily if she wisely.

THE FIRST SCHOOL

The bells rang out their
One morning, sweet and
And then they scrubbed his arms
And sent him off to school
They scrubbed the wee brown
him,
They shod his bare, brown
And sent him with his bright
The vague, dread task to

The squirrel on the old
Looked sad when he passed
And signaled with his bushy
The bee and butterfly.
He wandered o'er the dimpled
That wept its tears of
To see him pass from lands of
With gyves upon his wrists.

Many a lingering look he
Upon the fearsome road,
And hot his heart within
Beneath the cruel goad;
And when he turned and
His mother at the gate,
He wrestled with his first
And railed his first at fate.

Well was it for his grand
That sped by mire and
He could not see his mother's
Nor hear her sobbing throat;
He could but hear her cheery
And see her proud, high
That bade him storm the walls
With shield and lifted lance.

He left, at last, his native
To brave strange fields and
The surging alien crowds
Where friends were all
He bravely passed with
Nor quailed at shout and
And lifted high his sunny
When closed his dungeon

O little boy, with heart
O little bare, brown feet,
That wandered with the
On mornings cool and Rough is the path you
O'er valley, plain and hill,
But then, as now, while
May God be with you still.

NO PARTICULAR VIRTUE IN HIGH TAXATION.

The Times fails to see that great credit accrues to any city officials from efforts to make citizens pay as high taxes as can be squeezed out of their pockets, and to see how many kinds and extremes of license fees they can pile upon those doing business of various kinds within the municipal limits.

One of the developments of the craze against property and the rabid hatred of those engaged in business on a large scale, which have swept over the country in certain strata, is the notion that the most efficient and valuable public officer is he who devises ways and means to wring out the most taxes and to impose the greatest number of burdens upon the owners and managers of enterprises.

Every day we hear a loud cheer from fanatics, who style themselves the only Simon-pure reformers, over some achievement in the way of increased taxation or a novel suggestion for a hitherto unheard-of license fee. It is an actual fact that to a large number of minds, in the present state of public feeling, a reputation for high taxes seems to be a great desideratum for a city—a thing to be encouraged and egged on and made the subject of boasts.

Now, if the money brought in from these taxes were economically and sagaciously spent for permanent improvements for the general good, it would be desirable to collect even larger sums than we raise now through the Assessor's office. But it is notorious that the larger the funds placed in official keeping, the greater the waste—and generally the larger the deficit at the end of the year. For instance, Los Angeles collected a larger sum from taxes last year than ever before, yet the city never was in such tight financial straits as she temporarily is today.

It is also to be observed that parallel with the increased tax receipts inevitably go an increase in the number of office-holders and pap-suckers and an almost constant swelling of their salaries (now being interrupted, by the way.)

One would almost be justified in the assumption that in the ordinary official mind the main object of collecting more and more taxes is to provide more and more jobs, more and more chances for the spoils-hungry and bigger and bigger pay for less and less work.

The waste of money in municipal government is terrific. No private corporation could stand it; any private business would be wrecked by it. Los Angeles has been practically free from grafting on a large scale and from shocking official scandals; but the little leaks from foolish expenditures and stupid methods amount to well-nigh one-quarter of the whole sum raised by taxation. And yet certain blind leaders of the blind hurrah for the high tax that is necessary to fill up the holes.

There has recently been observable a throwing away of money in the treatment of West Sixth street, which has had an oil bath. We do not know who is responsible for it, but the most careless and thoroughly discredited method has been adopted. Light oil has been sprinkled on the surface of the road, and then, instead of being thoroughly worked in, it has been hastily covered with a little sand. There is a scientific and efficacious way of oiling roads with excellent permanent results (such as has been adopted on Alvarado street,) and anybody connected with the street department should have known better than to authorize or consent to this wasteful, ineffective, dauby and often-condemned mode of treatment seen on Sixth street. A lot of money has been spent; it is property-owners' money that has been spent; and the benefit is not much greater than would come from sprinkling the street a few times with water.

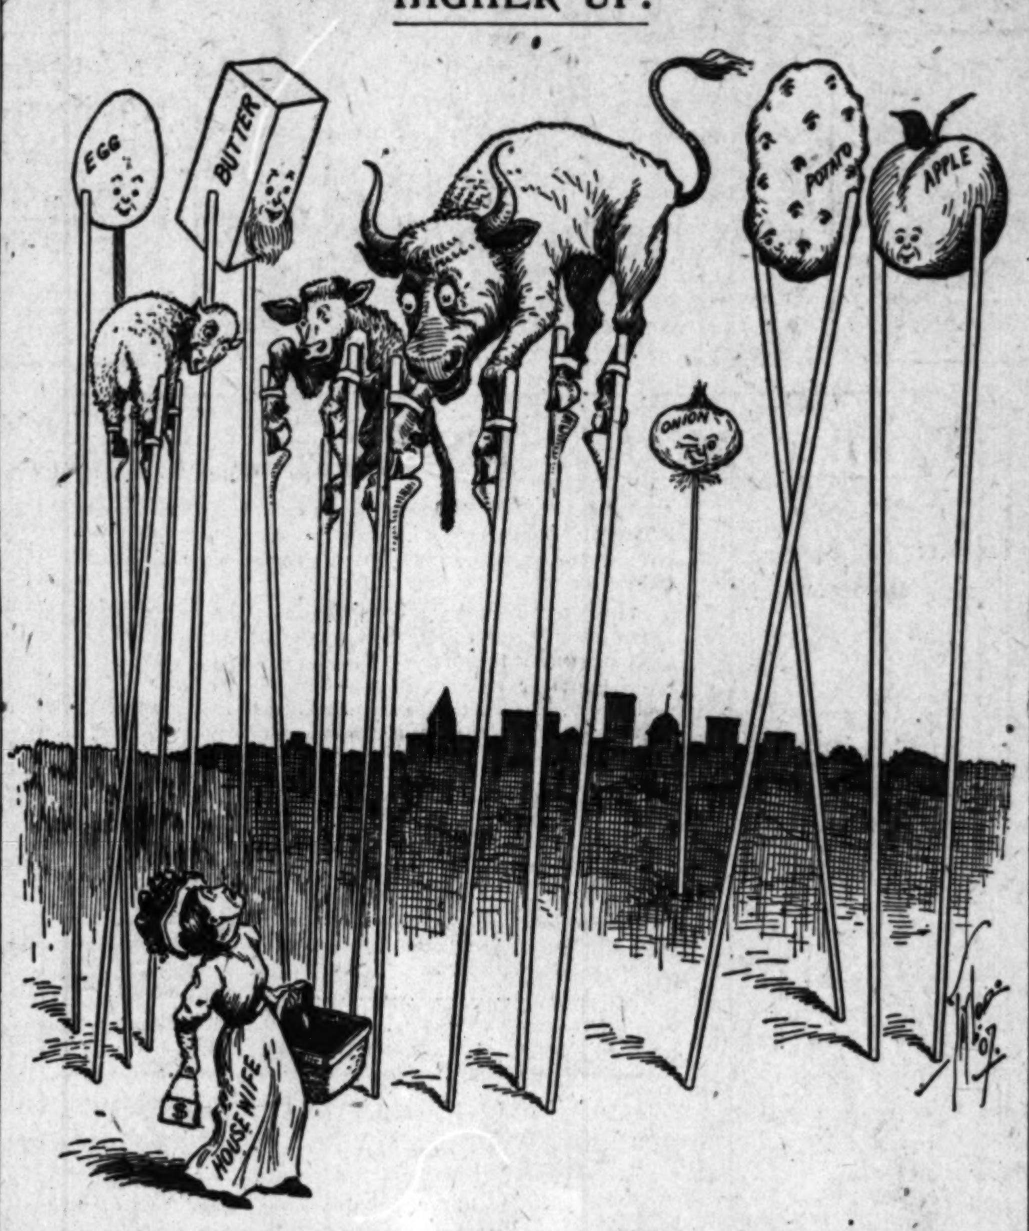
This job is a sample. It is a pointer. It is one of very numerous instances showing that what this city needs is not a painful squirming to twist more money out of taxpayers, but a serious study how to make the taxpayers' money go farther. There would be no lack of funds in the treasury if the city's officials would try, for a few years in succession, the experiment of administering city affairs with the same homely regard for economy and for getting the worth of the dollar for every dollar spent, which most of them use in running their own households and business concerns.

The Times would suggest that when the city contemplates building a monument to the most deserving city official, it select not the man who has been most ingenious in inventing new ways to squeeze out more tax money, but him whose ambition and successful effort have been to expend the tax money most economically, judiciously and efficaciously, and who has got most good out of each denarius—that is to say, every red cent.

The Times is aware that this is old-fashioned talk; it is almost reactionary; but the next popular craze may adopt it as one of its own.

The Chicago free-love school of which Emma Goldman is a leader has wisely decided to refrain from moving to Los Angeles. This town would stand for that thing just about as long as it would stand for an open sewer.

"HIGHER UP."



THE ESPERANTO CONGRESS.

It is quite a triumph for Esperanto that the third international gathering should have been held in so classic a haunt as old Cambridge, and under the auspices of the ancient university. Several of the leading professors there, like Sir William Ramsey, have given the movement their complete indorsement, and Dr. William Cunningham, a churchman who has made his mark as a thinker and writer in economic and social subjects, acted on this occasion as secretary. A British army officer, Lieut.-Col. Pollen, who is president of the British Esperanto association, presided at the meetings; and everything conduced to lend dignity to the occasion, and produce a favorable impression upon the public. Last year the gathering was at Geneva; two years ago, the first of these events took place at Boulogne. Neither of these cities has the prestige of Cambridge, and Dr. Zamenhof is to be congratulated on the step upward in public esteem.

While Oxford University has unique traditions of dignity and authority as a university center, yet Cambridge is no despicable rival. Eighty years ago, when the Cambridge apostles were at the height of their fame, and included such lights as Alfred Tennyson, Arthur Hallam, Richard Monckton, Milnes and Richard Chenevix Trench, among their number, they chose to spell Oxford with a small "o," as professing to despise the older institution. And certainly at Oxford there was nothing at that period to rival the brilliance of Cambridge. In science today, as always, Cambridge is completely in the lead. The Prime Minister, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, is Cambridge trained; so is his predecessor, Arthur Hugh Balfour; and both are scholarly men of the highest culture. Cambridge has nurtured a wonderful succession of poets: Spenser, Milton, Gray, Wordsworth, Byron, down to Tennyson. Moreover, she is the mother of universities. While Oxford has given birth to no daughter institution, Cambridge has planted shoots everywhere. The University of Dublin is an offshoot of Cambridge; so are Harvard and Yale; so is the University of Sydney in New South Wales; and the higher learning in New Zealand is also under Cambridge auspices. The international spirit has always been strong among Cantabs. The Japanese Minister of Education, Baron Kikuchi, received his education at Cambridge, and returned this year to England to deliver a course of lectures on Japanese educational problems. There is an expansiveness in the air at Cambridge, which forms a marked contrast to the formal and reticent exclusiveness of Oxford.

And so we need not be surprised if the recent gathering was remarkable for bonhomie and general good fellowship. The university and city opened their arms wide to receive the 1500 guests from every quarter of the globe, all speaking the same tongue. It was as if the Babel hoodoo had been beneficently removed, and men could meet as men once more, and not as mere nationals, fettered by artificial bonds. At the opening meeting, the Mayor and Mayoress of Cambridge, in welcoming their guests, spoke in excellent Esperanto.

The attitude of the London press was, on the whole, wonderfully respectful and favorable. The Daily Telegraph struck a discordant note, suggesting that the cult of Esperanto merely retarded the coming acceptance of English as a universal language. But the fact is that twentieth century civilization does not seem to be tending to the unification of language, but rather to the retention and resuscitation of historic tongues. Hungarian, Norse, Polish are far stronger today than they ever were. The remark is a just one, that Esperanto is not so much a language as a code. A poem in Esperanto is a mere tour de force, an exotic, with no real reason for its existence; for poetry is the final triumph of language, it is language in its essence. Esperanto does not profess to be the future language of the home; the speech used by a mother to her child, by children in the playground, by the poet at his desk. There is an inner world of feeling and aspiration, of spontaneous life, which Esperanto cannot touch, can indeed only adumbrate. But for purposes of international communication, for the grasping of ideas couched in unfamiliar speech, for business purposes, Esperanto may meet a need that is daily becoming more apparent.

The dominance of Latin as a universal language was associated with imperialism and autocracy. Latin went with the Roman legions and Roman law, and implied political subservience, and the acceptance of a certain kind of culture and creed. It is the modern democratic spirit, which would cultivate local and home aspirations and traditions, that insists on the retention and development of home languages like Gaelic and Finnish. To surrender these tongues is to give up the type of men associated with their use, and the life that the language breathes. But this very insistence upon national and racial distinctions of language makes it more imperative that we should have a handy language code, fitted for all international purposes. The attempt to foist phonetic spelling of English upon our society seems doomed to failure. The fact is, that the indefiniteness of English speech goes deeper than phonetics. Our whole vowel system is complicated and uncertain, and difficult to treat in any scientific way. Long before the necessary patching was done that would make English at all serviceable for a world language, educators and authors and business men would have risen in revolt against the tinkering.

These elements appear then to be fatal to the acceptance of English or any other existing language as a general world language; first, the taint of political domination; second, the presence of incongruities and scientific weaknesses that are too deeply rooted to be meddled with; and third, the superciliousness of society towards a crude use of the language by foreigners. All these are got rid of by accepting a new language that is rather, as we have said, a code than a language, and does not meddle with what may be termed the sanctities of language.

The idea of world parliaments is of recent growth. Sixty years ago Tennyson sang of the time when mankind would cease to practice war; when the nations would learn more humane methods.

"Till the war-drum throbbed no longer,
and the battle-flags were furled
"In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

It is fitting that in his own loved academic home one great forward step should have been made towards the practical realization of his dream.

THE BETTER WAY.

As the schools are about to open again, and the streets of the towns and villages, as well as the green lanes of the country, are filled with trooping children, the memory of grown-up people, and especially of those who have grown old, will be sure to turn to their own school days and to think of the difference there is in the schools of today and the schools of long ago.

While perhaps the higher schools—the colleges and the universities—have not changed much, the common school certainly has undergone a complete transformation. The old-time master was almost invariably selected for his ability to administer punishment, as well as to impart learning. "Spare the rod and spoil the child" was the motto. Now the school doesn't know any such thing as a rod. Children are not "switched" in these modern times. And it is not that they are gentler than they used to be, or are more amenable to discipline, but because a better way has been found to manage them.

The whole world of men and women might well take to heart the lesson that the progress of educational methods teaches. It has been said that the child is father to the man, and that men are only children grown up. This being true, why cannot the same methods that have been applied to the government of children be applied to men? The rod and the birch switch of the old red schoolhouse having disappeared, why should the club and the gun not also disappear in the government of men?

Surely men and women are no more unreasoning than children are. And surely it is no more difficult to make the most unruly man amenable to law and order than it has been to make the most unruly child amenable to the same things. There is a good deal to think about in this connection. There should and there surely will come a day when policemen will not be necessary, or, if they are necessary, they will not wear and use clubs. The men who govern will be happier and more comfortable then, because they will have found the better way to rule those who must be ruled.

PORTENTS IN RUSSIA.

The reports from blood-stained Kishineff remind us that the volcano of Russian discontent is by no means extinct. As was the case two years ago, the wretched Jewish populace of the ghetto has been assailed by anti-Semitic mobs. Eighty Jews have been massacred and an unascertained number wounded, while the reports contain the usual dreary and monotonous information that the police took no action of any kind and thereby encouraged the attackers to further frenzies of murder, outrage and destruction. The previous massacres at Kishineff provoked the protests of civilization. The present evil will hardly create a ripple in public opinion, so inured have we become to violence and terrorism in Russia.

The logical connection between Jewish massacres and the onward march of the revolution is real enough, although it is not always understood. The Russian government attributes most of its domestic misfortunes to the Jews. It is they alone who possess the rare combination of education, character, sympathy and sentiment which makes of them a tower of strength to such a movement as is now struggling for expression in Russia. The Jew, traveling from village to village, furtive, reticent and secret, is the modern colporteur of plot and disaffection, while his race connections give to him a peculiar international influence and a valuable financial strength. The Russian system has made the Russian Jew what he is today. It has persecuted him to the point where his sufferings have become a menace. Small wonder that the police were inactive at Kishineff and at a hundred other places while vodka-maddened hordes of brutes were carrying out the murderous impulses conveyed to them by their official masters.

There has now been a long lull in the Russian storm, but only the most sanguine or the least informed can believe that it has expended its fury. It was a matter for some congratulation that the recent dissolution of the Douma was unattended by violence, but the calm was actually more portentous than any amount of sporadic street combats. It simply meant that the people have learned that they can do nothing without a perfected organization and an intelligent propaganda that shall delay the blow until it can be struck successfully. In the meantime there has been a veritable carnival of assassination, and the nerves of officialism must have been set sorely upon edge with the realization that there was neither appeal nor escape from the sentence of death passed by the revolutionary committees. It is freely and reliably said that not one-tenth of these assassinations have been made public and if this is so the list must indeed be a long one.

Here in America we are reasonably content to learn the main facts of the Russian situation as they unfold themselves, but there are other facts, suggestive enough, but not sufficiently stirring, to justify transmission. It is from the press of Eastern Europe and from the mailed correspondence of German, Austrian and French newspapers that we seem really to get into touch with the position. The seizure of hidden stores of arms is of daily occurrence in spite of official efforts to hide the news. Every day some Russian newspaper is suppressed by official orders, only to reappear on the following day under a new name and to be received with the popular enthusiasm that is always given to whatever has fallen under the official ban. By the latest reports there were 6000 political prisoners in St. Petersburg alone and the Russian town must indeed be insignificant that is without its own jail. But more significant than everything else are the references by reliable correspondents to the deep sense of expectation that pervades every section of Russian society. Every one believes that something is going to happen, but no one knows what, except those to whom silence and secrecy mean life and liberty. The people are said to be waiting for the signal and the opportunity, and they are waiting in that frame of mind that comes only from long habituation with bloodshed.

Such at least are the opinions of trained observers who are on the spot. There is no note of optimism anywhere in the Eastern European press, and when we consider the circumstances we need not assume either exaggeration or alarmism. Emerson said that revolutions never move backward, and when we realize that in spite of prodigal promises and profuse pledges Russia is today as far from a constitution and from freedom as ever she was, we need hardly put a limit upon our apprehensions. Russia is as despotically governed as she was five years ago. And with this sinister condition we have to note a total disappearance of that superstitious reverence for the Czar that was once a safeguard, and the growing and passionate resentments and determinations that come from hope deferred. Indeed we may well believe that something is going to happen in Russia.

HOROSCOPE FOR THIS DAY.

Sunday, September 15, 1907.

"Undertake naught today that need not be;
Unfavorable portents doth the prophet see."

This is the 258th day of the year; moon's age, eight days.

An unfavorable day for all undertakings save only the most simple and ordinary. Dismiss this day all thoughts of business or any involved or important matter. Little will come of cogitation or discussion today. Hold over all things for twenty-four hours.

Go about pleasure or amusement-seeking without fear, but quietly and with eyes alert for danger from odd and unexpected sources. "Land threatens under the sea" today. Therefore, if you go on the water, beware of rock and reef. On land, beware especially of falling things—trees, tents and pavilions.

It is foretold that before the death of the moon, terror shall be black on the sea and red in Babylon. This points to a severe storm on the North Atlantic Ocean before the end of this month, and explosion and fire in a great city, most probably New York. Depression in financial circles is foretold also.

Those whose birth date this is must curtail sharply both money they have expend on pleasure business will need all The same applies to ment. Young women tering offers of marriage.

The child born today cated to be extremely industrious, as otherwise cessful career is foretold let her study all offers of with exceeding care any. It is foretold will marry most happily wisely.

THE FIRST SCHOOL

The bells rang out their
One morning, sweet and
And then they scrubbed

And sent him off to school.
They scrubbed the wee
him,
They shod his bare, brown
And sent him with his bright
The vague, dread task to

The squirrel on the old
Looked sad when he passed
And signaled with his bushy
The bee and butterfly.
He wandered o'er the dimpled
That wept its tears of
To see him pass from lands of
With gyves upon his

Many a lingering look he turned
Upon the fearsome road,
And hot his heart within him
Beneath the cruel goad;
And when he turned and saw her
His mother at the gate,
He wrestled with his first
And railed his first at

Well was it for his grand
That sped by mire and
He could not see his mother's
Nor hear her sobbing
He could but hear her cheery
And see her proud, high glance,
That bade him storm the walls
With shield and lifted lance.

To brave strange fields and
The surging alien crowds to Where friends were all too few;
He bravely passed with sturdy
Nor quailed at shout and din,
And lifted high his sunny
When closed his dungeon

O little boy, with heart
O little bare, brown feet,
That wandered with the bird
On mornings cool and sweet,
Rough is the path you now
O'er valley, plain and hill,
But then, as now, while on
May God be with you still.

For several years it has been unlawful to kill deer and antelope in Arizona, and as a result of immunity from systematic molestation the animals have become even tamer than cattle and hardly take the trouble to get out of the way of men. It is so with most of the wild animals and their panic fear of man is not an ineradicable instinct; it comes from experience. A young fawn is no more afraid of man than is a calf. The first explorers of the Olympic Mountains found the wapiti so unafraid that they could walk right up to a herd in the

Is it not more interesting to see these creatures going about their affairs unafraid than to catch glimpses of them fleeing in terror or to watch them die of hideous wounds? I question the moral right of man to kill harmless for "sport," to convert living things into carrion to useful or necessary end. To kill for is another matter, for that is the of nature.

In these days it is seldom necessary to hunt in order to live. Nobody in Arizona has suffered hunger because of the protection extended to and antelope. But the protection withdrawn. Today the sport of deer begins, and soon the will learn again that man predatory beast, and that survive misplaced and beconfidence will flee in affright sound or smell of him. to be denied that the world growing better—or at least improve its conduct—for the and making some little progress in the direction of moral reform. Credit for the awakening of the public conscience has been given thoughtlessly to writers, statesmen and publicists, who have been diligent in pointing out evils and enthusiastic in urging remedies. Tom Lawson thinks he has done something to make frenzied finance disreputable. President Roosevelt is believed to have had influence in promoting the square deal and discouraging the pernicious activity of "predatory corporations," and he has even received a prize for distinguished services to the cause of peace in the world.

But if any of the strenuous ones think they have done anything at all, they are greatly in error.

The impulse of every movement for betterment of mankind, including the improvement of business morals and the endeavors of The Hague peace conference has its origin in thought waves sent out by the Yogi, who dwell in the mysterious desert of Gobi, and attain perfection by passing centuries in rapt contemplation of their navels.

If that is not true, it is up to the Society for Psychical Research to prove the contrary. "Gee, but it's great to be crazy!"

The Finger of Suspicion.

Col. Randolph's explanation of suspension of railroad building—that investors have been influenced by the pointing of the finger of suspicion at corporations—is not without flavor of plausibility, but his illustration is not so happy as it might be. He says:

"Suppose a good and beautiful woman was compelled to endure an investigation as to her past. What would be the result? Her reputation would suffer. It is the same way with the railroads."

Now it appears to me that a good woman would suffer nothing from an investigation of her past. She could endure that calmly and have nothing to fear, for there would be nothing to investigate, nothing discreditable to be disclosed. But a reformed pickpocket or a penitent Magdalen might feel as the railroads are said to feel about this pointing of the finger of suspicion. My own opinion is that the railroads are no better than our best citizens, any one of whom, as is well known, would have a strong impulse to pack his valise hurriedly if he should receive an annonymous note saying: "All is known. Fly."

A Cheerful Idiot.

A Los Angeles evening newspaper, fawning upon the striking telegraphers who have attempted to disorganize all business in the country, exults over the "cheering reports" that a contractor has been waiting in vain for important messages from Mexico, that thousands of messages are delayed at Galveston, and that a large industrial concern in Chicago is losing thousands of dollars daily because of the interference by strikers with telegraph lines. If all business in Los Angeles should be paralyzed by complete destruction of telegraphic and railway communication, doubtless the Evening News would go into spasms of delight.

A BIT OF CHEER.

> When we are young we think we shall build palaces for the gods; but at the last we are glad if we have dug away some of the rubbish at our feet.—Goethe.

In a poor little town where the streets, and the weeds,
And the children all ran wild,
I found a spot where a dear little home
Looked out at me and smiled.
Bright roses covered the latticed porch,
The lawn was trim and green,
And I caught a glimpse of an aged face
On which I was sure I could clearly trace
The noble stamp of a queen.

"Good friend," I said, "you've an Elim here—
May I stop and rest awhile?"
She greeted me with a gracious word,
And a sweet, assuring smile.

We talked of this, and we talked of that,
And then I praised her care
Of the little home—such a bright home place,
That had seemed to welcome with smiling face
The one who was passing there.

"I am quite content," said the sweet-faced queen—
And she spoke wth a queenly air—
"I am quite content with this little home,
And I do not mind the care.
There was a time when I planned great things
That I would surely do
With the strength of a cultured womanhood,
Oh, I wanted my life to count for the good,
The beautiful and the true.

"But sickness came, and sorrow came,
And reverses many and great;
And the years slipped swiftly away from me
Until it was all too late
To fit myself for the noble work
That I had planned to do;
And there, like a barren tree I stood—
Untalented, worthless, a shame to the good,
The beautiful and the true—

"So it seemed to me; and I mourned my lack
Through many a weary day,
Till at last a word roused me to work
In my humble, quiet way,
To make one home on this dreary street
Present a smiling face.
It's something, isn't it, just to rake
Some of the rubbish away, and make
One clean and cheery place?"

Oh, souls ambitious to do great things—
To write, or to sing, or to preach—
However defeat may have marked your way
There is something within your reach
That you can do that will help to make
This world a cheerier place:
Clean up the rubbish that lies at your feet,
And make that spot all wholesome and sweet—
A spot with a smiling face!

THE PUBLIC SERVICE.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The City Forester yesterday declared himself in favor of the compulsory planting of trees in front of every residence property in the city, and he will urge legislation to further forestry.

Children at the health office yesterday for vaccination made a line reaching from the sidewalk on Broadway to the second story of the City Hall.

Thirty-six candidates yesterday took the civil-service examinations for the positions of meat inspector and inspector of animal slaughter.

The report of Restaurant Inspector Schwegel for the past month shows that $265 has been collected in fines against keepers of unsanitary eating places.

Vaudeville artists aired their marital troubles in the Superior Court yesterday. The wife sought a divorce, alleging cruelty, but may not get it, because, after each instance of abuse, she forgave her husband because she needed him for theatrical purposes.

E. W. Coleman, a lumberman, who assaulted a polite bicyclist who had apologized for knocking him down, was fined $200 yesterday by Justice Selph.

As a result of a fight between three small boys at Florence yesterday, one of them, little George Bell, was arrested and arraigned before Justice Summerfield yesterday on the charge of assault with a deadly weapon.

William A. Moore, one of the proprietors of a Bakersfield dance hall, was arraigned in the Police Court yesterday on the charge of having induced a young girl to become an inmaet of his place. He was held for trial under heavy bonds.

George McClain, a negro, was arraigned in the Police Court yesterday on the charge of having beaten Deputy Poundmaster William Vacher.

AT THE CITY HALL.

TREE PLANTING BY COMPULSION.

CITY OFFICIAL BELIEVES THIS BEST FOR RESULTS.

Would Apply Provisions of State Law and Hand's Forestation on the Same Lines as Street Improvement. Power Companies Applying for Trimming Permits—Two Jobs.

City Forester Harper declared yesterday, that he is in favor of the proposed legislation compelling all residence property owners to plant trees in front of their places, but he has doubts as to the ability of the city to maintain a blanket ordinance of this character.

He believes the most practicable plan would be to proceed under the provisions of a law enacted by the last State Legislature, whereby tree planting on any one street may be authorized by city ordinance, as in the case of street grading, or other street improvement. If the work is done by the city, the expense then becomes a lien upon the property, and payable at the next taxpaying period.

An average of fifty permits a day are being issued by the forester for tree trimming. The light and power companies are working in harmony with him, and there is a noticeable improvement in the condition of trees trimmed.

Dr. Harper has hopes to induce property owners on some of the newly-improved streets to adopt, this fall, the plan of setting out some of the new varieties of trees which, he is convinced, would prove attractive.

Many Vaccinations.

There was a rush of school children to the city health office last week to secure vaccination before the schools open. Yesterday the line of children and their parents reached from the second floor of the health office to the sidewalk on Broadway. Three afternoons of the week are devoted to this work—Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. On Monday 147 children were vaccinated; on Wednesday, 247, and yesterday afternoon 131. One hundred and fifty-one children came to have their arms dressed.

Restaurant Inspection.

The good results of the work of restaurant inspection are shown in the report just issued by the Board of Health. There are in Los Angeles 663 places subject to inspection, and of these, during the past month, 402 have been visited. There have been five arrests and five convictions, and the total amount of fines was $265. There were condemned many pounds of meat, canned goods and butter. Orders to put their places in a sanitary condition were served on seventy-three proprietors.

Want City Jobs.

The Civil Service Commission yesterday held examinations at the Grand-avenue school for the positions of meat inspector and inspector of animal slaughter. There were thirty-six candidates. Emergency appointments under the head of meat inspector are held by Joseph H. Traynor, A. J. O'Rourke, Dr. E. C. Fulsom and J. Flammer. These positions carry a salary of $110 each a month.

Says It's Confiscatory.

John Joseph Adams has filed with the City Clerk a protest against the assessments made for the purpose of widening Indiana avenue. He says he is the owner of all the property between Dauphin and Fourth streets which has been condemned for the widening, and that the assessments placed on this property for such purpose are "onerous, unequal and confiscatory to said property."

Wearing on Alphabet.

License Clerk Lovie at the City Clerk's office nearly had to send his typewriter out for repairs after issuing a vegetable peddler's license yesterday morning to a newcomer in that field—one Louis Z. Yanczukovicz.

Opening of Streets.

Ordinances were presented to the City Council Friday which provide for the opening of several sections of streets. One of these was for the opening of Twenty-third street, from Compton avenue to the easterly line of the right of way of the Pacific Electric Railway Company; another was for the opening of Raymond avenue, between Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth streets, to a width of sixty feet; and still another provided for the opening of Tenth street, from Park View to Hoover street. The opening of Nevin avenue, from Twenty-third to Twenty-fifth street, to a width of forty feet, is also provided for by a new ordinance.

Extension Proposed.

Residents of Brooklyn Heights have petitioned the City Council to adopt an ordinance providing for the opening of a public street, sixty feet in width, to connect North St. Louis and Cosmo streets. This would carry the street over the right of way of the new Pasadena cut-off of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and would give direct connection with two streets which have recently been improved. The matter was referred to Councilman Blanchard, and will be acted upon at the next meeting of the Council.

Catalina Street.

A petition was filed yesterday morning by residents of Catalina street asking for the improvement of that thoroughfare from Tenth street to San Marino street.

JUST A GLIMPSE BEHIND SCENE.

REAL LIFE OF "DEAR HEART" AND "ANGEL FACE."

Sketch Act Artists Have Marital Adventures Which Lack Spirit of True Love—Wife Alleges Kicking and Beating, but Forgives for Business Reasons.

On the stage, Mrs. Clara Long said to Ernest Long:

"Dear heart, why do you leave meh?"

And he answered: "Angel face, it kills me to leave you, but I am going away."

"You are going away?" she sobbed.

"I am going away."

Off the stage, Mrs. Long demanded belligerently:

"Looka here; I want to know where you were last night."

Mr. Long (briefly:) "None a your business."

Mrs. Long: "If you don't behave, I'll have you pinched."

(Husband strikes the fond lady in the face.)

The Longs do a "sketch act" at one of the theaters in Los Angeles, and have had marital adventures all along the Coast.

Mrs. Long was slapped in Eureka; kicked in San Francisco; mauled and beaten in Los Angeles, and was very nearly divorced in Judge Hutton's court yesterday morning.

She told Judge Hutton that her husband, although he made mysterious excursions out into the night himself, was insanely jealous of her. He was even jealous of her little sister, who lived with them—"a child of 16."

On one occasion, the witness continued, Long got angry at her while they were on the way home from a theater in San Francisco and dragged her out into the middle of the street and kicked and beat her. Another time in the same city, they were at a dinner party, and the man who sat next to Mrs. Long at the table was somewhat attentive. Long scowled and scowled. Finally he got up, dragged his wife from the table and into an adjoining room, where he mauled and beat her, she averred.

The testimony showed that she always went back to her husband after each domestic disturbance. Judge Hutton asked her why she did so. She answered that one of the reasons was that she [illegible] him in the theater sketch [illegible] doing:

Although [illegible] actress has been cruelly treated, there is some doubt as to whether she has not legally condoned the offenses and lost her chance for freedom.

Judge Hutton took the case under advisement, saying grimly that he thought he should have the defendant brought into court at some near future date.

POLITE MAN PUNCHED.

COSTS ASSAILANT HUNDREDS.

E. W. Coleman, a lumberman who punched the head of a polite bicyclist who ran over him and then came back to apalogize, has to pay $200 damages for his offense. Justice Selph gave judgement in favor of Henry D. Johnson, the man with the "bike" yesterday morning.

The incident took place at Fourth and Broadway on July 18. Coleman was crossing the street when he was knocked down by Johnson's wheel.

Instead of accepting the cyclist's apologize, Coleman assaulted him.

Johnson was a good deal hurt. The surgeons had to take five stiches in his forehead. When he brought suit against Coleman, he claimed balm for his feelings as well as his wounds.

FIGHTS "DESPERADOES."

BOYS' ADVENTURES RECITED.

An amateur cowboy, little George Bell, was attacked by "desperadoes" at Florence yesterday morning. He had been looking for bandits, "Injuns" and such.

When two boys, enemies of his, waylaid him yesterday, he avenged some old scores. He slid off his horse and attacked them so vigorously that they were taken to the hospital and he was taken to jail.

Bell was arraigned before Justice Summerfield on a charge of assault with a deadly weapon. The complaint against him is signed by A. E. Whitney, one of the boys with whom he fought. Bell's father admits that the other boys were hurt but says that it was only a boyish fight.

Young Bell is accused by the other boys of using a revolver. He says that he merely had a pen-knife in his hand and that the blades were shut.

DIVORCE MILL BUSY.

FIVE DECREES GROUND OUT.

Peary Irene Grimes was divorced from Robert Grimes yesterday on the ground of desertion. The following were also divorced yesterday on the same ground: Gertrude Turnbull from Robert Turnbull; May Andrews from Herbert Andrews; Edith Switzer from Benjamin Switzer.

Marie Benninger, divorced yesterday, discovered after her marriage that Henry Benninger was a burglar who had served three terms in prison.

HOISTED OFF CHICKEN COOP.

Rancher Complains of Being Ejected from His Place—Various Seats Taken Prove Unstable.

J. M. Bell, a ranchman of Lugo, swore to a complaint yesterday morning against a lot of John Does and Richard Roes, who, he says, ejected him from his place.

He states the men were employed by a real estate firm from whom he is buying his place on the installment plan. There being some dispute about the payment, Bell says that the men rushed in yesterday and threw him out with all his belongings.

He tried to defend his property. First, he sat on the chicken coop but was moved. Then he sat on the dining-room table, but they threw him out, table and all, according to the complaint.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

VICIOUS MEN TO BE DRIVEN OUT.

GIRLS WILL BE PROTECTED FROM HUMAN VULTURES.

Another Dance Hall Proprietor Arraigned in Police Court—Other Arrests Expected—Several Los Angeles Men Said to Be Implicated by Confession.

Charged with having induced 16-year-old Vesta Grubbs to enter a dance hall of disreputable character at Bakersfield, William A. Moore, was yesterday arraigned before Justice Austin and placed under heavy bonds. Bail was secured from local brewers.

Moore and James B. Claudius conducted a dance hall at Bakersfield. Claudius made frequent visits to Los Angeles and while here is said to have advertised for young girls, to stock the dance halls in mining towns.

The girls were offered high salaries and light work. They were only required to drink with the visitors of the houses.

Vesta Grubbs was eager to earn the money offered and went to Bakersfield. What happened to her there is stated in a confession made by the girl. Upon that confession Claudius was first arrested and yesterday his partner, Moore. Both men will be tried soon.

The arrest of Moore and Claudius is in line with the policy of Deputy Dist.-Atty. Fleming, who has planned to rid the city of the men who have been putting in jeopardy the honor of young girls.

Yesterday Clarence Dewitt, arrested on a charge of having taken criminal advantage of Marie Swam, 13 years of age, made a confession to the police in which three or four well-known young men of Los Angeles are said to be implicated. Dewitt, a handsome, well-educated fellow, was to have been married to a Los Angeles girl on October 1. Yesterday information charging him with a crime against Pearl Eddy, 15 years of age, was filed in the Police Court.

The careers of the men mentioned by Dewitt will be cut short by the police.

Dog Catcher Beaten.

George McClain, a negro employed in a West Seventh-street real estate office, was arrested yesterday morning on a charge of interfering with an officer in the pursuit of his duty. The negro was arraigned before Justice Austin and was held for trial under a $1000 bond.

McClain told the court that he had been in the employ of Mayor Harper for years, but the Mayor, when notified, did not come to the rescue.

The complaint against McClain was filed by William Vacher, deputy city pound master. Vacher captured a little black dog on West Seventh street yesterday morning and McClain attacked him, giving him a fearful beating.

For the past few months the dog catchers have been arrested often on battery complaints because they defended themselves from similar attacks.

Vacher was treated at the Receiving Hospital and then swore out a warrant for McClain's arrest.

FELIX MAYHEW'S STRIKE.

Raging Gila Delays Operations in Dome District—Gold Strike Near Yuma.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

YUMA (Ariz.) Sept. 14.—Returning from Kofa and the King of Arizona district, Felix Mayhew and Charles Hodges report the first big strike on the new Mayhew Free Gold Company's mines, recently bonded for $100,000 by Los Angeles and Pasadena people. At a depth of fifty feet, which is actually eighty feet below the surface, Mayhew exposed nine feet of a vein which will average $49.40 a ton.

Wingate Lindsay has had the nerve to locate a gold prospect only a mile and a half from Yuma with the surprising luck of getting a ledge of porphyry which runs in gold anywhere from $4 to $133 a ton. How much of it he has is not known. He avers that an expert from Los Angeles assures him he has $200,000 worth of ore in sight. He also claims that he has three feet and a half of the ledge which runs to $133. He has sunk two incline shafts on the property. One is down sixty and one thirty feet. Also he has gone straight down for 112 feet in a third shaft. It is in the thirty-foot shaft that he has the richest ore. In the 112-foot shaft he has a seven-foot ledge, and a ledge five feet and ten inches in the sixty-foot incline. Before making the last strike a few days ago he had a deal on to sell the property for $15,000, but for some reason it fell through.

For several days the Gila has been on a rage which has delayed matters some for the Dome country mines. The Thumb Butte people have purchased a lot of machinery and supplies, but have been unable to get across with their additional force. E. R. Van Wagenen is doing the first deep mining ever undertaken on the De Luce lead and silver mines eight miles northeast of the Thumb Butte people. He is working one property for the rich stringers near the surface, and allows this to pay for operations on the second property on which he expects to strike the main body at a depth of 450 feet. The mines are rich and have produced a great deal, but thus far the ore has occurred in pockets only and it has cost too much to reach them. If a main body or deposit can be exposed, the mine will make good. To pay well the vein must be encountered, and Van Wagenen thinks the only answer to the problem of these properties is deep mining.

Nature has done 300 feet of development for E. W. McDaniel and J. W. Oswald on their Gilt Edge group of gold claims in the Copper Mountain country, near La Suerto, the Marvin strike. They have six claims covering surface croppings through the mountain and reappears in a wash 300 feet below. The ledge is three and a half feet wide and assays $27 a ton on the average. It is free milling, but the gold is fine enough to make a superior cyaninding proposition.

—Henry C. Mueller is working several gold prospects recently located by himself in the Trito Mountains. Great ledges of iron traversing the the Trito Mountains form the chief difficulty of mining in the district. Boulders of from one to three tons of solid iron carrying maganese occur frequently. They appear to be meteoric. They are valueless because of lack of transportation facilities. At Kelvin the reduction works will resume next week. A tram is being built from the Madeline to the Kelvin reduction works to transport seventy-five tons daily of Kelvin Calumet ore for treatment. The Madeline shaft of the Kelvin Calumet people is approaching the 300-foot level, with increasing values. The Calumet mine is showing silver values at ninety feet.

MIGHTY SKUNK KILLER.

Chief of Them All Lives in Maine Village—His Long Score.

Hunting skunks is not a sport which is followed very largely in Maine, says an Augusta letter, nor do the Fish and Game Commissioners in the finely illustrated report which they issue recognize these animals as game. Yet, regardless of this and its unpleasant features, the hunting of skunks has its votaries.

Chief among the skunk hunters in all these parts is Scott W. Burnham, of Manchester, who in eight years, with his good Major, has killed 1300 polecats. Major is a cross between a St. Bernard and a water spaniel, and while having few other accompilshments, was exceedingly proficient in following skunks.

The hunting was all in the nighttime, when the animals were abroad searching for food. Early in the evening Mr. Burnham, carrying a lantern and accompanied by Major, would start out for the fields, woods and pastures. The dog, finding a fresh track, followed it the same as a hound would trace a fox, barking all the time.

Coming up with the skunk, Mr. Burnham would dispatch it with a club. Major never attacked until after the killing, when he would take the body of the dead skunk in his jaws and shake it viciously. He did not seem to mind the smell at all.

Sometimes the game would crawl into a stone wall or some hole, when Mr. Burnham, with buckskin gloves on his hands, easily pulled out the animal. Several times he has been bitten. Occasionally the hunt lasted far into the night, even until the dawn of day, and a distance of twenty miles would be walked. The best record for one night was twenty-eight skunks.

The polecats were skinned and the pelts sold, being in demand at good prices. The bagging of $10 or $12 worth of skins in a night was a common occurrence. But Major, the skunk dog, recently died, aged 10 years, and is buried in the famous animal burying ground at the foot of Quaker Hill in Manchester, having a fitting headstone.

Bridge Across Bosphorous.

Sultan Abdul Hamed purposes to commemorate his reign by once again linking his dominions in Europe with those in Asia by means of a bridge across the Bosphorus, which Lord Byron swam nearly a hundred years ago. Long before the Christian era Darius constructed a bridge across the water at the narrowest point of the straits, to permit the passage of the huge army with which he invaded Greece. But it was a mere temporary structure, quickly swept away, and the new bridge which is now, after the lapse of some twenty-five centuries, to take its place, occupying the same site, will be constructed on more lasting lines. Massive granite pillars, surmounted by cupolas and minarets, will support the steel cables of the bridge proper, and when once completed it will place the railroads of Asia Minor and the projected railway by way of Bagdad to the Persian Gulf in communication with the railroad system of Western Europe. This bridge, for which the designs have been long since completed and approved, and of which the foundations are now being laid, will, together with the railroad from Damascus to the Holy City of Mecca, now nearing completion, constitute two of the grandest and most lasting memorials of the reign of Abdul Hamed, and will go far to demonstrate that the Turk is not, as alleged, a destructive, but a constructive force.

unfortunate out of the way. It is estimated that more than one-half of the tragedies of Monte Carlo are never heard of except by the Casino staff.

The corpse is rushed quietly to the morgue—a secret morgue. Here it is kept some time to see whether relatives or friends are going to interfere or kick up a row. Every once in a while a steamer slips out of the harbor at dead of night. Its cargo is secured at the secret morgue. At sea the bodies are thrown overboard duly weighted, without toll of bell or muttered prayer.

There are countless graves of unknown dead in the Monte Carlo cemetery. But these are only those whose death has become known to the public.

The Casino authorities have a special bureau whose duties are to relieve persons ruined at the tables. The ruined gambler can get from this bureau enough money to take him to his home or to some spot far away from Monaco. Few know of this, perhaps, or there would not be so many deaths.

The "dead broke" gambler is taken through many inner chambers and before stern-faced men to whom he has to tell his history in detail. He is also confronted with the different croupiers, who testify as to whether he really lost as much as he may claim. Then the wretched man has to sign a document banishing himself forever from Monaco. His name and particulars are written in the "black book," his photograph is taken and given to the doorkeepers and other officials to study, and then the man is taken to the railway station, a ticket bought, a few dollars given him, and an official escorts him as far as the frontier. Should he return, it would not avail him. The police would turn him back again into France.

As much as $2500 has been paid out to a big loser so that he could settle up his hotel bill and take himself and family home. Should such money be paid back the Casino might again welcome the man. The sums usually paid range from $25 to $200, and an average of 1000 people a year apply for this relief.

THE SUICIDE LIST.

Among the tragedies at Monte Carlo many have been of interest in America. There have been a score or more Americans who have committed suicide. In the case the other day of the American girl bride, both she and her husband enticed on their honeymoon to the paradise of the Riviera, could not resist the temptation to play a dollar or two at the tables. They won—and lusted immediately for more. And then, as usual, they began losing. Day after day, night after night, instead of billing and cooing, they wasted the sunny hours over the gambling tables, feverishly trying to win back what they had lost. And then of a sudden the end came. All of their resources had been swallowed up. Their jewelry, the bride's trousseau and bits of finery had all been pawned or sold and the money swept into the voracious maw of the Casino. Their hotel bill at Castellemare was large. The glimpse of the black future was too much for their youthful experience, and so they decided that death alone could solve their problem.

Their story was that of Harold Clarke of San Francisco—it is the story of hundreds and thousands of others. Clarke, as readers may remember, shot himself in his hotel in Paris after he had returned from a trip to Monte Carlo. At the gambling tables he had lost all. He came of a wealthy family and was a student at Columbia College in New York. Disgrace shadowed him, and so he chose death.

One of the most pitiful of the thousands of cases was that of another bridal couple—Germans. For the honeymoon they, also, went to the Riviera. The bridegroom made it partly a business trip, for he was authorized to visit various continental cities and collect bills for his firm. He was on his way home when Monte Carlo was reached. The man had $40,000 in his possession—the collections. Fearing that he might be tempted to play some of it, he handed the whole sum, as well as his own money, to his wife and visited the Casino alone, with but a $5 bill. This he quickly lost, but he spent the remainder of the afternoon and evening enjoying the beauties of the Casino and attending the concert and fine theater. When he returned to his hotel that night he found his wife gone. She had left soon after he did. The man at once informed the Nice police. They, in turn, told the Monte Carlo authorities and the bride was traced. She had gone to the gambling rooms and tried her luck. It had been bad, and she was soon plunging large sums in order to regain her losses. In a few hours the entire sum entrusted to her by her husband was lost. The bride walked out of the place, closely followed by the anti-suicide guardians. But before they could reach her she had jumped over the terrace to death 200 feet below.

MORE MISERY.

It is not alone the heavy list of ruined gamblers seeking the solace of death, and for which Monte Carlo is responsible. It is responsible for more deaths and for more misery than any other single institution of any kind in the world. Yet its greatest curse is the ruination of thousands of homes and families far away from its gilded halls. The undeserved wretchedness, the untold anguish, the fearful privation of women and children, living in other lands, who belong to the man who is ruined, can never be estimated.

The profits of the Casino are immense. Last year they were $7,500,000, an increase of $760,000 over the previous year. Seventy per cent. was paid to the shareholders. And, strange to say, one of these is the Pope, for on the formation of the company years ago Leo XIII was one of the first and largest of the outside shareholders. The majority of the shares are held by the Blanc family, the leading member of which is the Princess Marie Bonaparte, whose father was Prince Roland Bonaparte, and her mother, the daughter of M. Blanc, the founder of Monte Carlo. She is the wealthiest Princess in the world, and is about to be married to a royal Prince, who needs money, whether it be drenched with the blood of suicides and murderers or sopping with the tears of tens of thousands of heart-broken women and children.

The Prince of Monaco has not a single share. But he derives his entire income from the sum paid him by the gamblers' company for the lease of Monaco. The prince is of especial interest to Americans because of his American wife. She was Miss Alice Heine of New Orleans. When she married the prince she was a widow, the Dowager Duchess of Richelieu. The prince is a "divorced" man. He first married Lady Mary, daughter of the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon, and a son and heir was born. But eleven years after the marriage the pair were so unhappy that the Pope was appealed to. The Catholic Church, of course, does not recognize divorces, but the pope issued a special pronouncement declaring this eleven-year-old marriage invalid for the reason that "the Lady Mary's mother overpersuaded her to marry."

PRINCE'S INCOME.

The prince in return for the gambling concession has been getting an annual income of a quarter of a million dollars and all the expenses of running the State of Monaco including the maintenance of the army and royal palace. He recently granted a further contract to the "Monaco Sea Bathing Company," or to give the gambling concern its full title, "La Société Anonyme des Bains de Mer et Cercle des Etrangers a Monaco." This concession now extends till 1947 and the annual income of the prince has been raised $100,000. Every ten years it will be raised an additional $50,000. In six years' time the Casino will also have to pay him a lump sum down of three millions of dollars.

All the high class papers of Britain are demanding the suppression of Monte Carlo. The Times, the Pall Mall, William Waldorf Astor's paper, the Express, the Leader, the News are but a few of the big London dailies. In the Times is the request that President Roosevelt take the initiative. The statement in the Times says: "The American plutocrats are as prominent at the tables as the aristocracy of Europe."

A VEGETARIAN CANDIDATE.

One Excuse Advanced for La Follette and Unique Reasons for Supporting Him.

The Philadelphia Ledger says that a very interesting Presidential boom has been started by the Vegetarian Magazine of Chicago. It names as its candidate for 1908, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, on the ground that he does not eat meat.

The editor explains that his publication was not established with a view to making this or that man President of the United States. "But we do believe," he continues, "that whatever party nominates a man like Senator La Follette for that office, such a candidate would and should receive the support of vegetarians. And as there are a good many people in the United States who believe in the humane method of living, politicians would do well to take account of the fact that here is an influence with which they must reckon."

It is possible that vegetarians are as strong as the Irish or the Germans, whom shrewd politicians must always seriously regard, and if this be the case ambitious candidates will need hereafter to be very careful how they look upon meat when it is red. A vegetarian, it is argued, is "more likely to see elemental truths than is a man whose brain is steeped in the inebriating poisons engendered by a meat diet." For a pure reform administration, therefore, the vegetarians would elect an eater of spinach, potatoes and peas.

RAILRORAD EVANGELIST.

Miss Matilda E. Thew, railroad evangelist of Marion, O., is visiting in this city at the home of her brother, I. B. Dutton, No. 1152 East Fiftieth street. Mrs. Thew, who is better known as "Mother Thew," is an honorary member of the Columbus, Deleware and Marion police departments. She will remain in Los Angeles two months, during which time she will address the local policemen and firemen.

W. G. Kerckhoff, United States Senator Frank P. Flint and Henry W. O'Melveny left the city yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock for an automobile trip to Idyllwild. They expected to be among the pines, one mile above the sea, at 9 o'clock last night.

truthful. My wife died several years ago. Still, while there is life there is hope, and my health is excellent.

I shall be glad to serve your district in any way that mortal man can do it, still, notwithstanding the fine climate and rich soil of Los Angeles county, it requires time to produce a family of respectable and ample dimensions.

As country editor, I have often humped myself around town in the effort to get "ads." enough to pay for my patent outside, and with suspenders dangling around my hips, I have yanked viciously the lever of my newspaper hand press, but I have never undergone the arduous duties of producing school children on short notice. Wherever I have taught heretofore, it has been thought sufficient for the teacher to work with his head, but I am willing to burn both ends of the candle if the pay is commensurate with the duties.

NATURE'S LIMIT.

Your honorable school board will remember that Dame Nature has fixed a time limit to productions, even in our wonderful climate of Southern California. However, weak and unworthy as I am, I protest myself willing to go the limit. I think I am broad enough to see your liberality in paying a teacher to teach his own children, but my isolated position in life renders it very difficult for me to meet you with that fairness that an impartial judge would call an able-bodied family.

If I were only a young lady teacher, I might plead that "your offer is so sudden," but as I am an old widower the most I can say is that I have oceans of willingness to get married—or, in the language of the psalmist, I can say: "Barkis is willin'."

In case that, with all my strenuousness, I am not large enough in my family relations to meet your desires, if you wish to make an engagement for the year 1927, both I and my poor relations will make frantic efforts to supply you with a full house or die in the attempt.

Hoping that this will meet with your approval, with great respect I sign myself,

Very truly yours,
[Signed] W. T. THOMPSON,
(His mark.)

P.S.—Upon reading your letter a second time, I perceive that you merely wish the teacher to "bring along some children," without specifying that he shall be the proprietor of any of them. I think I may be able to bring along a dozen or two of assorted colors and sizes. W. T. T.

Later reports from Antelope Valley indicate that Clark Biddison's novel plan for recruiting the attendance has been successful, and that the Palmdale school will open on schedule time with the required quota of pupils, most of them in the family of the teacher.

MOTORMANIA.

I have a motor runabout,
And I have often wondered How I could ever do without
My car, which cost $800.00

It plays me many a little joke;
I well recall my fix
When my left steering-spindle broke—
That cost exactly 6.00

The other day I broke my chain,
It gave me trouble plenty;
But still, I oughtn't to complain,
It only cost 4.20

My carbureter wouldn't work—
I tried till I was blue;
An expert gave it just one jerk
And charged 3.22

She went so fast, when it was done,
She seemed to be alive!
And then—my pump refused to run!
A new one cost me 5.00

And I was happy just a day,
And then my joy was o'er!
My battery failed. I had to pay
For cells 1.44

I thought that I had known the worst,
And dared to laugh at fate;
When suddenly my tire was burst;
New shoe cost 38.00

And then my radiator went;
A new one 27.00
Repairs to brake, a lever bent,
A dust-cap 2.11

And now I was a little vexed;
My lamps went back on me!
It was my generator, next;
They stuck me 13.03

This tinkering with my machine
Was not because I blundered;
With garage, oil and gasoline,
I spent another 100.00

TOTAL.
But, still, I've had a month of fun,
Despite repair shop rows, and
After all is said and done,
I've only spent 1,000.00

OWENS RIVER SOURCES.

One of the Great Peaks of the Sierra Nevada as Seen from Owens Valley.

One of the most distinctive and imposing peaks of the eastern Sierra Nevada wall is the massive granite pyramid overshadowing Round Valley and the upper portion of Owens Valley, known locally as Big Tom Mountain, and designated on late maps as Humphrey Peak. The view of the peak shown in the Art Supplement to this issue of The Times is from the hill of volcanic tufa between Long and Owens valleys.

From the western slope of Big Tom, water flows into the south fork of the San Joaquin. The snow fields shown in the photograph, taken for The Times last July, are the source of large streams flowing into Owens River.

FENDER TALK WITH SPICE.

Doctor Tells the Railroad Man How to Do It.

Traffic Manager Bows and Gives Him Chance.

Offers to Accept Competent Committee's Help.

> "We are willing to accept a committee of competent men, and if they show us how to produce a fender that will meet the requirements of this ordinance, we will adopt it."—[Traffic Manager McMillan, of the Pacific Electric Railway, in address before the City Club yesterday.

At the meeting of the City Club yesterday there was another discussion on the question of fenders for high-speed interurban cars. Dr. John R. Haynes, a physician by profession, offered "proof of the practicability of modern fenders on high-speed interurban cars," and Joseph McMillan, traffic manager of the Pacific Electric Railway, in his talk back, said: "If I knew as much about fenders as Dr. Haynes thinks he knows, my company could save from $300 to $700 a month."

It was quite natural that, even in a gathering of astute business men, such as constitute the audiences at the meetings of the City Club, there should be some with freak suggestions. At least two men came to the surface yesterday, in the aftermath of the discussion, who wanted to enclose the cars in a network of chicken-wire, or something of that sort, so that it would be impossible for anybody to roll under the wheels of the cars.

Mr. McMillan made a strong point for the company when he said that the cars could be equipped with the Eclipse fenders at a cost of $70 per car, or about $18,000 for the 225 cars in service on the interurban lines, while it has already cost the company $225,000 to settle for damages. This was brought out by a question, and McMillan finished his reply to it by saying:

"You can't be as anxious as we are, my dear fellow; it would be money in our pocket."

SOME "FIGGERS."

Dr. Haynes presented the figures published by a morning paper, supposed to represent the number of people killed by the cars, with and without fenders, in and around Los Angeles, in comparison with some other sections of the country. He had on exhibition a voluminous correspondence from various sections, on this point, and illustrations of several kinds of fenders. His main statement was that the cars of the Pacific Electric Railway last year killed one person for every 13,000 population of the city, while the cars of the whole State of Massachusetts killed but one to every 30,000 population. At the time he made this statement Mr. McMillan wanted to know how many persons had been killed by automobiles during the same period.

While the crowd laughed, Dr. Haynes said: "We're not talking about that."

The voice of McMillan had a touch of irony, as he rose to reply. "I came here with fear and trembling today," he said, "for I thought the doctor was going to present an able paper, and that I was up against a hard proposition.

"We have made no fight against the Eclipse fender. We don't want them thrown out, for we have a lot of money in them, but I will give Dr. Haynes $500 and the use of our shops if he will follow the specifications laid down in this ordinance, and equip one of our fast interurban cars so that the fender will work.

"THOUGHT THEY COULD."

"We asked the Eclipse people if they could make a fender we could use on our interurban cars. They said they thought they could, but that it would have to be folded up when the cars rounded a curve. If Dr. Haynes and the Eclipse people want to make a fair representation, they would tell you the kind of cars and the speed at which they run, on which these fenders are used."

McMillan added that the cars were generally "back-numbers," and were run at a speed of about fifteen miles an hour. He closed by making the following offer:

"We are willing to accept a committee chosen from among competent men, who do not think they own the city, or that they carry the world on their shoulders, and if they go to our shops and show us how to produce a fender that will meet the requirements of this ordinance, we will adopt it."

This offer, made in a very positive way, was received with applause.

Lee C. Gates, president of the club, said in closing the discussion, that many men who are ready to criticise the railroad company for not at once adopting the Eclipse fender for their fast cars, are "probably pitting their judgment against the laws of gravitation and impact."

LATE SOCIAL NEWS.

Coming Y.W.C.A. Garden Party. Weber-Crawford Wedding—Sunshine Society Entertained.

Mrs. George F. Cooke, wife of Col. Cooke, U.S.A., who has been visiting relatives and friends in this city and Venice, for the past month, has returned to Fort McDowell, Angel Island.

Y.W.C.A. Garden Party.

The secretaries of the Young Woman's Christian Association will entertain with a garden party Tuesday evening at their boarding hall, corner of Twentieth street and Grand avenue. The affair will be in honor of Miss Conde and Miss Whiting, the two new secretaries. An interesting musical programme will be presented by J. J. Martin, Miss Helen Mead, Miss Theodora Bartel and others. All members of the Y.W.C.A. and their friends are invited.

Sunshine Party.

Mrs. Henry G. Hill of No. 2308 West Twentieth street entertained members of the Sunshine Society, Friday afternoon, with a whist party. Prizes were captured by Dr. Parlow, Mrs. Higgins, and Mrs. Morehouse.

Mrs. Jepson Entertains.

Friday Mrs. Albert A. Jepson of No. 1010 Berendo street, assisted by her daughters, the Misses Florence and Winifred Pennell, entertained with a luncheon in honor of Carl Louis Schworer and Albert R. Mitchell, musicians of Boston.

Weber-Crawford Wedding.

One of the pretty weddings of the week was that of Miss Sophia Victoria Weber and Henry J. Crawford, which was solemnized Thursday, at high noon. The ceremony, which took place at the home of the bride's mother, No. 2623 South Vermont avenue, was performed by Rev. C. Molony, pastor of St. Agnes Church. The bride was attired in a Princess gown of white silk chiffon over liberty satin, trimmed with baby Irish lace. She wore a wreath of orange blossoms and carried a shower of white carnations. Miss Elizabeth M. Weber, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a gown of pink embroidered mulle. Her bouquet was pink carnations and ferns.

The parlors in which the wedding ceremony took place were ornamented with ferns and daisies. The bridal party stood under a bell of white Shasta daisies. In the dining-room, where the wedding breakfast was served, the decorations were ferns and pink oleanders. Over the table was suspended a huge bell of pink blossoms, from which were stretched streamers of asparagus plumosus.

At the conclusion of the wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Crawford will be at home to their friends at No. 1815 Pennsylvania avenue.

Evening Reception.

Miss Edna Sloat, No. 2110 Oak street, entertained recently with a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Williams. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Sloat, E. Davis, Harry Sloat, Miss Helen De Lano and Miss Amelia De Lano.

Announce Marriage.

Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Harvey announce the marriage of their daughter, Nell, to Robert Book. The ceremony was solemnized Thursday in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Book will be at home at No. 1130 West Thirty-eighth street after October 1.

Seventeen.

Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Carleton, No. 939 Westmoreland avenue, entertained with a dancing party in honor of the seventeenth birthday anniversary of Miss Ethel Joyce. The home was fresh with quantities of pretty flowers and fluffy ferns. During the evening a dainty collation was served. Music for dancing was furnished by the Metropolitan orchestra. Among the invited guests were the Misses Faust of Pittsburgh, Pa., Miss Kenzie of Toronto, Canada; Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Benton of Oakland; Miss Bentine of San Bernardino; Mr. Kellepsie and Mr. Kaufman of Azusa; Mr. Grover Cordes of Indianapolis; Miss Olive Patton, Miss Adele Tower, Miss Edna Webb, Miss Edith Corison, Miss Helen Tower, Miss Pearl McCune, Miss Ida Miller, Miss Lillian Blecher, Miss Hazel Platz, Miss Mabelle Britton, Miss Hayden, Miss Hazel Higley, Miss Lena Beale and Miss Rose Beale.

Notes and Personals.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius A. Brown, after a long absence in Europe, have returned to their home, No. 2217 West Ninth street.

Miss Virginia June Bagby, who has been spending the summer in Los Angeles as a student at the Burford Conservatory of Music, left yesterday for her home in Bisbee, Ariz.

Mrs. Bella Howland, who has been spending the past three months in the country with her sister, Mrs. Jack Madison, is now the guest of her mother, Mrs. I. B. Haverslick of this city. Mrs. Howland, who has been seriously ill, is much improved in health.

Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Richards of the Hotel Lankershim left Wednesday for the East. They will be away about six weeks.

WASTING TO SAVE.

Southern Pacific Adopts New Wrinkle That in Future Will Economize Use of Paint.

Wasting paint to save it is a paradox of the Southern Pacific maintenance of way department. Painters have been going over the line between Los Angeles and Yuma and over the branches hereabouts, painting anew the whistling posts which are placed at every highway crossing. Not because the posts need repainting at this time, but because the economy experts of the company have found a way of reducing expenses.

For years railroads have placed legends on these posts to call the attention of engineers to the proximity of a grade crossing—an "X" above and a "W" below, black on a white background—the "X" for crossing, the "W" directing the engineer to blow the locomotive whistle.

The railroad company decided that the engineer should know from his book of rules that he should whistle upon approaching a crossing, so they determined to save paint in the future by painting out the "W" and reducing the size of the black "X."

For weeks painters have been going over the line, making the change. The gain will be counted in years to come, as the signs must be given a fresh coat of paint every few months.

GIRAFFE GATHERS APPLES.

Bites Them Off from Trees and Does the Work of Five Men.

A curious suit for damages was instituted at Le Seur, Minn., in Justice Court before Squire Gottlieb Graubart, in which one fruit farmer, George Doppelgaenger, seeks to recover from George Singlegoer, another nursery man, the sum of $75 in payment for fruit which Mr. Doppelgaenger alleges was taken from the trees in his orchard and eaten by a trained giraffe belonging to Mr. Singlegoer.

This giraffe, a monstrous fellow, with a towering head that reaches up eighteen feet above the ground, has been a great curiosity for many years since he was sent here to Mr. Singlegoer as a present from a brother in Africa.

The giraffe is almost indispensable to Mr. Singlegoer in the nursery business, for in the fruit harvesting season it gathers nearly all the apples from the orchard, carefully nibbling off the twigs on which they grow from the highest branches of the trees and depositing them carefully on the ground, in baskets, or in the hands of assistants, and doing easily the work of five good men. It never eats any of the apples unless they are offered to it in a basket, but Mr. Doppleguaenger now claims that it has reached over the division fence betwen the two orchards, which adjoin, and has scooped off all the Doppelgaenger apples on one side of a row of trees nearly a hundred fet long.

Mr. Singlegoer, of course, denies all this and will contest the action strenuously, more, as he claims, for the reputation of the giraffe than to save the money.—[St. Paul Pioneer Press.

from $40 to $55 a month. In speaking of this, the older men always add "and found." This "and found" means that they make enough on the side by short-weighting one customer and selling the extra to another for cash to buy cigars, meals, drinks at the corner saloon, and pay labor-union dues and walking delegates' salaries.

It is in this line that the union driver flourishes. Investigation of the methods followed show that, it is in the homes of the working people that the depredations are greatest. Bitter tales are told by householders in the Sixth and Seventh wards of the sandbag tactics of the ice men. In the cottage of the workingman he delivers twenty-five pounds or less on a forty-pound order with unvarying regularity.

When the sealer of weights and measures called with his assistant at No. 1379 East Seventeenth street the housewife said that she was aware she was not getting full weight, but she could not help herself. She is compelled to take ice now by reason of sickness in the house. The ice man seldom leaves more than twelve pounds where twenty pounds are ordered; his only response to a protest is "them's orders."

"ORDERS" MAY BE AIRED.

These "orders" will be aired in the police court if the Mayor persists in his intention to prosecute the short-weight ice men.

One woman on East First street hesitated to permit the ice to be weighed, and questioned the genuineness of the credentials of the Sealer of Weights and Measures. She said that the ice man belongs to her church and the weight couldn't be short.

When the piece sold to her for twenty pounds was placed on the official scales it registered thirteen and a quarter pounds.

Complaint is made annually during the summer that the ice man delivers short weight, he is the brother of the coal man. But during the last three months these complaints have been more frequent, just as the ice delivered has been farther below weight.

Officials of the ice companies admit privately that the protests have increased since the drivers and helpers have joined the union. The men use the term union as a weapon of offense and defense. Last week a committee from the Ice Men's Union visited the management of the local companies and demanded that the companies should "recognize" the union to the extent that none but union men should be employed.

This the companies have refused so far to do; but they have not displayed marked vigor in fighting back. Confronted by the evidence of short weight they say it must be true, "but it's the men's fault; we are not to blame."

And that remains to be seen.

REAL THING NOW.

MEN OF MINES FLOCKING IN.

BANQUET AND NEW EXCHANGE DRAW THEM HITHER.

Gathering of Treasure-seekers from Many Points Sign of Recognition of Claims of Los Angeles as Mining Center of the Great Southwest. Early Arrivals Here.

"From two great States and one Territory, and from one foreign nation are coming a body of men who have wrung from the earth its minerals. They are headed for Los Angeles, from Nevada, Arizona, California and the northern States of Mexico. The opening of the Nevada-Los Angeles Mining Exchange and a banquet to be given at the Hotel Alexandria are but the surface attractions. These men are coming from the entire Southwest, not because of the banquet or the opening of the Stock Exchange, but because at last Los Angeles has been recognized as the logical center of the greatest mining district in the world. A district which extends from the gold fields of our own State, to the gold fields of Nevada, Colorado, the copper fields of Arizona and the mineral districts of Mexico."

This is what M. J. Monnett, president of the new Nevada-Los Angeles Mining Exchange, said yesterday, anent the banquet to be given Tuesday night at the Alexandria to mining men, and the opening of the new mining exchange the next day. Mr. Monnett is earnest in his statement that Los Angeles is just now being recognized as the mining center of the West and that whatever cloud was ever cast upon the title has been removed.

San Francisco, he says, has realized the fact that Los Angeles is one day's travel nearer to the mining districts of Nevada, two days nearer to the mining fields of Arizona and five hundred miles nearer to the mining districts of Mexico, and has accepted the inevitable.

The banquet to the mining men was to have been held Monday night, but, owing to the failure to secure permission from the Interstate Commerce Commission for a special rate between Goldfield and Los Angeles, the special train which is to bring the delegation from Nevada was compelled to hold over one day. It will leave tomorrow instead of today, and will arrive in Los Angeles Tuesday. On Tuesday night the banquet, one of the most gorgeous in its line that has been held in the city, will be held, and on Wednesday the new Mining Exchange will throw open its doors in its quarters in the H. W. Hellman building.

Yesterday the advance guard of mining men began to arrive in the city. They came from the four points of the compass, and had an air of expectancy. They stated that in the mining towns of Nevada, Arizona and northern Mexico the operators were watching with interest this beginning of Los Angeles as an active mining center.

Among the early arrivals at the Alexandria, Van Nuys and Angelus hotels, who came especially to attend the banquet or the opening of the Mining Stock Exchange, are: Arthur Weber, J. D. Campbell, T. F. Bonneau, W. B. Lower, William Eassie of Goldfield, W. J. Wilson, Searchlight; O. O. Kincaid, W. C. McCormick, Rhyolite; H. M. Benedict, H. M. Martin, Tonopah; J. R. Phillips, A. E. Pedro, A. J. Meyer, J. R. Finletter, G. W. Cool, A. H. McKay, G. J. McCarthy of Mexico, Nathan Gregg, Paul Tarbell of Denver; S. A. Langton, Salt Lake; Gerald Sherman, L. W. Powell, Bisbee; W. A. Clark, Jr., W. J. Guthrie, Butte; E. L. Grigsby, Rhyolite; W. J. Gordon, Beatty; J. H. Schweble, Wonder; S. R. Porter, Gold Roads; James Mahoney, Prescott; Marcus A. Smith, Eli Barrett, and Thomas C. Job of Arizona.

This is but the beginning, as special trains will arrive tomorrow and Tuesday from both Arizona and Nevada, bearing several hundred mining operators, who will in the future transact their business in Los Angeles. About half of them will be at the banquet, but the majority are here for the opening of the new mining exchange.

The quarters of the new organization, in the Hellman building, have been refitted and are in readiness for Wednesday afternoon's formal opening.

The hotels are beginning to fill up with these mining men from the Southwest. Reservations have been made at the majority of the downtown hotels for almost the entire capacity. The summer months have been dull in the line of mining men in the city, and this week is looked upon as the beginning of an unusually good fall season.

HOTEL PEPPER CHANGES HANDS.

Elmer F. Woodbury of Pasadena (formerly of the Casa Grande) has leased the Hotel Pepper on West Seventh street, of which George E. Hart is the principal owner. Mr. Woodbury recently sold his interests in Pasadena. He is one of the big fellows in his line, and will make many improvements. Mrs. Woodbury is distinguished as a singer. Among the hotels which they have managed are the Normandie in Washington, and Cadillac, New York.

A Royal Island.

The Isle of Wight has been a favorite haunt of British sovereigns ever since the faraway days, when, it is said, Ethelred the Unready spent a holiday there with his queen nearly nine centuries ago. Queen Victoria fell in love with the beautiful island, when, as a girl of 14, she spent a few delightful weeks, in company with her mother, at Norris Castle, near East Cowes, and many of her happiest days were spent at Osborne House, her "dearest Albert's own creation, own work, own building, own laying out." George IV in his regency days—as also his brother, later William IV—made many a trip on the Royal George from his beloved Brighton to Cowes, where like King Edward, he was an enthusiastic spectator of the yacht racing. James II frequently ran over to the island from Portsmouth, and was loud in its praises; Charles II held high revels in it with his boon companions, and once found the island a most hospitable one to be wrecked on. Charles I first visited it as a boy of 9 on a hunting trip with his father; Henry VIII loved it—and so on through the long line of our Kings to the distant days of Canute, who spent more than one delightful holiday across the Solent.—[Dundee Advertiser.

I Am Master of Men's Wear

Not a single merchant in this city can buy a man's suit for less than you can—if you buy it here. That I undersell every other store is a pretty well known fact—of course there is a good reason. Let me explain:

A well known manufacturer in New York made up a large order of new swell shades in suits and overcoats for a firm that afterwards failed. I bought these goods at 1-3 reduction and am passing them on to the people at about the same reduction. Come early while the lines are complete.

He knows the coast of North America from Nome around to Prince Albert Land like a book.

Happening to arrive at Herschel Island in the summer of 1905, he was on hand when the former captain of the schooner "Olga" was discharged for inefficiency of some sort. The position was offered to Klingenberg and he accepted it. The crew were on the vessel when he joined her and most of them were strangers to him.

August 8th, he toog charge of the schooner; before the end of September he had to fight for his life and did not know which man was his friend and which his foe. This state of affairs was entirely due to his first engineer, Jackson Paul, who had shown a dispostion to interfere from the start.

A HOT BOX.

One day the vessel was caught in the ice and the fault was the mate's. Jackson—he was always called by his first name—came rushing up on deck and announced that he was a licensed man and did not care to have his life endangered by a man who was not licensed. The captain, looking upon this as too much of a liberty, even from the engineer, ordered him astern with the remark that "such conduct would be liable to lose him his license."

Again the mate slipped the anchor and chain, and Jackson interfered, voicing his opinions unrestrainedly. He tried to get the cook into disfavor with the captain and was anything but complimentary in speaking of a big German fellow on board, whom Klingenberg says was the best man on the ship.

The captain did not think anything of it. It was annoying, but he let it pass. The engineer was an efficient man in his line. The rest of the crew being chiefly inefficient, the captain had his mind filled with cares of the ship, being, perforce, captain, mate, cabin boy, all in one.

The first evidence of a desire for gun play was seen one morning when Jackson displayed a revolver, which he was not supposed to be carrying, and said to the captain, quite good-naturedly, "Let's fire at a tin can and see who is the best shot."

From subsequent developments it is evident that this proposition was made in order to find out whether Klingenberg had a revolver or not.

All this time they were hunting whale and cruising along the Arctic Coast of the Northwest Territory, arriving finally at Prince Albert Land.

For several days there had been no dispute of any sort. The revolver was not on display and all hands were apparently engaged in their proper pursuits. But, passing through the galley, the captain observed that the cook had saved a great pile of potato peels, a somewhat unusual proceeding.

"What is this for?" he asked.

"To make whisky," was the reply.

"Who's making whisky?"

Jackson's going to."

It appeared that Jackson had already made a still and was now collecting ingredients for the concoction. The cook had promised to let him have what he needed for it. At this time supplies were none too plentiful and Klingenberg commanded the cook not to give him anything for his whisky.

The engineer was wrathful and, peppering his utterance with vituperation, remarked that if the captain thought he "had been working four days making a still for nothing, he was mistaken." With that he walked away in a sulk.

However, the whisky was not made. Shortly after this the vessel was beached for the purpose of loading up with wood. Jackson received orders to take what distillate he needed for the engine from the hold beore the wood was put in. Klingenberg supposed he had done so, but within a few days the mate came to him and said:

MORE TROUBLE.

"Jackson wants distillate again."

Here was a predicament. The wood could not all be taken out again; the distillate had to be gotten; the only thing to do was to pass it out in buckets.

Klingenberg spoke to Jackson, reprimanding him for having failed to get up a sufficient quantity when he was told to do so, and said that the only thing now to be done was to have it passed up in buckets.

"It can't be done," Jackson retorted with a sneer.

"Why can't it be done?" Klingenberg demanded.

"Because I won't allow it," was the reply.

Such audacity was not to be overlooked. Klingenberg, without raising his voice and without evidence of anger, said:

"What are you looking for? Trouble?"

"Yes," from Jackson. With that he leveled his rifle at the captain, who was unarmed. Before any harm could be done, the assistant engineer caught the gun and pushed the muzzle downward.

Klingenberg then offered to fight a duel with Jackson, if he desired it, with guns, fists or knives, out on the beach in fair fight. Instead of replying to this proposal, the engineer said to his superior:

"If you ever open your mouth to me again, I'll kill you like a mad dog."

Klingenberg turned his back and walked out of the door.

The entry in the log on this day, September 22, reads:

"11:30 a.m., Jackson draging a Riffel an traduct to Kill. Hauling Wood."

(These log entries, reproduced in facsimile on this page, are unique as English and, when translated, as literature.)

The wood hauling continued for several days. All had agreed at first to help with it, but some of them were beginning to shirk, Jackson among them. One morning he and the cabin boy went out hunting. On his return he learned that the captain was at lunch, and he went below immediately. Klingenberg watched him as he came down the companion way toward him and although he carried his gun with a semblance of carelessness, his thumb was dangerously near the trigger. Klingenberg did not take his eyes off of him for an instant and evidently the man lost courage, for he put his rifle down and fell to at his lunch.

On this day, as on every day since the former attempt at leveling his gun at the captain, Jackson did not raise his eyes from his plate during the meal; with both elbows resting on the table wide apart, he literally shoveled the food into his mouth.

After the meal, Klingenberg slipped around under the floor of the cabin and heard the engineer say to the cabin boy:

"I was afeared, but I'll get him sure this afternoon."

For several days the captain had been listening in out-of-the-way places and trying in every way possible to discover which men were in league together and which, if any, he might trust. It appeared that Frank Miller and Ben Whitney, the mate, really nothing more than a boat-steerer—were of one party. He had also overheard Jackson say to the cabin boy in the presence of at least one other:

"An' you are wid us, kid."

In the afternoon the men hung back from the wood hauling, discontented at having to do more than their share. Klingenberg felt that they were not to be blamed, so, with their whinings still in his ears, he went below to find Jackson and set him to work. As a precaution, he took his rifle down with him and stood it outside the cabin door. Entering, he found Jackson, lying down and reading on a bunk in the corner several feet to the right of the door.

"I want you to give the boys a hand hauling wood this afternoon, Jackson," he said.

"I hain't got time to haul wood an' I won't," was the reply.

THE DUEL.

As he spoke, he raised his gun and took aim. Klingenberg reached for his and did likewise. By some chance, a slip of the fingers or something of the sort, Jackson's bullet had not left the barrel before he was pierced through arm and chest by his opponent's bullet. His own went wild, crashing a plate on the table. Another bullet went through his body just above the waist and his own went through the ceiling.

No more shots were fired. The captain went on deck and sent the mate below to give him whatever medical service was possible. Had he attempted to do so he would have run the risk of making himself a target for a bullet from the assistant engineer through a hole in the door leading to the engine room.

In the written statement of Alfred Carlson, made soon after this, Jackson is quoted as having said:

"I don't blame him for shooting me, as I intended to kill him anyway."

At this point the log reads:

"September 30, 1 p.m. Jackson draw a Riffel at me, C. Klingenberg, and I in selw defens, draw a Riffel and firing 2 shot Wondet Jackson. Jackson firing 2 shot fall short."

Jackson was confined to his berth for ten days following. The captain, with his family, moved to the fore hold and during this time rarely emerged from it. On the evening of October 10, Jackson, having been recovering rapidly, Klingenberg went below with the determination of finally getting his arms away from him and so avoiding further trouble. But Jackson was ready for him and drew on him again, receiving in return a shot that killed him instantly.

That night the captain wrote in the log:

"7 P. M. Jackson Died from a Raiffel Wond hi from me C. Klingenberg, 7 P. M. Master of Shr. Olga."

And on the night following:

"Barred Jackson Prairs hald bay Widner."

On October 12 the vessel and crew went into winter quarters.

There followed as has been said several hearings, [illegible] trial. United States Commissioner Marsh at Klingenberg's request gave him a hearing aboard the Olga and was shown everything, even to the still which called forth the remark from him that Jackson must have been a "very handy man," which he undoubtedly was. Marsh found no evidence for which to hold the captain and he was allowed to go.

Klingenberg does not say much about his hazardous trip alone from Herschel Island to Candle, but his laconic description of it is impressive. He says:

"Hardship is no name for it. I've had some pretty hard trips but that was the worst one. The boat was built in Norway and had two sails, a big one and a little one. I used a storm sail most of the time. The trip had never been made before that way, not even by natives; but I knew the only thing I need have any great fear of was a southerly wind and it didn't happen to catch me.

"At first I went thirty-six hours without sleep, then thirty-two; after that I took no notice of the hours. I would get terribly sleepy and say to myself, 'This is a good place to tie up,' but my next thought would be 'What good headway I'm making! I won't stop now,' and I would keep on, drop asleep and wake up bumping against the ice.

"I started on the 18th of June just when the ice was beginning to break, and it was very dangerous. The boys said, 'Good-by, Charlie'—that's what they call me—'we'll never see you again.'

"I did not see land until I got to Cape Lisburne which was nearly the end of the 1000 miles. As the bird flies the distance is much shorter but I had to go around the ice.

"I killed two bears and three walruses, but I had plenty of provision without game. Once I shot two walruses on a cake of ice but didn't know how to tie up while I took the tusks. One of them was lying on his back so I tied to his tusks—fine four-foot tusks. Then the other slipped off the ice. I turned around and found that the first walrus had gone over and the boat with him."

Capt. Klingenberg's trial is set for the latter part of this month. The written testimony of his men regarding the killing of Jackson will doubtless be the strongest evidence in substantiation of his statements. This writing, as a wise precaution, the captain had them enter in the log of that season's voyage.

WHEN THE BREEZES BLOW.

HURRICANE TIME IS NOW AT HAND.

What Weather Bureau Is Learning About These Terrible Storms—Their Velocity, Diameter, Pressure and Direction Lately Measured.

BY JOHN ELFRETH WATKINS.

HAVOC BY PORTO RICAN HURRICANE 1899.

HURRICANE DESTRUCTION, PENSACOLA 1906.

Havoc Wrought by Hurricanes.
For article "Hurricane Time Is at Hand."

HURRICANE season is now here, and Uncle Sam, momentarily expecting a blow, has his weather eye skinned at the southern horizon. The weather service has equipped itself to promptly forewarn mariners of what it duly expects at any time within the next six weeks—a sample of the most destructive and tremendous of our many storm species. The life-saving service has also been put upon a war footing, and within each station a surfman keeps watch over the telephone, that no time will be lost in snatching from the wire the first tidings of the hurricane demon's approach.

The Weather Bureau's meteorologists have lately been solving many of the sphinx riddles of these dreaded tropical storms which annually tear our coasts to pieces or fly off at tangent and penetrate far into the mainland. A telegraphic cable has been projected from the continent to the region of the tropical seas, whither, at this particular season of the year, Aeolus, dispenser of the winds of heaven, hies himself to open shop and makes ready for business. Here, on the nearest isle, an observer watches the sea for first signs of trouble. He is connected in circuit with a chain of American weather stations circling the entire Caribbean Sea, and the first warning usually reaches our continental ports at least five days before the coming of the Yankee typhoon. So perfect is the coördination between this circuit of lookout stations and Washington that within less time than it takes to comprehend it all, a hurricane flag at our every threatened port has been flown as a warning to keep out of the boiling, seething hurricane track.

The hurricane season proper will pass out with October. In the Danish West Indies it has long been scheduled to end on October 25, when a general festival of prayer and thanksgiving is held, under government auspices. The fact that many have occurred about the time of the September equinox has led to the popular belief that such a storm is in some manner scheduled by nature to occur at that season; but the Weather Bureau meteorologists in one voice declare that there is no such thing as an equinoxial storm of any kind.

Of all great convulsions of nature, the tropical hurricane exacts from us the greatest tribute in life and property. The tornado's force is greater because more concentrated, but where the breadth of its path is measured in feet, that of the tropical hurricane is measured in scores of miles. The tornado lasts for hours, where the tropical hurricane lasts for days—long enough for it to visit many countries, and often both of the great continents of the earth. Where the tornado kills by tens, the autumnal hurricane kills by hundreds, or by thousands, as at Galveston.

PLACE OF ORIGIN DISCOVERED.

The region of the sea where these hurricanes are usually formed has lately been located as east of the Windward Islands. It lies in the southern region of the zone of easterly trade winds and on the border of the "equatorial belt of calms." This belt varies from season to season, but in September extends from 3 to 11 deg. north latitude, on the Atlantic Ocean. In other words, the majority of our tropical hurricanes develop just outside the southeastern gate of the Caribbean, which opening lies between Barbados and Trinidad. For days or even weeks previous to the actual launching of the hurricane on its mad career excessive moisture gathers over this region of great heat. The atmospheric pressure becomes reduced and toward this center the lower stratum of air falls in from all surrounding points. This action finally sets in motion a spiral inward and upward motion. Thus is formed a great vortex which north of the equator always revolves from right to left, or in the direction opposite to the hands of a watch laid on its back. Below the equator the direction of these storm vortices is always the reverse, or in the exact direction of the hands of a watch. This law of hurricanes is of great value to the mariner, who upon the approach of the great vortex can always estimate the direction in which its center lies, and can steer to the opposite point of the compass.

SIGNS MARKING ITS APROACH.

Certain signs marking the hurricane's approach are being noted by our meteorologists. The first untoward symptom is a quietude and haziness of the atmosphere. The next forerunners are an advance guard of cirrus clouds—those delicate, white, elongated feathery forms of vapor which the surveying instruments of the weather bureau discover to be the highest and fastest-flying of all clouds. Several hours before their appearance a dead calm often exists. The barometer begins to rise and all conditions point to fair weather.

"This is the lure of the storm monster to deceive the unwary shipmaster. The ocean's shores are lined with the bones of ships that took no warning from that bright, dead calm and rising barometer." Thus one of our weather experts aptly put it. But the experienced mariner pays close heed to his glass at this time, and has all hands ready for an emergency. He knows that his supicions are correct if soon the atmhosphere commences to haze up and the procession of feathery cirrus has commenced to move up toward the zenith. Next springs up a breeze whose direction is opposite to that of the spreading clouds. This wind, which he knows is being sucked toward the center of the approaching hurricane, next brisks up; the barometer begins to sag and presently ominous black clouds darken the horizon and the hurricane is in sight.

HURRICANE'S DECEPTIVE EYE.

It comes as an enormous whirlpool of wind, moving northward at express train speed—a velocity so great, indeed, that twenty-four hours often suffice for it to leap from the Gulf of Mexico into the North Atlantic. If unable to steer away from the hurricane's center, this "eye" of the great vortex suddenly appears after a terrific blow of many hours and offers its lure to the seaman, for during the passing of the eye of the storm the barometer shows a rise, the atmosphere cleares and there is a comparative calm. To all appearances the storm has passed and all this hope may be offered for an hour or two. But all of a sudden the idly shifting wind starts in for a southerly gale, then rapidly shifts to the west and finally to the northwest.

The central eye of the great vortex has passed and the other half of the great whirlwind is to be encountered. The wind usually blows with greater fury during the passing of this latter half of the storm than it does while the first half is being encountered. The faster the barometer goes up the more severe will be the blow, but the sooner it will be over. Deluges of rain mark the passage of these storms and cover a very wide area on all sides of the vortex.

The general direction of the hurricane is being studied. From its place of formation it first starts westward, and hence is carried across the Antilles and into the Caribbean Sea. During this passage of the Antilles it may entirely devastate one island and yet that directly adjacent may escape without a wreck or casualty. Reaching the latitude of Florida or the Bahamas, it curves either into the Gulf of Mexico, or eastward of Florida and directly into the Atlantic. Approaching the Gulf Stream its center usually follows a course nearly parallel with this current and follows that course northeastward beyond the region of observation, somewhere in the North Atlantic.

WHEN IT COMES INLAND.

But if caught in the Gulf the hurricane demon often escapes inland, over the Gulf States and northward to the Great Lakes, then out of the St. Lawrence Valley. But down the Mississippi Valley nature appears to have drawn an invisible, magic line. If the monster crosses this his backbone is broken and the fury of his breath dissolves into the gentle zephyrs of autumn. But the nearer he approaches the Atlantic seaboard or the Great Lakes the more terrible his fury waxes. We have no Atlantic port whose sands are not blackened by the ashes of ships fallen victim to his wrath. His greatest fury is usually expended before he passes out of the Caribbean or the Gulf into the Atlantic. Once seeing a clear ocean course up the Atlantic Coast he usually increases his diameter from a few hundred to 1000 or 2000 miles, and grows somewhat more docile. But his distraction is now felt over a wider area. While remaining at sea he retains his circular form, but while passing over the land this conformation becomes broken.

VELOCITY OF 150 MILES AN HOUR.

The wind velocities in these enormous whirlpools of air range from 50 to 150 miles an hour, the greater velocities usually occurring over the ocean. At our southern ports it sometimes exceeds 120 miles per hour—two miles per minute—but this great force comes usually in puffs of only a few seconds' duration. During the great hurricane of September 26-27 last year, the wind maintained a velocity of seventy miles an hour for a whole hour at Pensacola, which was rare for such a continued hurricane gale, which rarely exceeds a mile-a-minute velocity, exerting a pressure of eighteen pounds on each square foot of surface exposed to it. In the great hurricane of August 27, 1893, the wind at Charleston exceeded 120 miles an hour for a few minutes.

CAUSES TIDAL WAVES.

The so-called tidal waves accompanying autumnal hurricanes are often quite as disastrous as these terrific winds. For some time before the hurricane center approaches the wind blows a gale from the northeast for a great distance over the ocean, and this continuous pressure banks the water up against the coast to a considerable height above normal. These high tides often inundate and destroy property. They frequently occur without warning, the passing hurricane being too far off at sea to be detected even by instruments.

The great hurricane of 1903 broke all records on the Atlantic Coast by causing a storm tide over eight feet above normal on the Georgia coast. The record storm tides of other points have been eight feet at Buffalo in 1889 and at Mobile in 1906; seven feet at Mobile, 1893; 6.8 feet, South Carolina, 1893. The record storm tide for Massachusetts was 5.3 feet, at Boston, in 1851, and for New Jersey about four feet above normal, at Sandy Hook, in the September hurricane of 1889. These figures, obtained from the Coast Survey, will appear surprisingly small to many people who have read popular accounts of hurricane tides, based upon the action of surface billows, which carry water and drift far above the general level of the storm wave. A vessel, for instance, drawing eight feet, may be carried by successive billows across a marsh submerged only four feet beneath the general storm-tide level. Published statements of hurricane tides on our coasts reaching ten or twelve feet above ordinary high-water mark are based on estimates from which the height of the billows is not eliminated.

HISTORIC HURRICANES.

Since the discovery history has chronicled great tropical hurricanes too numerous to mention. One of the most notable of early times was that of 1766, which devastated the Island of Martinique—the scene of the record eruption of Mont Pelee—and destroyed the dwelling of Josephine, afterward the wife of Napoleon Bonaparte and Empress of the French. Josephine was then but 3 years old, but the terrors of the awful storm are said to have haunted her through life. Her family carried her to an artificial cave, or hurricane house, where they found refuge from the mad winds, which razed their house to the ground, but which left the walls of an old sugar mill in which the future Empress lived during the next ten years of her life. In St. Pierre, the capital of the island, ninety persons perished in that storm, under the ruins of their houses, and double that number were wounded. Twenty-eight French and seven English vessels and scores of canoes were wrecked.

Fifty vessels of a French fleet with 500 soldiers aboard were wrecked in the same waters by a great hurricane in 1780, which also sank two British men-of-war in Mona passage, west of Porto Rico, and killed 16,000 persons in Martinique, St. Lucia and Jamaica. A great hurricane and "tidal wave" in 1867 had considerable bearing on our country's history. It devastated the island of St. Thomas, for whose acquisition we were then negotiating, and after our legislators learned that one of our warships in the harbor had been swept high and dry, amid the wreckage of hundreds of dwellings ashore, they changed their minds and voted against the purchase. A similar hurricane in 1888 swept the coast of Cuba and killed 1000 persons in Sagua la Grande alone. In 1891 the ill-fated Martinique was more completely prostrated than in the terrific hurricane of Josephine's time. Fishermen off shore encountered just previous to the outburst an immense tidal wave, which some stated to be 100 feet high, and which was followed by a smaller one, although the sea in the vicinity was quite calm.

AIR PRESSURE MADE ALL DEAF.

"One very peculiar feature of the hurricane was the deafness experienced by every one during the storm—possibly the result of the reduced barometric pressure," our Consul to Martinique reported to the State Department.

"During the storm there were incessant flashes of sheet lightning, unaccompanied by thunder, and immediately after the storm there were two distinct shocks of earthquake at intervals of about five seconds." Nine-tenths of the buildings of St. Pierre were unroofed and flooded with water, and 700 persons were killed on the island. Every vessel along the coast was either wrecked or badly damaged. The shade and forest trees were totally destroyed along with the season's crops.

OUR OWN VICTIMS.

In our own territory these hurricanes blowing up from the tropics have wrought inestimable havoc. A terrific one in 1736 swept away Pensacola, Fla., on Santa Rosa Island. Since then each year's havoc has been recorded in our newspaper chronicles, appearing from year to year at about this season. One of the greatest hurricanes devastating our territory in modern times was that which wiped out a large portion of Porto Rico in 1899, killing hundreds and leaving thousands homeless at the beginning of their second year of American sovereignty. This was but a repetition of many ravages of this storm demon in our West Indian possession, one of the earliest chronicled by the white man having been in 1525. In 1678 an English fleet in the land-locked harbor of San Juan was almost entirely destroyed just as its commander had ordered the fortress to surrender. In 1702 fate turned upon the Porto Ricans by destroying their own fleet in the same harbor just as it was on the point of sailing to attack an English squadron.

But our most terrible hurricane catastrophe occurred September 8, 1900, when one of these gigantic whirlpools of air shooting up from behind the Antilles got caught in the Gulf of Mexico and destroyed Galveston, with the horrible result still familiar to us all. The severest hurricane which has visited any of our ports since that time was that which raged in the vicinity of the gulf from the 23rd to the 27th of last September. Indeed, according to Prof. E. B. Garriott of the Weather Bureau, who has made a special investigation of these catastrophes, tropical storm developments were exceptionally active in American waters one year ago this month, when three distinct hurricanes swept up from the tropics.

MEASURING WINDS.

The weather bureau classes as a hurricane any wind blowing more than 76 miles an hour, as shown by its instruments. Reaching 80 miles an hour, the wind exerts a pressure of 15½ pounds per square foot on whatever it hits, and rising to 100 miles per hour this force is 45 pounds, sufficient to prostrate everything within its path save only the most solid buildings. A wind velocity of 66 to 75 miles per hour the bureau classes as a "storm;" 57 to 65 miles per hour as a "whole gale;" 49 to 56 as a "strong gale," and 41 to 48 as a "fresh gale."

A table of landscape signs by which one may readily estimate the velocity of the wind by the movement of objects has been worked out by the weather bureau. According to this, when there is no visible horizontal motion to inanimate matter there is a calm. When smoke moves from the vertical the wind's velocity is one to two miles per hour; when the leaves only of trees move, three to five miles; when small branches of trees move and dust blows up, six to fourteen miles; white caps on the sea, fifteen to twenty-four miles; trees swaying and small branches breaking, twenty-five to forty miles.

Above forty miles per hour the wind is dangerous for sailing vessels, and between sixty and eighty miles per hour exposed trees and frail houses are prostrated. Whenever you see, flying on the breeze, two square red flags with square black centers, displayed one above the other, you may know that Uncle Sam has hung up his "hurricane warning," indicating the expected approach of the storm demon of the tropics.

LIMIT ON BRICK.

Twenty-seven cents a square foot is enough to pay for paving Sunset boulevard with vitrified brick, in the opinion of some members of the Sunset Boulevard Improvement Association. A resolution to that effect will be presented at tomorrow night's meeting of the association, to be held at 8 o'clock in the Methodist Church, South, No. 1035 Sunset boulevard. This resolution will request the Board of Public Works not to award the paving contract at a higher price. Secretary J. Mills Davies expects a big attendance of members to vote on the adoption of the resolution.

SONS OF ST. GEORGE.

Local Sons of St. George will celebrate next Wednesday evening the twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the Los Angeles lodge. There will be a banquet at which dishes that delight Englishmen will be served, including, of course, roast beef and plum pudding, and there will be addresses by prominent men of the order. More than two hundred members now are united with the Los Angeles lodge and several of the charter members will be at the banquet.

MILLIONS IN STREET WORK.

Current Year Promises to Be a Record-breaker.

City Cannot Keep Pace With the Great Demand.

Property Owners Clamor for Many Improvements.

Probably no better index to the prosperity of Los Angeles can be found than that shown in the activity in street improvements. It is predicted by city officials familiar with this work that the expenditures for the year ending December 31 will exceed $1,500,000.

The remarkable thing about it is that every dollar's worth of this extensive work is being done on the petition of the property owners. They want the improvements and are willing to pay for them. In fact, the city cannot keep up with the demands for improvements. The City Engineer's department is from six to nine months in arrears on these applications. With the proposed curtailing of employés in this department, it is probable the public will have even longer waits.

The present month is a record-breaker in amount of improvements completed. At the rate maintained for the first half of September, it is likely that the total of $150,000 will be the record for the entire month.

The highest record attained by any previous year for street improvements was in the last year of Street Superintendent Werdin's régime, when the figures reached $886,000. Last yaer the street improvements amounted to $500,-000.

Street Assessment Clerk Frank Palomares yesterday made a summary of the amount of street improvement work completed, and for which assessments have been issued from September 1 to 13. For this period the total is $84,-000.

CASH PROPOSITIONS.

Under cash propositions there have been issued in the last thirteen days assessments on the completed work of State street, from First street to Brooklyn avenue, $1564.75; Cinnabar street, between Second and Third streets, [illegible]; Fourteenth street, betw en Wilton and Santa Clara streets, $1832.80; Figueroa street, between Sunset boulevard and Alpine street, $626.50; Avende 2, between Pasadena avenue and San Fernando road, $12,296.46. This gives a total of $22,163.75 for cash work.

The assessment for sewers for the same period included sewers in Boylston street, from Temple to Court street, [illegible]; Mignonette street, from Beaudry avenue to Boylston street, $954.32; sewers in the Vermont-avenue sewer district, including the streets in the vicinity of that highway, and lying between Sixth and Ninth streets, $19,987.80, making a total of $22,134.12 for the first thirteen days of this month.

The jobs done under the bond provisions of the Vrooman Act have been most numerous, and the streets improved under this system on which assessments have been issued during the past two weeks include Union avenue, from Washington to Twenty-third street, a paving proposition, $15,-[illegible]; Eastlake avenue, between Alhambra avenue and Henry street, grading, $504.96; Hobart boulevard, [illegible] Pico street and Union avenue, [illegible]; Allison avenue, between [illegible] boulevard and LaVeta Place, [illegible]; Ezra street, between Fourth and Inez streets, $8379.23; making a total of $40,111.75 for bond work in thirteen days.

Work is completed and the documents are now on file awaiting the issuance of assessments on street improvements amounting to approximately $64,012, and including improvement of Hyperion avenue, $3000; Avenue [illegible] $2000; Ramona avenue, $500; [illegible] avenue, $300; Dayton avenue, [illegible]; Twenty-third street, intersection, [illegible] street, $10,212.

In the Bureau of Street Assessments there are now on the books more than $800,000 worth of completed work for the less than nine months of the present year, and the total of last year has been far exceeded. In this department alone it is deemed that the year's total will reach over [illegible].

Tracts of street improvement work on which assessments will be issued before the close of the year include [illegible] street, from Figueroa street [illegible] Flower street, from Washington street north to Temple; Grand avenue, from Sixth to Pico; Eleventh street, from Main to Figueroa streets; [illegible] Main street, from the Los Angeles River to Eastlake Park, and [illegible] street, from Washington street to Tenth, amounting approximately to [illegible].

Tomorrow the Board of Public Works will open bids for the improvement of Seventh street by vitrified brick paving from Alameda street to the Los Angeles River, the cost of which will be approximately $75,000; and one week from tomorrow this board will open bids on three asphalt paving contracts—Jefferson street, from Main to Wesley; Winston, from Main to San Pedro, and Fremont, from Temple to Third streets.

There is also to come into this year's showing of outlay on the city streets an expenditure of approximately $75,-000 in the next five months on sewer construction. This will include the sewers of the Pico Heights district, [illegible] avenue district, and the [illegible]-street district, which is to drain the large section known as "The Flats."

Besides the great volume of street improvement work which passes through the Bureau of Street Assessments, there is an immense expenditure for improvements through strictly private contracts.

Fully [illegible] of assessments have been issued by Col. Schreiber, head of the street-opening department, for opening and widening of streets during the present year. This amount will be almost doubled by the close of the year.

WHEN PUYALLUP BURNED.

The Bucket Brigade Worked Manfully, but the Melons Saved the Day.

When our town started to burn up [illegible] was named Puyallup. The name [illegible] better if it had scorched [illegible] but it didn't, laments a writer in [illegible]. The town was often called [illegible] or Pioallup, but it was a [illegible] American name after the [illegible] tribe that had camped around [illegible].

The fire started in the old pioneer [illegible], but when we saw that it was doomed nobody mourned. It had been standing in the way of progress long enough.

A little further on loomed up the big [illegible] general merchandise store with its big stock, and near it the depot and water tank. These must be saved. The bucket brigade centered its efforts on the side walls of this building. But the water thrown on scorched, [illegible] and ran off. It had no staying power. It seemed that the building and the precious stuff beyond were doomed.

But on a side track nea- by stood a carload of real, ripe watermelons fresh from the big patches of the great Yakima country across the Cascade range.

One of the workers was struck with an idea. He rushed to the melon car, gathered up a melon and dashed its brains out against the hot side of the steaming building. Half the pulp stuck to the weather boarding and refused to run off, as the water was doing.

In a second the other fire fighters had caught on, and all dropped buckets and smashed watermelons against the sides of the building that was the pivotal point in saving the town. The pulp stuck—stuck well.

Every watermelon was sacrificed. Not one was left to tell the tale. But each one of them had more backbone than ten buckets of water, and their clinging crust made the walls fireproof until the opposite building burned down.

And thus the watermelons saved Puyallup.

AT THE END OF THE RAINBOW.

Leslie Stokes in Chicago Daily News.

HE HAD HIS REASONS.

These are the words of Timothy Broadbent to the widow. Unfortunately, what the widow said is not recorded:

"I am not ready to admit, madam, that your past experience is an antecedent advantage. In some respects it counts to the contrary. I should like to obtain the personal impressions on the first man. That is impossible. Dead men tell no tales.

"You bring knowledge and practice to bear against my simplicity and inexperience. Your hand is in. You have had command of the weapons. You would take me at a vantage.

"Also, I should have to live up to a reputation. I should be constantly directed to an ideal. This ideal is your own present-day representation of the character of the deceased Theodore. If my memory bears me out, your former allusions to his personality did not suggest such perfection. But that is not to the point. It is the posthumous estimate that reckons.

"Let his faults be forgotten—I agree. But it is another thing to consent to such a magnifying of his virtues as shall lead to my own undoing. I should be discomfited by a portrait. I should be coerced by a dead hand. My grievance against the deceased Theodore would develop into this—that he is deceased.

"You intimated, with coy delicacy I admit, that he would have desired no other successor. The union would have had his sanction. Yet I cannot recollect that I ever wronged the dear Theodore in word or deed. Let him rest in peace—that I may do the same.

"Madam, there are pros and cons; perhaps the prose predominates. At our years we do not look for romance; yet the satisfaction of the time that remains, be it much or little, is to be considered. The marriages that are made in heaven are sometimes marred elsewhere.

"Let us not destroy by nearness that mutual respect which has been the creature of aloofness. If there has been enchantment in the distant view, let the distance be sacred to us. There are generous illusions that we would not part with. Let us still nourish a few unbroken ideals, nor seek the contempt of familiarity. Madam, I can best cherish you—as an ideal. I dread disaster from the rough touch of actuality.

"You say that love is a beautiful dream. Let it remain such. Pray do not awaken; neither will I.

"Madam, still dreaming, I kiss your fair hand, and bid you adieu."

THE DEAR DEPARTED.

The dear departed may have been a man
  Exceptionally gifted and large-hearted;
I'll not deny your premise, that we can Find few such beings as the dear departed.
But, frankly, madam, his untimely fate
Does not allure me to participate.

No doubt, he was enduring, faithful, kind,
  Mindful that nothing should molest or hurt you;
No doubt, you prove it difficult to find
  A parallel to such exceeding virtue.
No doubt, his meekness and his love were such
As you in fitting season tested much.

I'm quite prepared to own he was a saint—
  Or, if you should prefer, he was a martyr;
I will admit without the least constraint
  He found you tart—perhaps he found a Tartar.

Forgive me, madam, if I let you see
You'll not find his collateral in me.
  I feel quite certain, though I should deplore
  To speak unfeelingly or hint at laughter,
The dear departed will become a bore
  To any hapless man who may come after;
Because you're sure to thrust him in the way,
As contrast or as model every day.

Therefore I deem it best he should remain
  Without a poor attempt to imitate him,
For such an effort, that must prove in vain,
  Would simply lead the neophyte to hate him.
Then let him rest in quiet—R. I. P.;
It will be bst for him—and best for me.

His Exclusive Privilege.

The late Gen. Shafter used to enjoy telling how, during the Civil War, several wounded officers and a few privates were going up the valley of Virginia, when a rain came on, forcing all hands to take refuge all night in a schoolhouse.

It chanced that during the night a skunk had found its way under the floor, and by and by had announced its presence after its well-known effective manner.

The officers all waked up, but, being gentlemen and each supposing that the others were still asleep, they kept silent. At last one of the privates, a German, could restrain himself no longer.

"Mein Gott!" he exclaimed. "Dis is awful! Dey shleeps und I vakes, und I haf got to shmell it all!"—[Lippincott's.

Taft Took What She Gave Him.

Mr. Taft was mighty glad to square off at breakfast in the Planters' Hotel today. He did not dine last night en route from Lexington to St. Louis. There was no diner on the train. Lavish promises of food at Louisville were held out, but they did not fill. Mounting a long and steep flight of steps to the depot restaurant, the Secretary and his party were confronted by a larder almost as bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard, and a stony-visaged and unresponsive waitress.

"Chicken sandwiches all around," ordered Private Secretary Hischler.

"You'll take what you can get," firmly retorted the waitress.

Her idea was correct. Mr. Taft's share of the fragments that the waitress produced, after her dull, cold ear had been soothed by blandishments, consisted of two glasses of milk and a half section of apple pie.

A COMPETENCE IS WITHIN YOUR REACH

We have gotten up a little booklet addressed to people who want an investment for their savings that will yield them a competence. We will send it to you if you will ask for it. It tells you that the little investment that will yield you a competence, which you have dreamed about, is within your reach; that the rich man no longer has a monopoly of the independent income-producing investments; that at last an investment has been found in a country where bananas, oranges, lemons, cocoanuts, pineapples, dates, limes and a profusion of fruits grow in abundance; where there is free transportation by water to market; where there is an abundance of free water for irrigating purposes; where there is cheap labor at 30 cents a day; where there is a rich alluvium soil, and where, best of all, you can buy an acre of land planted to banana trees that will yield you an income almost from the very start for $200, and you can pay for it on easy terms if you wish.

You can buy ten acres if you like (no more to any one person) and have an investment that will yield you an independent income almost indefinitely.

Your land is planted to bananas when you buy it, and your trees are growing while you pay for the land. When you finish your payments you get a deed to your property. If you do not care to, or cannot live on it, we will care for your grove and market your fruit, makng a small charge for maintenance. You get the profits.

There is nothing like this in the world except in near the big seaport of Tampico, where we have just bought a magnificent plantation, or hacienda (as they are called in Mexico), of 630 acres, with one and one-half miles of clear water frontage on the beautiful Tamesi river, navigable for a distance of 135 miles.

It tells you of the exact amount of profit yielded by a one, two, three, four, five and ten-acre grove of bananas. It tells you how bananas are cultivated and everything else you will want to know about this investment.

The best acres are going fast and the price is shortly to be advanced. Investigate our proposition and you will want an acre or more of this land. Investigate it quickly and you will pay less—much less—and be much surer of the acres you want than later on. Call or send for the book.

Potter Oil Company
Own 2400 Acres of Oil Land

THIS LAND IS LOCATED IN SANTA BARBARA COUNTY WITHIN SIX MILES OF SUMMERLAND. ALL OF IT SHOWS INDICATIONS OF OIL.

On the Higgins property, one-half mile south, a well has just been brought in which will produce from 500 to 800 barrels a day.

For a mile along the beach the indications of oil are very marked, in many places the oil running. To the northwest there is a well down 1400 feet, which is about to come in, danger signals being posted on account of the rumbling, an indication of heavy gas pressure. To the northeast, at the foot of the mountain of asphalt, is located the Channel Oil Co. now drilling. Being thus surounded, the property of the Potter Oil Co. is proven ground, and we make one of the best offers ever made, for there is

Three-Fifths of the Company's Stock In the Treasury

This stock is to be sold to develop oil and for nothing else.

All individual stock has been pooled for one year, or until dividends have been paid on treasury stock sold.

Look around and you will find on all sides many who have made money out of oil and are now living in comfort. You now have a chance to do the same. The prosperity of Southern California largely depends on its oil production. The demand which is growing every day is fast overtaking the production and more wells must be put down.

Send to us for a map of property. The proceeds of the treasury stock now being sold at 10c a share, par value $1.00. Will all be used in putting down wells.

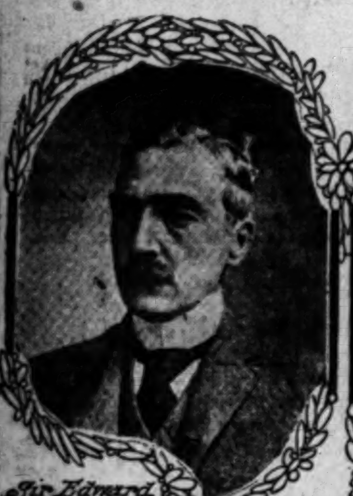
ROWDYISM RAMPANT.

POLICE OF LONDON IN FEAR OF TOUGHS.

World's Metropolis the Scene of Many Violent Assaults—Twenty-five Per Cent. of Entire Force Laid Up for Repairs Every Year.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]



Sir Edward Henry, head of London police.

How the London policeman deals with ugly men.

Types of the London "Hooligan."

London's patrol wagon

LONDON, Aug. 29.—London, which long has prided itself on being the best policed city in the world, is gradually waking to the discovery that facts no longer justify that proud boast. Rowdyism is rampant in the more squalid quarters of this vast metropolis and violent assaults, after making due allowance for the difference in population, are more numerous than in any of the larger American cities. Instead of the police terrifying the toughs it is the toughs who terrify the police.

For six months a royal commission, which is a sort of glorified legislative committee, has been investigating the subject of police administration in London. The voluminous evidence taken shows that there is nothing much the matter with the men themselves, but there is something very much the matter with the system.

There are no more ardent admirers of the London "bobby" than American tourists who pass through London. The perfect control which he exercises over street traffic in the most crowded thoroughfares, by the mere raising of a hand, is to them a never ceasing source of wonder. They find him always civil and obliging, and such an excellent walking encyclopedia of information on localities that he renders guide books next to superfluous. Accustomed to the somewhat domineering bearing of the police in their own big cities, the comparisons which they make on their return home are apt to be all in favor of the London representatives of law and order.

But they see only one phase of the London police in the discharge of their duties. They imagine that because they exercise such a potent and peaceful sway over London's multitudinous Jehus that elsewhere their control is equally effective. If they visited the slum districts, especially at night, they would see a far different state of affairs. They would see that so far as checking brawls and fights is concerned London policemen are far less efficient than the majority of American policemen. It is not because they are lacking in courage and stamina. It is entirely due to the absurd rules and regulations which restrain them in the exercise of force—the only authority for which the rough everywhere has any genuine and abiding respect.

The explanation of the difference between the efficiency of the American police in checking petty outbreaks of disorder, and the inefficiency of the London police is found in the club, and the use made of it. That formidable weapon, which the American bluecoat swings in his hand, ready for instant use should he be called on to deal with an obstreperous character, will be looked for in vain here. The London "cop" patrols his beat without any apparent weapon. Revolver he has none, and though he possesses a club, it is only a diminutive one, known as a "truncheon." By the regulations, moreover, he is compelled to carry it in a specially constructed pocket in his trousers, where it is generally inaccessible if needed in a hurry, as when, for instance, he is attacked by roughs. Then, when he does use it, he must face a strict investigation by his superior officers, and in most cases a charge of assault which is far from being technical. The theory of the regulation is that the policeman must use his baton only when his own life is in danger, and that he must be prepared to prove in every case that its use was justified in the terms of this regulation. Practically he must wait to be hit before he can hit. The advantage which accrues from "getting your blow in fust" is reserved for the tough, who eagerly avails himself of the privilege which the law allows him.

A striking instance of the handicap which this regulation imposes on the police was related in the evidence just given before the royal commission by Sir Edward Henry, Chief Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. A policeman named Worsley was attacked by a rough. The fellow first aimed a blow at Worsley which he succeeded in warding off. The rough, who was spoiling for a fight, then made a rush at Worsley and tried to kick him. Worsley knocked the fight out of him by a blow on the head with his little truncheon. Then he lugged him off to the lock-out and in a police court next morning charged him with assault. The magistrate dismissed the charge on the ground that he had already been sufficiently punished by that one knock on the head.

The man subsequently sued the policeman in the county court for damages, and a sympathetic jury awarded him $100, holding that although the circumstances justified the policeman in using his truncheon, he was not justified in striking him on the head with it. It seems that there is a police regulation which forbids a policeman hitting an assailant on the head with his truncheon when he can possibly strike him on the legs or arms with it. In giving his evidence, Sir Edward Henry entirely justified the policeman. It was very difficult, he said, to stop a man who was aiming a running kick at you by striking him over the legs or arms. To make such a blow effective required greater adroitness and judgment than the ordinary man could exercise in the heat of a fight. But, according to the British theory, the policeman should at all times conduct himself as the servant, and not the master, of the public. And Worsley should have risked being kicked into insensibility rather than risk violating a technical police regulation.

The result of this coddling of the London hooligan—the equivalent of the Americain tough—is seen in the police statistics. There are, roughly, about 18,500 policemen in London, and the annual reports for several years back show that 3500 men on an average are required to go on the sick list every year because of injuries inflicted upon them by violent prisoners. This is very nearly 20 per cent. of the total force, and it must be borne in mind that a London policeman is not reported on the sick list until he has been away from duty for at least three days. The total number of men temporarily disabled is undoubtedly many times greater. This, too, is the average for the whole of the London district. A magistrate for the Stratford district, which is by no means the most turbulent in London, made the statement from the bench the other day that fully 35 per cent. of all the policemen in that district were constantly incapacitated for duty by injuries received in the execution of their duty.

The fact is that the London rough considers the police fair game. "Let us go out and 'do in' a policeman," he says to his friends, after a night in the public house, and he sallies forth and assaults the first unfortunate "bobby" whom he meets. His first move is to obtain possession of the whistle by which the policeman summons assistance, and which is attached to a cord around his neck. That secured, he is fairly sure of uninterrupted sport, for the British workingman, as a rule, looks on policeman beating as a legitimate pastime, and seldom interferes to protect the victim. The policeman usually fights as best he may, with his fists, for the fear of official pains and penalties prevents him from drawing his truncheon. His assailants are not similarly handicapped. They are always equipped with heavily-buckled belts, which make excellent weapons, and often with knives. In nine cases out of ten they are warned by a sympathetic crowd of the approach of police reinforcements, and escape in time.

The result is, of course, that the London policeman is very chary of interfering with the hooligan's amusements. He knows that he has only to expect an assault, and that the chances are that the hooligan will escape even arrest. He knows that if he draws his truncheon and defends himself the hooligan will appear in court next morning with a bandaged head and will be questioned by a sympathetic magistrate, eager to protect the "British public" from "police brutality."

The whole trouble, of course, lies with the British public and its exaggerated idea of liberty in the abstract. I have repeatedly expressed to Englishmen my surprise that the hands of the police were so tied and have been met by stares of blank surprise. "Would you have the police break the head of a poor chap who is only a bit gay in his cups?" is the usual reply, and on my answering that I believed the police were justified in clubbing into submission any one who violently resisted arrest, I have been met by the statement: "Well, the British public would never stand that, you know. This is not Russia."

There can be no doubt that a properly armed police, with power to use those arms when occasion required, would be far more humane than the present system. The London hooligan with the consciousness that all the chances are on his side, always takes those chances. It is a point of honor with him to resist arrest, just as it is his favorite sport to beat a policeman, but occasionally—speaking comparatively, and fairly often, speaking absolutely—the policeman puts up a very fair fight with his fists, or even risks the penalties of using his stock. The result is a very battered hooligan.

I have lived in New York, Chicago and Boston, and am familiar with the work of the police in all those cities as well as with that of the police of London and I can say without fear of contradiction that there is far less injury to prisoners by the American policeman equipped with a club and a revolver and the discretion to use them, than there is by the London policeman whose hands are tied by the absurd regulations by which he is governed. The reason is that the American tough knows what to expect if he resists arrest, and he "goes quiet" to use a London expression. The London hooligan knows that the chances are all on his side and he fights.

I witnessed a ludicrous scene the other day coming across one of the principal bridges which span the Thames. A drunken costermonger was spoiling for a fight and was challenging all the passers-by. A policeman came along and knowing what would happen if he arrested the man, tried to persaude him to go home, or at least to leave his beat. The costermonger was good-natured and beyond hurling a volley of the foulest abuse at the policeman paid no attention to him, and continued to breathe forth his challenge to all comers. The policeman was helpless and knew it, but he was saved from an uncomfortable situation by a soldier also, a little the worse for wear, who came along and heard the coster's challenge. "Oh, you want to fight, do you?" said the soldier. "I'll accommodate you, my beauty." Throwing off his tunic he pitched in. The policeman looked the other way and when the soldier had completed his job of thrashing the coster in a very workmanlike manner, the policeman approached the coster again and said pleasantly, "Now old chap, I really think you had better go home." The coster made no reply and slouched away.

This must not be taken as a reflection on the courage of the London policeman, for he is as plucky as any one in the world.

An American is rather surprised and amused at reading from time to time in the Police Court reports in the London papers that it took six to ten policemen to take a drunken prisoner to the station. If he could see how the prisoner is taken he would be still more amused. There is not a police wagon in the whole of London. Stationed at rare intervals in the streets are what are known as ambulances, but which are only little hand barrows in the shape of stretchers on wheels. Each is only large enough to carry one man—or woman—and it is equipped with straps by which the prisoner may be secured to it, after he has been overpowered.

It is an everyday occurrence to see two or three policemen wheeling one of these barrows with a prisoner strapped to it cursing in the foulest language, and often the barrow has to be wheeled a mile or more through the public streets to the station. A close observer will notice that the prisoner is always bootless. The first thing the police do when they overpower a man is to take off his boots, for a heavy bohnailed boot may inflict a dangerous kick on the man who is bending over the ambulance to secure the straps. It has been suggested from time to time by daring reformers that horsed or electric patrol wagons should be secured for the police. The authorities have turned over in their sleep and murmured that it might be a good thing, but have done nothing.

Speaking of ambulances reminds one of the fact that until a few months ago there was not a public horse or electric ambulance in the whole of London to convey the victims of street accidents or sudden illness to the hospitals. The only available vehicle was a cab or the police hand ambulance which was used also for conveying drunken and filthy prisoners to the Police Station. Now there is one electric ambulance, but its activities are confined to the old City of London which is a square mile in area. It is a good enough ambulance in its way, but the Cockneys who stand and stare at it as it makes its leisurely way through the old streets think that it is the very newest and most magnificent thing under the sun. It has really been known to bring the victim of a street accident from St. Paul's to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, about half a mile, in half an hour, but that was at night when the streets were clear, and the driver is still boasting of it.

SPRUCE UP!

"HER" IDEAL LOVELY CITY.

Bright Los Angeles Women Discuss Our Needs.

Good Roads First in Minds of Home Makers.

Other Happy Thoughts for "What Next?" Talk.

Los Angeles women, ever at the front in movements for the betterment and adornment of their home city, have enlisted keenly in the discussion of the question put forth by The Times—"What Does Los Angeles Now Need Most?" "What Next?"

As might be expected, they advance some novel ideas. They also agree very generally among themselves upon the one thing—good roads—in favor of which many of the leading men of the city have expressed themselves.

There are other things the women believe would be good for the city—an extension of the lighting system, for instance, through which Los Angeles would become the most brilliantly lighted of all American cities. A new and commodious City Jail is suggested, also a modern Receiving Hospital. A near-by army post, better care for the indigent sick, the collection of garbage at night, the closing of the saloons—these are other suggestions.

We have secured water and power. What next?

Our city's streets would all be paved if the women had their way. Wide boulevards would open toward the ocean, and the way to the beaches would be over macadamized highways—bumpless and dustless.

All the city streets would be well lighted. There would not be a dark corner. The boulevards, too, would be hung with electric lights at sufficient intervals to make night travel perfectly safe.

Now that the Owens River water question has been settled, the women would take up the matter of street improvements. Billboards would be removed. Our city parks would be improved. We would have a new City Jail and a new Receiving Hospital. An army post would be established. Our garbage would be collected at night.

From these many ideas the one thing most needful, and which all would choose, is better city streets. This is the acme of civic improvement from the women's viewpoint.

SMOOTH AND DUSTLESS.

They would have a part in bringing about a realization of the dream city, whose streets are smooth as glass and whose highways are dustless. They would spend more money in repairing the downtown streets, and would ask for a large appropriation for pushing the good roads movement throughout the city. Their civic pride would force Los Angeles to make the best appearance possible. The Convention City, if the women had their way, would have more paved streets than any other city of its size in the United States. Their desire for the city beautiful leads them to want for Los Angeles the best of everything.

They would make the city morally cleaner. Some would banish the saloons. The planting of trees is believed by several to be important. There are still others who want a cleaner city. These would have the streets swept by hand labor. Here, where soil and climate lend themselves so readily to improvements along the lines desired, the women would make an ideal city.

These are answers from some of the progressive women of Los Angeles:

Mrs. George F. Bovard: Now that the important question of the Owens River water has been settled, the next of importance is good roads. Los Angeles depends greatly on her tourist trade, and the only way of increasing it is to agitate this all-important problem. We want better city streets.

BEAUTIFY AND IMPROVE.

Mrs. Walter H. Fisher: Good roads is the most important subject now confronting the public. There is no better way of attracting the tourists than to beautify and improve our city streets, so that motoring would be a pleasure. Our streets should be better lighted. We must present the best appearance possible, and how can we do this better than by improving our downtown streets? We need more paved thoroughfares. We needn't be afraid to spend money on street improvements, as it will be returned to us fourfold in benefit received.

Mrs. A. C. Harper: Los Angeles should be connected with Pasadena and all the beaches by beautiful boulevards, ornamented with shade trees. Los Angeles is the convention city. People from all over the world throng here. We must always present our best appearance, because we are constantly under inspection. My idea is that better streets are now the one thing needful. We can have them. We settled the Owens River problem, now let us take up the good roads movement in earnest.

Mrs. Owen McAleer: Good roads is the most essential thing for the citizens to work for. They not only tend to attract the visitors to the Southland, but they also benefit the farmers who must transport their product to the markets.

DOWN WITH BILLBOARDS.

Mrs. Ada Ward: A campaign for good roads should be commenced at once. Every street should be widened and shade trees planted all through the residence district. Another important matter is the removing of the billboards. When this is accomplished we certainly will have the city beautiful.

Mrs. C. W. Brown: Our country roads should be improved. They should be paved and widened. Besides this, we should have fine city boulevards. We have more automobiles than any other city of our size, and we should have better highways for motor travel.

Mrs. George Huff: Los Angeles is perfect in every particular, with the exception of the roads. Good roads is the essential thing for this city. When this question is settled we will have one of the finest and most beautiful cities in the world.

Mrs. E. H. Mullins: The next important project is the necessity of a new City Jail. We should have a building that is large enough to fill the demand without crowding the inmates.

ALLEVIATE SUFFERING.

Mrs. W. A. Varcoe: A new Receiving Hospital, with all the modern improvements, is the next question to be considered. The suffering of those injured on the streets, who have to wait somtimes half an hour in the sun for an ambulance is enough to show this great need.

Mrs. E. A. Healy: I believe the next thing for the people of this city to take up is the erection of a new hospital. The County Hospital is far too small for the demands of so large a city.

Mrs. James T. Neighbors: A hospital for consumptive patients should be built before good roads or anything else if thought of. If one would visit the consumptive ward at the County Hospital the force of this statement would be seen. It is a menace to health. There is room in this city for a place to be built large enough for each occupant to have plenty of air.

Mrs. A. B. Prichard: My greatest desire is to rid Los Angeles of the saloons. If you want to purify and beautify the city, that is the way to commence. You cannot begin at the top of the ladder. When this is accomplished, good roads, a great thing, will be easily obtained.

ARMY POST NEAR BY.

Miss Mabel Hunt: An army post should be located near Los Angeles and military fortifications on the coast should be started at once.

Mrs. E. O. Sawyer: The Sunday observance law should be enforced more strictly. People are making the Sabbath a day of pleasure instead of rest.

Mrs. Randall Hutchinson: To beautify Los Angeles is the next important thing. I would suggest that we erect a library building, found an art museum and ask for the establishment of a government mint, all of which should be built on elaborate architectural plans that would not only be a credit to Los Angeles, but to the whole of Southern California.

Madame Severance: The most important subject that is engaging the thought of the women of Los Angeles is civic improvement. I hope in the future more attention will be paid to this subject.

CLOSE THE SALOONS.

Mrs. J. W. Van Cleve: The saloons should be closed. We should have policemen who desire to rid our city of the liquor evil.

Mrs. Frank Stoddard: The next big undertaking should be to build new schoolhouses wherever they are needed. A tunnel should also be built through the Fourth-street hill.

Mrs. Willoughby Rodman: The most needful thing for Los Angeles is the night collection of garbage. This should be collected at the back door, thus doing away with garbage standing for hours on the front lawn.

Mrs. Wayland Trask: I think [illegible] attention should be paid to the beautifying of our city parks. I think several of the city car lines should be extended, especially the [illegible] line. People living in the [illegible] end are obliged to walk [illegible] to a car line.

AFFLICTIONS OF THE EYE Successfully Treated by
"ACTINA"
Without Cutting or Drugging

SPECTACLES MAY BE ABANDONED

There is no need of cutting, drugging or probing the eye for the relief of most forms of disease, as a new method—the Actina treatment—has been discovered which eliminates the necessity of former torturous methods. There is no risk or necessity of experimenting, as many people report of having been cured of failing eyesight, cataracts, granulated lids and other afflictions of the eye after being pronounced incurable, through this grand discovery.

These Letters Should Convince You

Inflamed Eyelids Cured. Eyesight Improved.

Petersburg, Tenn., Oct. 6th, 1906.

Gentlemen:—I have been using one of your "Actinas," and am glad to testify that I have been greatly benefitted by its use. My eyelids were much inflamed, and my sight failing fast—but now they are entirely free from inflammation—and my sight much strengthened. Think it has benefitted my voice, also. I believe it will do all that is claimed for it.

MRS. S. R. RAMSEY.

Would Have Been Blind but for the Timely Use of "Actina."

Beauvoir, Miss., July 27th, 1906.

Gentlemen:—I would have been, I think, entirely blind but for the benefit received from the "Actina." Am writing now without glasses. Am 76 years old and when my health is good I can read my Bible at night without my glasses. Could not do without "Actina."

MRS. M. B. ATKINSON.

Eyesight Strengthened—Eye-Glasses Abandoned.

Methodist Parsonage, East Springfield, N. Y., Jan. 24th, 1907.

Gentlemen:—I want to send you a testimonial to the effect that "Actina" has had on my eyes. I have made a severe test of "Actina" by casting aside my glasses as soon as "Actina" came to me and have not had them only to see if any change had been wrought in the eye since treatment began.

My eyes gradually gained in strength and power by a faithful treatment of "Actina," and now my glasses are no longer necessary for I see as well, if not better without them. I send this testimonial now, as I feel it is due to you gentlemen and to my fellow man. I send it without solicitation on your part for I feel I owe you something in return for your liberal treatment. I have recommended "Actina" to all my friends.

You may use my name as reference.

Fraternally yours,

(REV.) CHARLES H. CARTER.

"Actina" Corrects Defect in Eyesight After Oculists Failed.

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. [illegible]

Gentlemen:—About two years ago my eyesight began to fail very rapidly. I consulted the so-called [illegible] oculists and was examined by them and had special glasses made galore, but all to no avail. My eyes grew worse all the time and I had enough special made glasses to stock a peddler. To say that I was discouraged and heart-broken is putting it very mildly. My wife read of "Actina" and urged me to give it a trial. I read of a Mr. Baker of Ocean Park, Cal., a suburb of our city, who had used "Actina" with great success. I called on him at his home and he convinced me that "Actina" was just what I needed. I bought "Actina" and in less than 30 days threw away my glasses. I could scarcely read and write and then only for a few moments at a time. Thanks to "Actina." I now read and write [illegible] hours every day and night. I have never used "Actina" as often as per your directions, as I was too busy. I now use "Actina" once or twice a week and would not be without it for any amount of money.

Wishing you and "Actina" every success, I remain,

Very respectfully yours,

S. M. WALKER.

GLASS-EYED BILL.

By Lloyd Osbourne,

Author of "Forty Years Between," Etc.

HE WAS plainly new to God's country and showed it by his artless contempt of [illegible]. Bob Hammil, the [illegible] of the Las Vegas stage, condescended a little to his only passenger, offered him a nip, together with a few reflections on the universe—and went out of his way to say some nice things about "over thar." But the [illegible], yellow-mustached, straight-backed, [illegible]-looking gentleman from "over thar" received these advices with [illegible] murmurs of repression; [illegible] on their being repeated, turned [illegible] the light of his countenance upon Robert Hammil and engrossed himself in the scenery of California.

It was a pity, not only for its tacit denial of the brotherhood of man, but as it later on involved the descent of the straight-backed gentleman into what might be called space—together with a dressing case, dispatch box, hat box, portmanteau, gun case, portable bath, and a roll of steamer rugs. The stage dropped him at the dusty crossroads, disappeared in the direction of what a rusty iron notice said was Watsonville, while the erstwhile passenger gazed blankly at another on which was the half-obliterated inscription: "El Nido Ranch."

A little unbending on the part of the gentleman from "over thar" would have resulted in Bob's taking a detour and disembarking him all comfortably at his destination; and this for nothing more than a grasp of the hand at parting and a hearty "you're welcome," as he whipped up his four horses. But Capt. Anstruther was unused to a scheme of things where a good fellowship counted for more than [illegible]. All his life people had automatically arisen to carry his baggage, direct him in the proper direction, and arrange generally for his comfort and well-being. To find himself on a dusty road, in the heart of a wild and lonely country, an orphan traveler, so to speak, with nobody to take care of him but himself—was it any wonder that Capt. Claude George Pennifield Anstruther looked somewhat depressed, and that the tails of his pugree dropped limply in the ambient air of the Golden State?

Of course he had a pugree, and also enormous shoes with hob nails in them, and a wonderful checked knickerbocker costume, involving a new variety of gaiter, that stopped half way up his calf. He was no less [illegible] inside than out, and next his [illegible] was a leather money belt, and [illegible] was wound round and round with [illegible] to keep him from having cholera, and concealed about his person [illegible] a silver drinking cup that cost [illegible] guineas at Oliver's, and a "compact little filter that weighed only a pound, and an extraordinary knife of extraordinary size, which had a folding spoon in it, and a gimlet and a [illegible] and a sailor's needle. He had been "fitted" in London at an expense of [illegible] hundred pounds sterling, and that was why he clanked as he walked [illegible] things into him when he sat [illegible]. Why California should require such terrific preparations it is not for the narrator to say. Perhaps it is because the narrator does not know. Does anybody know, indeed, why the Briton abroad should assume a guise to tempt the lightning from its [illegible] and interfere with the stars in their courses?

Capt. Claude George Pennifield Anstruther regarded his dressing-case, [illegible]-box, hat-box, portmanteau, gun-case, portable bath and roll of steamer rugs with a dawning sense that British solidity and deadweight can be carried too far. He was even more of this opinion by the time he had conveyed these articles to the shade of some adjacent chapparal and [illegible] off (with the help of the [illegible] with the folding-spoon, the gimlet and sailor's needle) enough branches to hide them from the eyes of possible passers-by.

This accomplished, he set off, in no very happy frame of mind, to follow the road to El Nido ranch. He did not set out with the air of a man assured of a bath, a Scotch and soda, and a [illegible] welcome. On the contrary, he wore the set expression of one engaged with a very disagreeable duty. His mind, instead of dwelling on the beautiful and romantic scenery, was weighted like lead besides with the memory of a dressing-case, despatch-box, hat-box, portmanteau, gun-case, portable bath, and roll of steamer rugs left unchecked in the cloak-room of high heaven. However, he advanced manfully, swinging a very thick stick, and printing the mountain road with a hobnailed pattern that puzzled those little woodmen, the [illegible] children, for days afterwards. [illegible]-two miles—and then he came in sight of some straggly red buildings on a hill. The captain pegged along; the red buildings grew redder and larger; one of them, almost a factory for size, curtly informing him, in letters ten feet high, that it was a winery.

The stranger breathed a sigh of relief. He knew now that he had arrived at his destination. He struck off a path to the right where a good-sized private house, surrounded by a high fence, obviously sheltered the owner or foreman of the ranch. The entry of this place was protected by a board which said succinctly: "Keep Out;" but the Englishman, undeterred by the warning, kept on, and strode up the gravel walk to the rose-embowered porch beyond. He was a little daunted, however, by the prevailing silence. He would have welcomed the bark of a dog or some gruff voice demanding what he wanted. To walk into such a tomb-like quiet made him uncomfortable. He saw himself in imagination possibly misjudged; beset maybe; and his hand tightened on his stick, and he set his feet down more loudly than ever to assert the uprightness of his intentions. He tramped up the three steps leading to the porch like a mule battery going into action. But the stillness remained unbroken by any noise but his own.

He looked about in perplexity until at last, in the darkest and furthest corner, he detected a hammock; and saw, not without relief, that it was occupied by a recumbent figure. He went over to it, still in his heavy soldierly fashion, and looked down on—well, what, in his own words he used to describe afterwards as: "Pon my soul, the most beautiful creacha' I was ever privileged to gaze upon—Gad, a girl of 20, with her lips a little parted on the whitest teeth you ever saw, and her breath comin' and goin' as faint as a baby's in a cot, and beauty? Why, it was like seein' the Taj Mahal by moonlight—the same indescribable whatd'yecallum, you know, when something seems to take you by the throat and you gasp, my boy, positively gasp!"

She was dressed in silvery gray, with a wide lace collar about her neck, and in her thick, rumpled chestnut hair there lay a single red carnation. She was as fresh and sweet and exquisite as the flower itself; and in contrast to the dust and heat without, the sight of her was as refreshing as a splashing pool in the depths of a woody cañon. The captain, after his first moment of surprise, began to wonder what steps he ought to take to awaken her. Every instinct as a gentleman bade him cough. So he coughed. At first so gently that it was almost a lullaby, and then by degrees rising to an honest, growling, bull-doggish cough that seemed to say: "Wake up, blast you."

At last she stirred and opened her eyes and met those of the stranger looking down at her. He said hastily, "I beg your pardon," and betrayed enough agitation to spill a box of candy and a half-opened novel from the chair beside him. The girl sat up in the hammock, still gazing at him with astonishment, and asked him who he was and where he came from.

("Gad, sir, in a vonce like a Cashmiri flute on the Lake of Selangor, borne over the water at dusk! Or the bulbul in one of those moldy old gardens where the Rajput princes held high revel in the company days!")

"My name is Anstruther," he said, picking chocolate creams off the floor. "Capt. Anstruther of the British army."

She smiled at him without saying a word.

"You are, I presume, Miss Helen Jaffrey?" he went on.

She showed the least little sign of embarrassment and colored perceptibly as she assented with a movement of her head.

"Extraordinary!" ejaculated the captain. "Most extraordinary!"

"Why?" she asked.

It was the captain's turn to look put out.

"I'm not accustomed to awaken the young ladies I call on," he said. "I pride myself on being a man of the world, but positively for once, I felt myself staggered. I nearly went away."

"There was my side of it, too," she said.

They both laughed and the captain asked permission to take a chair. He could be a very agreeable man when he chose and it was plain that he was choosing. His manner was almost too ingratiating and Helen could not but wonder inwardly what he was after.

"My business—is rather with your father," he said.

"He's at the Hot Springs, sick," she said. "I'm running the winery for him. Can't you make me do?"

"You don't mean to say that you are in charge of this whole establishment!" he exclaimed.

"Oh, yes, I'm the boss here," she returned, "though of course I have Pa on the wire, you know. What can I do for you, Captain? We'll only be too glad to make an opening over there for our wines—that is, if your rating is good and you represent responsible people."

"Oh, it isn't wine," said the Captain hastily. "It's something very different!"

"You can ring up Pa in the next room," she said, helpfully. "Call up Long Distance and ask for Byron Hot Springs."

"It isn't the kind of thing you can very well telephone," said the Captain.

"Then you'd better chase him up to Byron," remarked the young lady.

"But you're it, too," explained Anstruther. "It's really more you than anybody. I've come from England just to see you!"

"Me!" she cried.

"Yes, you," said the Captain.

"Then what do you want Pa for?" she demanded.

"I thought it would be better to lay it before him first," he returned.

"You'd better begin with me," she said. "That is if you want to get anywhere. I have Pa in my pocket, as politicians say."

"Haven't you a man employed here called Gray?" he inquired. "An Englishman like myself—a gentleman—though he fills, I understand, rather a subordinate position."

"Oh, yes," she said, "only he's mostly called Bill, you know. I should say he is here. Very much here, indeed!"

"His real name is William Charles Hepworth St. John Gray," said the Captain impressively.

"Well all he's got left of that is his glass eye," she said. "That's why the boys call him Glass-Eyed Bill, you know."

It took the captain a little time to get over the shock.

"I have a particular reason to know all about Mr. Gray," he said at last.

"Such a reason might be friendly or unfriendly," she said.

The Englishman sprang from his chair.

"My dear young lady," he exclaimed, "I wouldn't have you to think for a moment that my interest could be for anything but for his advantage. I beg you to believe that. It would be premature to explain why, but will you not take it on trust? Besides, it is not as though I did not know the whole miserable story of his decline and virtual disappearance. All I ask of you is to fill in the details."

She gave him a very searching look. The captain did not suffer from such a mute interrogation and his straight honest gaze reassured her. Something about him was indefinitely reminiscent of Bill.

"You must be related to him," she said.

"That is why I am here," he returned gravely. "That is why I want you to tell me everything."

"When he first blew in here," said the girl, "he was the most forlorn, hopeless, tattered thing you ever saw. Ah Sue gave him something to eat on the doorstep—Ah Sue has a heart like melted butter, you know—and I happened to be passing through the kitchen and saw him there. Do you know what he said to me, sticking his eyeglass in his eye and speaking with his mouth full of chicken tamale? Said he understood now why pigs squealed when they ate! If he hadn't said that I suppose he'd have gone away and that would have been the end of him. But I couldn't resist a man like that, could I? Besides, it was awfully pitiful—he was so evidently the real thing—so handsome even in his terrible clothes—a gentleman, you know."

The captain wriggled nervously on his chair. These recollections seemed to make him acutely uncomfortable. His shrewd tanned face was bright with an interest not untouched with shame. Had Helen needed any reassurance as to his concern in Bill, the expression of his face would have been sufficient.

"We knew he was in very low water," he said. "We knew he had parted from nearly all the associations—the refinements of. . . . Had lost caste and sunk lower and lower in the Western Avernus—but we never dreamed he had been reduced to—to—"

"The chicken of charity," said the girl, filling in the gap.

"I would call it rather the husks of the Prodigal Son," said the Captain solemnly.

"Are you the elder brother?" she asked.

"No, no," returned the Captain; "only what you might call—a—friend, a—"

"Bill didn't have any friends," she said bitterly. "Only an aunt, that's all. Except for her, he said, there wasn't a soul in England who would have walked around the block to help him."

Capt. Anstruther looked depressed.

"He was wrong," he said. "He was wrong."

"Of course the trouble with Bill was that he drank," she said.

"Oh, he did everything," assented the Captain comprehensively.

"He's on the water wagon, now," she remarked. "Been there for a year and a half. Is going to stay, too."

"Water wagon?" inquired the Captain; "is that the vernacular for—for?"

"I mean I have reformed him," she explained. "I guess you wouldn't know Bill now. He has money in the bank and drinks coffee with his meals."

The Captain looked more depressed than ever.

"I suppose we ought all to thank you," he said. "Yes, indeed, we are very grateful to you."

"I don't want you to think I am just a little angel," she went on, "or that I go around radiating reform like a lawn sprinkler sprinkling. I'm quite a believer in letting people mind their own business. But you see, in this case Bill brought it on his own head."

"That's where he usually brought things," said the Captain. "Often pretty hard, too."

"He never was a nipping kind of man, thank goodness," she said, "but he used to go off on what Pa called a biennial bust. He had been here five months, and a perfect pattern, before we got on to it. Pa at last made him the Dago foreman, you know, and we were really beginning to think we had found our longlost child. He was always so polite, you know, and hard-working and reliable; and he just snuggled into the place like a dog that's followed you home. Pa said it was all too good to be true and I guess Pa was right, for one hot Sunday afternoon a man came running in to say that Bill was fighting drunk and was waltzing around the yard with a pistol to shoot Mr. Jackson with—our chemist, you know, and expert winemaker—and that he was drawing beads on anybody that tried to stop him. Even while he was talking we heard bang, bang, bang out there and Mr. Jackson came pelting in like a jack-rabbit—not a bit hurt, you know—but like a person on a sinking ship wanting to catch the last boat. I started upstairs to get under the bed, but I hadn't got up a step before I saw Pa reaching for his Winchester and pinning his deputy sheriff badge on the lapel of his coat. I knew that was the end of Bill, and it came over me I couldn't bear to have him killed—he was too big and splendid to be shot down like a dog, and, anyhow, I had never liked Jackson since he had tried to kiss me once at a dance—and so I just ran out to see if something couldn't be done. I tell you, Bill looked eight feet high, and his eyes were bloodshot and crazy, and he kind of sobbed when he breathed—and if you ever looked down the wrong end of a frontier Colt, you can imagine my feelings for yourself. But I went straight up to him and wrested his gun away and stood in front of him so Pa couldn't shoot him from the house. Fine? I should say it was—nobody was more surprised than me, I'm sure, and I'm surprised now! But I guess I knew pretty well Bill wouldn't have hurt me for the world; though, looking back at it, I can't see how I didn't choose underneath the bed.

"Well I led him back to the bunkhouse and made him sit down on the wooden steps. The tears were rolling down his face and I felt too sorry for him to say a word. They say a girl always likes a bad man—not that Bill was really bad, you know—only unfortunate that he should have complicated his biennial bust with a quarrel with Jackson. When he saw Pa prancing toward us he begged like mad for the pistol to kill himself with; and I almost felt like giving it to him when he talked about wearing stripes and perhaps being sent up for years. But I felt sure I could handle Pa; and anyway, Bill was sort of my dog, you know, and I wasn't going to let anybody hurt him. But I had a tough time with Pa. Pa is such a stickler for law and order. Wanted to take him off to the county seat and lay a felony charge against him. He hadn't been deputy sheriff very long, you see, and was doing new broom. Then Bill made it worse by saying it was all about a woman—never mentioning that I was the woman and Jackson had said something then. . . . Well, Bill was such a gentleman that he wouldn't bring my name into it. Said 'woman,' like that, till I wonder Pa didn't burst.

"It was then that I felt what training can do for a man—with Pa, I mean—and how wise I had been to always keep the upper hand of him. He was determined to settle Bill out of hand—was positively prejudiced against him—and for a time it looked as though I was nowhere in the scrimmage. And I think he was cut up too about my liking Bill so well, for of course (didn't I tell you?) Bill was just silly about me—always had been since Ah Sue gave him that chicken tamale on the doorstep—wore things next his heart and all that, and thought anything sacred I had ever touched. The whole ranch is a sort of church to Bill, you know. . . . Well, as I said, Pa was awful. He paced up and down like a royal Nubian lion, while I, with my heart in my mouth, did Little Spangles in the wild beast's cage. Little Spangles won out, of course, though once or twice it was a pretty close call. But at last Pa quieted down and went off, quite mild, to find Mr. Jackson. But he didn't find Mr. Jackson. Nobody ever has. He disappeared like an orange under a conjuror's hat. All that's left of him is up-stairs in two trunks and a debit balance of a hundred and thirteen dollars on the payroll. I think he must have changed his name and quit the country. If you had ever been up against Bill I guess you'd have done it too. Anyway, peace descended like a beautiful dream, and Bill stayed Dago foreman instead of going into the jute business at San Quentin Prison. I dare say he might never really have got there, but he might have, you know, and he didn't want to try.

"That's all more than a year old now and Bill has never been on a tear since. He says it was all my running out at him and looking down his pistol, but I tell you it was the scare he got from Pa! It wasn't as though he really liked it, you know—drinking, I mean—but sometimes he'd come to the place where he simply couldn't go on, and was so hopeless and desperate and miserable—That was his last biennial bust, for now, of course, he has got something to live for, and it's all different, and he's become one of the little saints of the Y.M.C.A. They say he's the pinkest thing in the room when he gets up and does solemn warning, though I think it's rather fine of him, don't you? And the fun of it is that he runs a boxing class there too, and punches their little heads off afterwards. Oh, Bill's a great boy, and they're going to make him president . . . Oh, dear, once I get started talking about Bill I never seem to know when to stop. Why do you look so grave, Captain? Aren't you pleased?"

"I have something to say about Bill, too," he returned slowly.

"His early life and his early scrapes," she said, "and how you don't believe it will last? There isn't much about Bill I don't know already—his being sent away from England and how they never wanted to see him again."

"I am out here to take him back," said the captain.

"He won't go easy," said the girl.

"I am not so sure," said the captain. "Circumstances have altered. I don't see very well how he can refuse. I—we—the family, I mean, are delighted to hear that he has retrieved himself and risen superior to the boyish follies that threatened to engulf him. Let me express to you our deep sense of obligation—our gratitude—for your evident kindness to him at a time when he needed it most."

"I don't think I care to receive the family gratitude," she answered, coolly. "What did they ever do for Bill but give him the cold shoulder from the time he was left an orphan at twelve? Sent him to Eton and Oxford as a preparatory step to giving him a thousand pounds and telling him to scoot. Couldn't you imagine how well equipped he was to strike out for himself? Couldn't even spell English till I got after him with a speller, and had to work nights before he could write a page without at least six schoolboy's mistakes. The only thing he really knew was 'Paradise Lost,' which had been crammed into him for the army. He must have found it nice and useful."

"He was given his chance," said the captain, "and, like many another, he wouldn't take it. He was put into a good regiment and received an allowance that with economy, would have amply sufficed to let him hold his head up. Then he went the pace and was forgiven. Then he went the pace again and wasn't. He has no right to complain."

"Oh, but he doesn't," she exclaimed hastily. "I wouldn't have you think that for anything."

"But you seem to do it for him," said the captain.

"I don't suppose my opinion matters particularly."

"Well, it was enough to bring me from England," said the captain. "What you think or don't think has suddenly become of great importance to many people."

"Don't you think it is about time to tell me why?" she asked. "You have hinted and hinted till I feel like a person in a detective story—and I no sooner seem to touch something than you continue it in the next number."

"Did—Bill—ever tell you of his first cousin, Lord Tranton?"

"Only that he held down the title and was the dead image of the postmaster at Watsonville. Never passes there but he says: 'Look at that tallow-faced, wall-eyed old——'"

"Hush," said the captain. "Lord Tranton is dead."

"Dead!"

"His two sons with him, and Lady Grace Morrison—William's aunt, you know. All killed in the terrible lift accident at the Hotel des Hesperides in Nice."

"Well, I am sorry," she said, as Anstruther gazed steadfastly at her as though expecting she knew not what. Sorry for anybody that gets killed, you know—especially in an elevator. But, as I didn't know them, you can't expect me to feel very bad about it, can you?"

"Don't you realize how it will affect William?"

"Oh, he'll be terribly cut up about his aunt. She was the only person who was ever kind to him. The only one in England he ever wrote to—or who wrote to him."

"This makes him Lord Tranton," said the captain.

"I suppose it does," she said. "I had never thought of that."

"We've thought of it a good deal," said Anstruther.

"Lord Tranton," she repeated. Then won't his—his wife—be Lady Tranton?"

"That's just it, you see," said the captain. "She will be Lady Tranton."

"What do you mean by 'it?'" said the girl.

"You'll hardly believe it," said the captain, disregarding her question, "but for a time we didn't know where under the sun to find him. They, somebody, said about Lady Grace, you know—I believe it was her maid or housekeeper—and we went over all her letters to try and get track of him."

"Well, you've succeeded," she remarked, as he hesitated.

"We got on the track of something else," he went on significantly. "It seemed—indeed there was no doubt about it—his affections—er—were seriously engaged—er—to a young lady—er——"

"Me, I suppose?" she said quite calmly.

"Yes, you," he returned, "though it is only fair to William to say that his letters were expressed—er—with considerable reserve—with what you might call perfect respect, you know, and all that kind of thing."

"Of course, I know that," she exclaimed.

"It was very alarming," said the captain.

"Who for? For you or the young lady or Bill?"

The captain tugged at his yellow moustache.

"I must really beg your indulgence," he said at last. "I am sure the very last thing in the world I wish to do is to offend you. I had hoped, as I told you, to discuss the matter first with your father."

"We'll just leave Pa out," she said. "It's me that Bill's in love with—not Pa."

"Still its very awkward," murmured the captain. "Very awkward."

"So you read Bill's letters and got quite discouraged," she said, smiling.

"He seemed on the verge of committing an—er—irrevocable mistake," said the captain.

"Is that how you'd describe his marrying me?" she asked.

There was a pause.

"Frankly—yes," said the captain.

"There are people here who think the irrevocable mistake might be the other way," she remarked.

"Then, my dear young lady," he went on briskly, "the people here have your true interests at heart. Believe me, there can be no lasting happiness in a union that involves a great inequality of station. It is currently said that a man raises his wife to his own level, but a knowledge of the world teaches us that only too often he—er—sinks to hers."

"Bill seems quite satisfied to sink," she returned. "In fact, he's been in a panic lest he wouldn't get the chance."

"The Bill of yesterday and the Bill of today are two different men," said the captain. "He has now a great place to fill. He becomes the head of one of the proudest and most aristocratic families in England. It would be too unutterably sad if he failed in the duty he owes both to his class and to his rank."

"His class and his rank never bothered very much about him out here," she said. "They seemed quite happy in fact to be quit of him. He might have starved to death for all they cared."

"I know we lay ourselves open to that imputation," went on the captain, in a tone of depressed suavity, "'But, as the dear duke said in the family council we held at Holderton Abbey, 'Circumstances alter cases.'"

"It's not Bill they're thinking about," she said; "it's their noble and splendid selves."

"They cannot very well detach themselves from the affair, even if they would," continued the captain. "Tranton's disgrace is necessarily theirs."

"If the dear duke doesn't want to know me, he needn't," she retorted, with a heightened color. "If he doesn't want to play in my yard he can always have the aristocratic privilege of staying out."

"Then there's the dowager Lady Tranton," said the captain; "Bill's stepmother."

"She, too, then," said the girl.

"She really feels it more than anybody else," sighed the captain. "The same name, you know—the possibility of mistakes being made—the inevitable confusion of ——"

"It's just what you said before, Captain," she exclaimed mockingly. "It's too unutterably sad, isn't it?"

"I know I am expressing myself very badly," he said. "I told them at the time they ought to choose somebody better fitted for the task than I. But the dear duke was so peremptory, and Lady Tranton cried on my shoulder, and the memory of a lifelong obligation naturally turned the scale—and so here I am, and making a terrible mess of it, just as Whitcombe said I would."

"It was certainly a long way to come just to talk to a girl," she said.

"And then to do it so badly," added the captain.

"I can't see that it's any of their business," she exclaimed.

"I was charged to offer—inducements," said the captain with embarrassment.

"Inducements? What sort of inducements?"

"Oh, I am almost ashamed to say—er—of a monetary nature."

"Well, you ought to me," she said. "How much?"

"Whitcombe said I was to begin at five thousand pounds."

"The point is, where were you to leave off at?"

"Ten thousand."

"Why didn't you say it sooner?"

"The fact is—er—the dear duke thought—er—Whitcombe said ——"

"That you might pull it off without?"

The captain hung his head.

"They must have thought you more of a spellbinder than you are," she remarked cruelly.

"I told Whitcombe myself I was the last man to talk anybody into doing anything," said the captain.

"Well, it's not enough for Bill," said the girl. "The price of a thing is what it's worth to you. Bill's worth lots more than that—to me."

"I will make it fifteen thousand," said the captain hesitatingly. "That is, on my own personal responsibility, subject to confirmation by wire."

"Where's the thing for me to sign?" she asked.

He drew out from his breast pocket a large, important-looking document engrossed on sheepskin. It crackled richly as he opened it and spread it flat with his big hands. It was beautifully glossy, and Helen thought the Declaration of Independence must have looked like it when it was new. She lay back in the hammock, took a chocolate cream, and gave it her disdainful attention. Bill was renounced with a wealth of legal detail that was positively bewildering; renounced from his head to his heels; renounced awake or sleeping or dining out or sitting up with a sick friend; renounced body and soul, alive or dead, positively and explicitly, for all time, past, present, or to come. She couldn't even say good morning to Bill without violating the whole pages of it; she couldn't even send him a post-card without incurring fourteen lines of different kinds of penalties, and the whole thing was inexplicably intertwined with the Lord Chancellor's displeasure and the High Court of Chancery. It reminded Helen, in the profuseness of its reprobation, to the curse of the Jackdaw of Rheims.

"You are to sign at the places marked in pencil," said the captain, who had been watching her out of the corner of his eye and who took it for a good sign that she had read it with such care and patience.

Helen gazed at him and then shook her head.

"I wouldn't give up Bill for all the money in England," she exclaimed. "I wouldn't give up Bill if you threw in the Crown Jewels! I wouldn't give him up if you added Westminster Abbey and the Tower of London and the Beefeaters and the place where Shakespeare was born!"

The captain slowly took back the Declaration of Independence and folded it up.

"I suppose there is nothing more to be said," he remarked.

"Oh, but there is," she retorted mischievously. "I think it's about time to tell you that Bill and I were married yesterday!"

WHAT'S SAID IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 12.—We are just beginning to catch the breath over the sad fate of the Anglo-Saxon race which is soon to be extinguished in America because women are surrendered into bondage via the marriage route. Prof. Larkin of Mt. Lowe told us that the other day he warned us against continuing the institution of matrimony, which he is free to term the crime of the century. At odd intervals of star-gazing at the southern observatory, the professor has meditated on the woes of mankind and after twenty years of reflection has reached the conclusion that marriage is one of the main ones if not the chief one. While many of the married folks may agree with the cracky astronomer that marriage is a failure, statistics seem to prove that it is a popular institution and the records seem to show that three thousand marriages are daily consummated. Marriage was certainly a failure in one case just decided by Judge Sturtevant, where he granted a wife a divorce after she had testified that in eight years her husband had given her a dollar, and in half an hour had borrowed it from her.

The other day some newsboys fought over a cigarette at the foot of Market street, and in response to a riot call twenty policemen were soon on the spot. There were no strike-breaking carmen to be arrested for carrying concealed weapons, so the cops returned to finish the papers.

An effort was made to get Vice President Fairbanks to stay and see "Jimmy Britt" break his wrist on the elbow of Joseph Gans of Baltimo. But His Alternate Highness had other fights to attend, so the promoters had to fall back on Joaquin Miller as ringside attraction. The poet of the Sierras behaved himself during the fifteen minutes of alleged fighting and beyond calling the performance "cheap and vulgar" he did not afflict us with any putrid poetry on the "Wine of Wizard Pugilism." He little knew, however, as he sat near enough to be sprinkled by the Gans saliva between rounds, what a risk he took because of his picturesque appearance. It appears that two of our sharpest confidence men mistook him for a Goldfield miner and were about to assay his ore when they promply gave up the attempt in disgust on learning that he was only a poet.

In addition to making the important discovery that Pugilist Gans is not a ngro but an Arab, Joaquin Miller has severely arraigned our works board for neglecting the City Hall ruins. He says: "There the ruins stand and will stand for man seems instinctively afraid to try and restore what God so utterly destroyed. I believe there is a just and wise God who sits in continual judgment on the cities and nations, but I do not know whether I am a Christian, Turk, Jew or Gentile." Inasmuch as the poet is in so much doubt as to his exact belief, perhaps the members of the works board might be pardoned if they refrained from touching the municipal ruins for fear of sacrilege.

Under the new regime the activity of the police is daily becoming more noticeable as well more commendable. One of our papers has turned over a new leaf and is getting active aid from Police Chief Anderson in fighting the lottery evil. The leaders of the swindling concern have been arrested and there is a possibility that we cannot buy our usual tickets for some time to come. The sword of Damocles was nothing compared to the fate which threatens any one taking human life, for at the Police Station he will not only be charged with murder, but also with having a lottery ticket.

Millionaires are getting tired of being assailed in season and out of season and if the authorities will not enforce the closed season law the plutocrats intend to take the matter in their own hands. The other day a presumptuous attorney from the East bothered one of our extremely wealthy citizens with trying to elicit information about how many millions he had made in a sugar transaction. Fortunately, the memory of the rich man was bad, and the lawyer got negative results. Then an unknown man insulted a young millionaire on the street and was barely saved by his friends from a severe drubbing at the hands of the rich young man and his wife.

Jerome Bassity, once the pride of the tenderloin, under the late lamented Ruef rule, has learned to his sorrow that things are not what they once were. In a playful mood at daybreak the other morning Bassity shot out the incandescent lights in a market and when taken around the corner by a friendly policeman and advised to go home and sleep it off, scorned the tip and advanced on Van Ness avenue, with refilled Colt's and a firm determination to enjoy himself in his own way. After he had shot out a few street lights another policeman arrested him and insisted on taking him to jail, where a further indignity was offered him by the desk sergeant insisting on $50 cash bail instead of letting the distinguished one go his way on his own recognisance.

Double Your Money in Utah Oil!

This 20-Cent Stock Will Not Last Long---Field Now Active---Big Profits Assured.

The first Treasury stock allotment of the Los Angeles-Utah Oil Co. at 20 CENTS A SHARE is nearly subscribed. This money is putting down the first wells.

The great value of the holdings makes these shares worth 60 cents RIGHT NOW.

The price is sure to go up from 20 cents after the oil is reached. Harry Clampitt and a crew are now building the derricks. Oil was struck on adjoining land at only 660 feet depth. This company's camp is equipped to go down 3000 feet, if advisable.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Los Angeles-Utah Oil Company, just incorporated by Mayor A. C. Harper and associates, offers investers a rare chance to make money—the best chance that has been offered in Los Angeles in years.

Mayor Harper and his associates have in this company 1000 acres of the best oil land in the great new oil field surrounding Virgin City, near St. George, in Washington County, southwestern Utah.

The initial allotment of 100,000 shares of the Treasury stock is now being subscribed at 20 cents a share (par value $1.) The early subscriptions, most of them, for 500 shares ($100), have come in very rapidly. Every one of the Directors is convinced that this stock is worth intrinsically more than 60 cents per share right now, based on the actual market value of the company's vast tract of oil land.

It is expected that the stock will double or treble in value as soon as the drills reach the oil.

THIS OIL LAND VERY VALUABLE

This 1000 acres of oil land (nearly two square miles) is put into this company at a cash valuation of $100,000, or only $100 per acre. The Standard Oil Company agents offered $1000 an acre cash for the 160 acres immediately adjoining, which now has a 100-barrel well, and offered $500 per acre for the 800 acres next to it.

This company has received propositions to sell and to lease portions of its land, which are now under consideration, and which, if accepted, ACTUALLY WOULD PAY A DIVIDEND TO EVERY SHARE-HOLDER NOW ON THE BOOKS. This indicates the extraordinary safety and strength of the investment.

We ask you to look into this company. Look into oil companies here generally. Try to buy shares in any straight, legitimate oil company which owns its own land and machinery, and see what you will have to pay for the stock. You will find that the oil business is not only highly profitable, but when properly conducted, is sure, and that no stock can be purchased for anything like 20 cents per share.

LEGITIMATE OIL STOCK GOOD

Just note this fact: That no legitimate oil company stock can be purchased today for less than 200 per cent advance over the price that it was promoted at. The stock that sold when these companies were organized at 20 and 25 cents per share is now worth from 60 to $1.25 per share. In a few instances it has risen in value by 10,000 per cent leaps, but of course these are the rare exceptions.

The men named here who are at the head of this company are men of high standing for ability, integrity, energy and proved business capacity. They are successes—winners.

In buying shares of this first allotment of stock at 20 cents, the smallest holder will secure it at the same price paid by the largest and most influential investor.

WILL RUSH WORK

The machinery is already on the ground. The oil will be reached within a mere matter of days. There will be vigorous, capable management throughout. All stock-holders, small and large, will be kept informed of conditions by periodical official statements.

The money now being raised is to pay for this first development work. The price of this stock, now 20 cents, may be raised to 30 or 40 cents at any time after this first allotment of stock is subscribed, especially in the event that our drills open up superior wells, or if the Directors of the company make highly profitable sales or leases of part of the big tract of land.

The smallest subscription accepted is $50 for 250 shares.

The company is incorporated under the laws of California for $1,000,000, with 1,000,000 shares capital stock, of the par value of $1 each, and with 400,000 shares in the Treasury.

SUBSCRIPTIONS COMING RAPIDLY

The early subscriptions have come in very rapidly, showing a marked popular demand for this investment, commensurate with its merit. The prospect is that the $20,000 to be raised for development work by the first allotment of stock will be over-subscribed just as soon as it is generally known that the shares can be secured.

We recommend that intending investors forward their subscriptions promptly to be in time to secure a portion of the initial allotment at 20 cents.

We are leading the procession, having the best property, and intend to keep the lead. A dozen drilling outfits already are scattered over the field. The Standard Oil Company is exceedingly active, with two Standard rigs on the ground, with drillers from Kansas and Texas, with agents seeking to buy land outright, and surveyors making maps of the field. That means there's oil there—good oil AND LOTS OF IT.

Our camp and equipment have arrived in Utah prepared to sink several deep wells in fast time.

Just watch this stock go up!. Yours truly,

THE LOS ANGELES-UTAH OIL SYNDICATE.

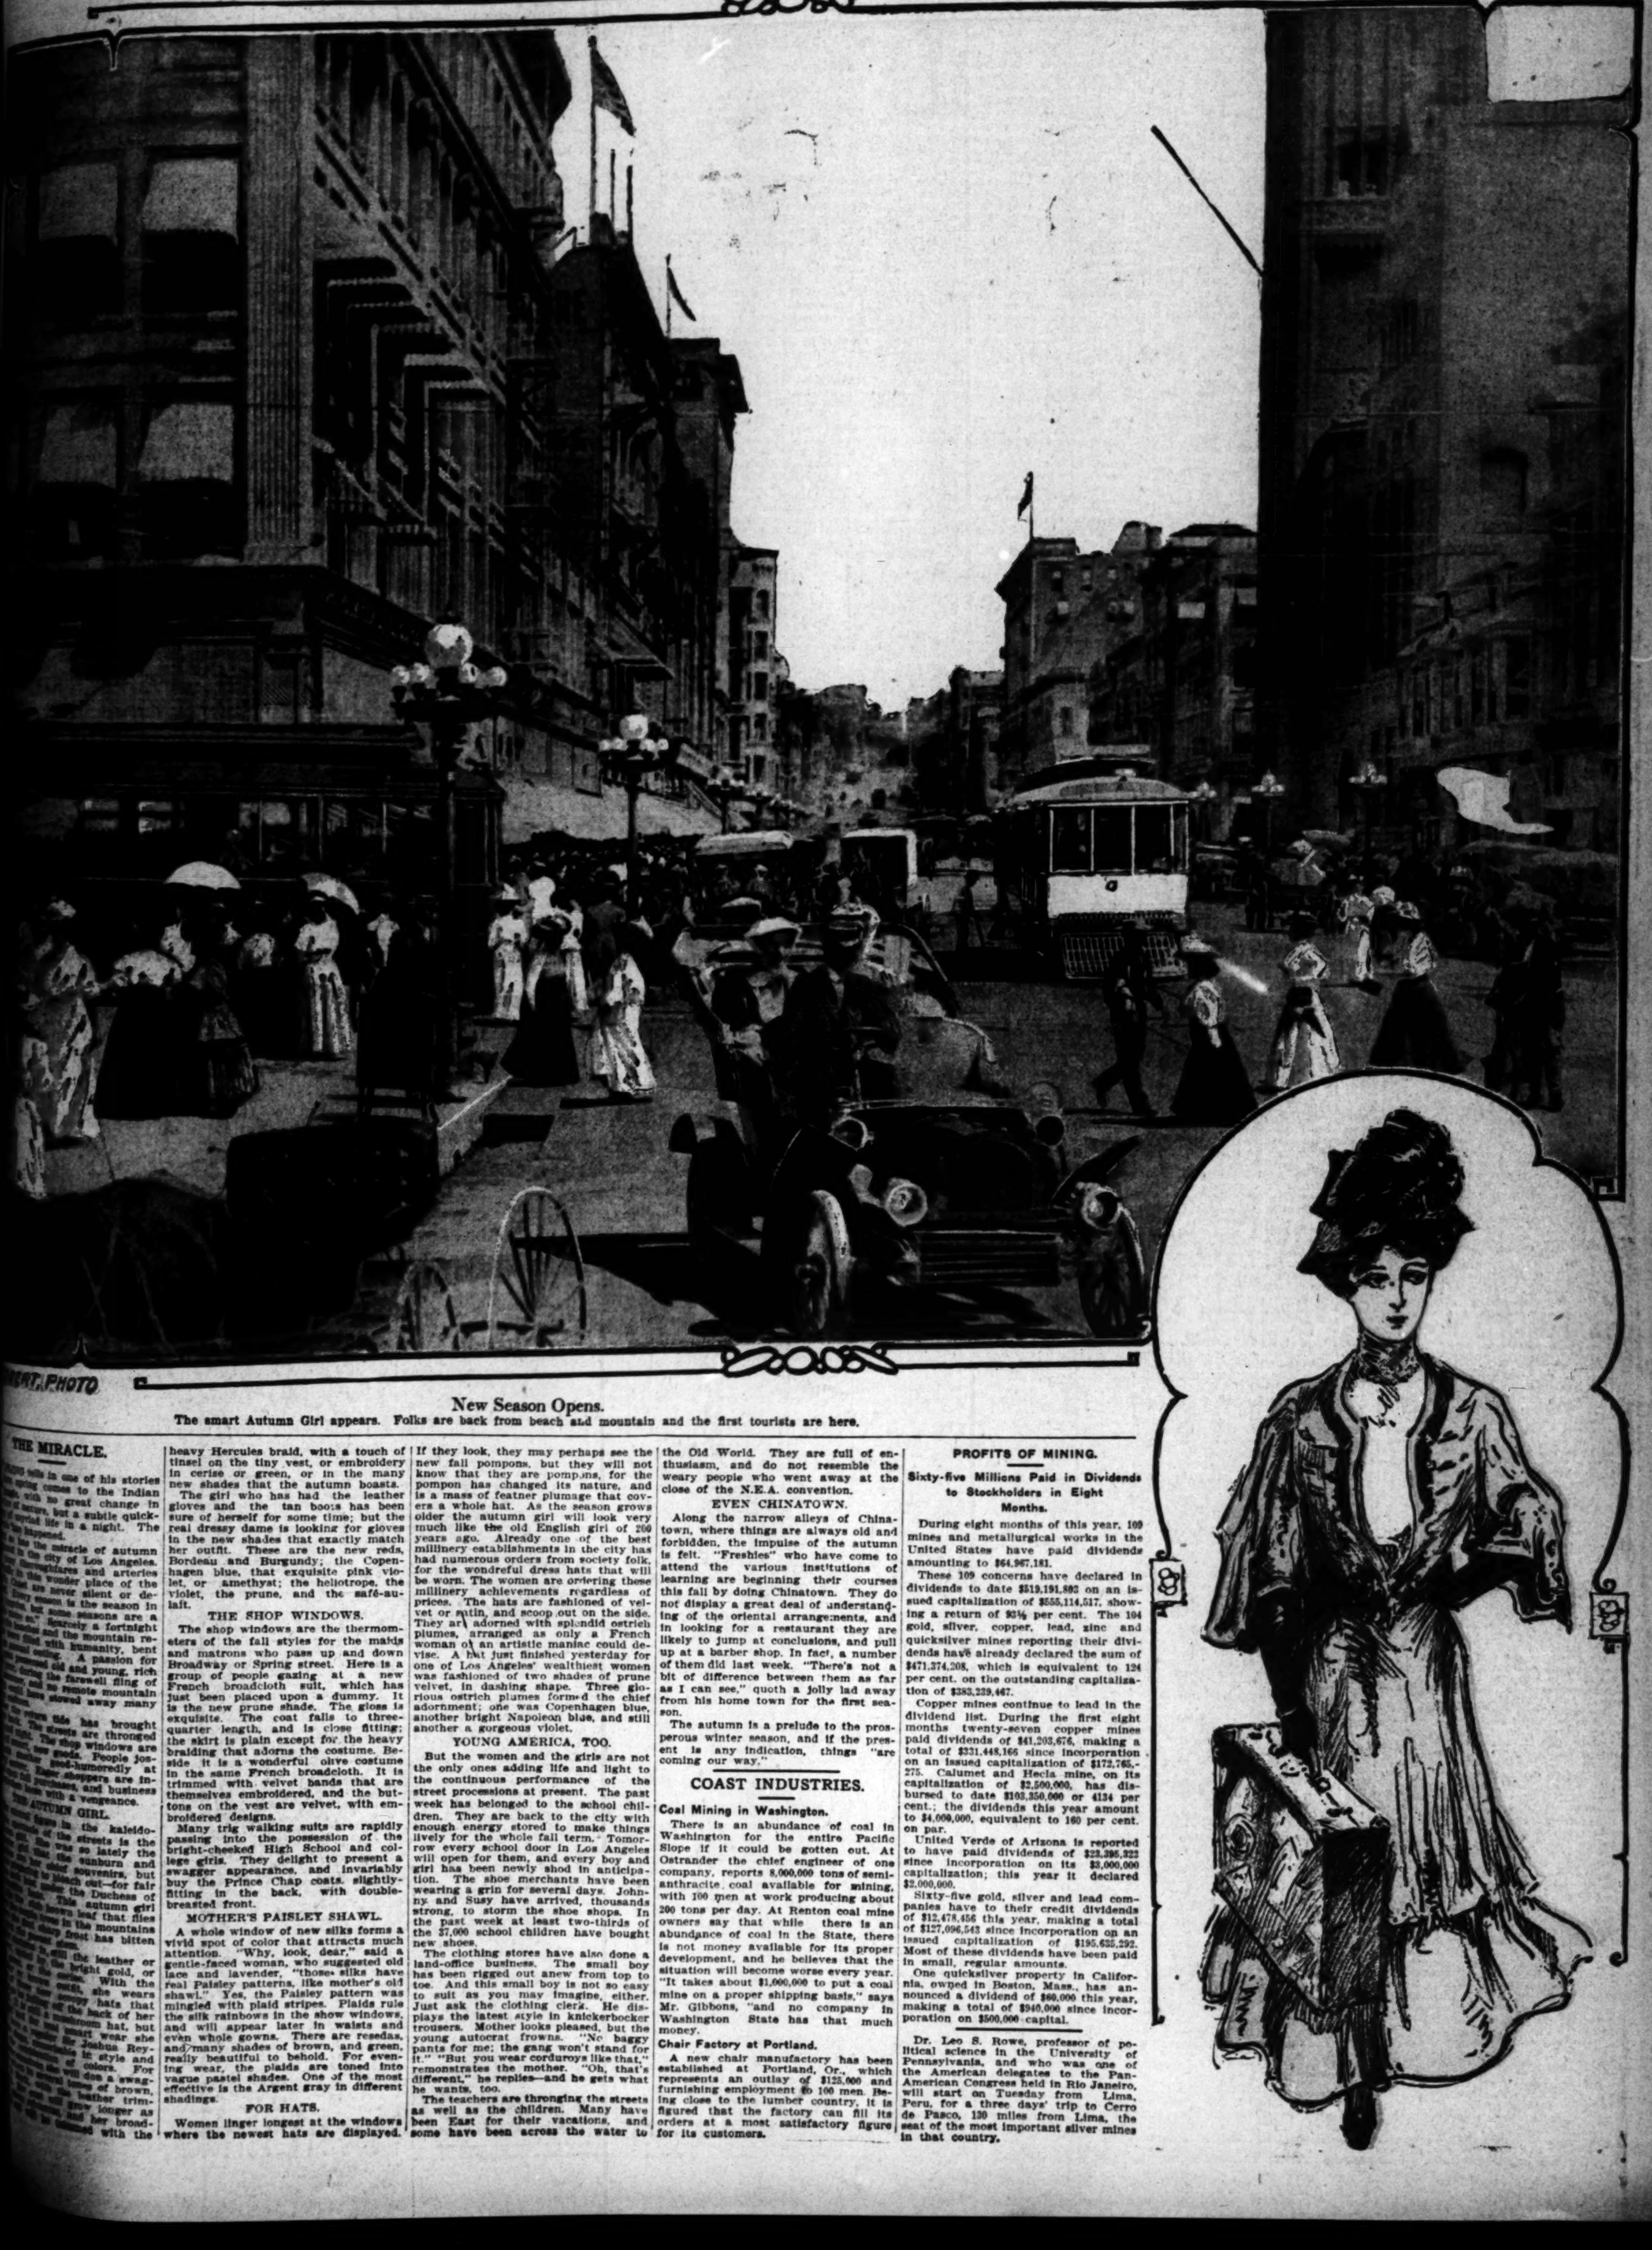
THRONGED SHOPPING DISTRICT OF LOS ANGELES ON SEPTEMBER DAY.



New Season Opens.

The smart Autumn Girl appears. Folks are back from beach and mountain and the first tourists are here.

THE MIRACLE.

[illegible] tells in one of his stories [illegible] spring comes to the Indian [illegible], with no great change in [illegible] of nature, but a subtle quickening [illegible] myriad life in a night. The [illegible] has happened.

[illegible] is the miracle of autumn [illegible] in the city of Los Angeles. [illegible] thoroughfares and arteries [illegible] in this wonder place of the [illegible] that are never silent or deserted. Every season is the season in [illegible], but some seasons are a [illegible] so." Scarcely a fortnight [illegible] beaches and the mountain resorts [illegible] filled with humanity, bent [illegible] annual outing. A passion for [illegible] possessed old and young, rich [illegible], during the farewell fling of [illegible], and no remote mountain [illegible] will have stowed away many [illegible].

[illegible] return tide has brought [illegible]. The streets are thronged [illegible]. The shop windows are [illegible] new goods. People jostle [illegible] good-humoredly at [illegible]. Eager shoppers are intent [illegible] fall purchases, and business [illegible] with a vengeance.

THE AUTUMN GIRL.

[illegible] in the kaleidoscope [illegible] of the streets is the [illegible]. She was so lately the [illegible] that the sunburn and [illegible] her chief souvenirs, but [illegible] to bleach out—for fair [illegible] under the Duchess of [illegible]. This autumn girl [illegible] brown leaf that flies [illegible] trees in the mountains [illegible] sharp frost has bitten [illegible] stem.

[illegible] still the leather or [illegible] by the bright gold, or [illegible] the cerise. With the [illegible] outfit, she wears [illegible] hats that [illegible] of the back of her [illegible] mushroom hat, but [illegible] smart wear she [illegible] Sir Joshua Reynolds [illegible] in style and [illegible] of colors. For [illegible] she will don a swagger [illegible] tones of brown, [illegible] the leather trimming [illegible] grow longer as [illegible] and her broad[illegible] trimmed with the heavy Hercules braid, with a touch of tinsel on the tiny vest, or embroidery in cerise or green, or in the many new shades that the autumn boasts.

The girl who has had the leather gloves and the tan boots has been sure of herself for some time; but the real dressy dame is looking for gloves in the new shades that exactly match her outfit. These are the new reds, Bordeau and Burgundy; the Copenhagen blue, that exquisite pink violet, or amethyst; the heliotrope, the violet, the prune, and the safé-au-lait.

THE SHOP WINDOWS.

The shop windows are the thermometers of the fall styles for the maids and matrons who pass up and down Broadway or Spring street. Here is a group of people gazing at a new French broadcloth suit, which has just been placed upon a dummy. It is the new prune shade. The gloss is exquisite. The coat falls to three-quarter length, and is close fitting; the skirt is plain except for the heavy braiding that adorns the costume. Beside it is a wonderful olive costume in the same French broadcloth. It is trimmed with velvet bands that are themselves embroidered, and the buttons on the vest are velvet, with embroidered designs.

Many trig walking suits are rapidly passing into the possession of the bright-cheeked High School and college girls. They delight to present a swagger appearance, and invariably buy the Prince Chap coats, slightly-fitting in the back, with double-breasted front.

MOTHER'S PAISLEY SHAWL.

A whole window of new silks forms a vivid spot of color that attracts much attention. "Why, look, dear," said a gentle-faced woman, who suggested old lace and lavender, "those silks have real Paisley patterns, like mother's old shawl." Yes, the Paisley pattern was mingled with plaid stripes. Plaids rule the silk rainbows in the show windows, and will appear later in waists and even whole gowns. There are resedas, and many shades of brown, and green, really beautiful to behold. For evening wear, the plaids are toned into vague pastel shades. One of the most effective is the Argent gray in different shadings.

FOR HATS.

Women linger longest at the windows where the newest hats are displayed. If they look, they may perhaps see the new fall pompons, but they will not know that they are pompons, for the pompon has changed its nature, and is a mass of feather plumage that covers a whole hat. As the season grows older the autumn girl will look very much like the old English girl of 200 years ago. Already one of the best millinery establishments in the city has had numerous orders from society folk, for the wondreful dress hats that will be worn. The women are ordering these millinery achievements regardless of prices. The hats are fashioned of velvet or satin, and scoop out on the side. They are adorned with splendid ostrich plumes, arranged as only a French woman or an artistic maniac could devise. A hat just finished yesterday for one of Los Angeles' wealthiest women was fashioned of two shades of prune velvet, in dashing shape. Three glorious ostrich plumes formed the chief adornment; one was Copenhagen blue, another bright Napoleon blue, and still another a gorgeous violet.

YOUNG AMERICA, TOO.

But the women and the girls are not the only ones adding life and light to the continuous performance of the street processions at present. The past week has belonged to the school children. They are back to the city with enough energy stored to make things lively for the whole fall term. Tomorrow every school door in Los Angeles will open for them, and every boy and girl has been newly shod in anticipation. The shoe merchants have been wearing a grin for several days. Johnny and Susy have arrived, thousands strong, to storm the shoe shops. In the past week at least two-thirds of the 37,000 school children have bought new shoes.

The clothing stores have also done a land-office business. The small boy has been rigged out anew from top to toe. And this small boy is not so easy to suit as you may imagine, either. Just ask the clothing clerk. He displays the latest style in knickerbocker trousers. Mother looks pleased, but the young autocrat frowns. "No baggy pants for me; the gang won't stand for it." "But you wear corduroys like that," remonstrates the mother. "Oh, that's different," he replies—and he gets what he wants, too.

The teachers are thronging the streets as well as the children. Many have been East for their vacations, and some have been across the water to the Old World. They are full of enthusiasm, and do not resemble the weary people who went away at the close of the N.E.A. convention.

EVEN CHINATOWN.

Along the narrow alleys of Chinatown, where things are always old and forbidden, the impulse of the autumn is felt. "Freshies" who have come to attend the various institutions of learning are beginning their courses this fall by doing Chinatown. They do not display a great deal of understanding of the oriental arrangements, and in looking for a restaurant they are likely to jump at conclusions, and pull up at a barber shop. In fact, a number of them did last week. "There's not a bit of difference between them as far as I can see," quoth a jolly lad away from his home town for the first season.

The autumn is a prelude to the prosperous winter season, and if the present is any indication, things "are coming our way."

COAST INDUSTRIES.

Coal Mining in Washington.

There is an abundance of coal in Washington for the entire Pacific Slope if it could be gotten out. At Ostrander the chief engineer of one company, reports 8,000,000 tons of semi-anthracite coal available for mining, with 100 men at work producing about 200 tons per day. At Renton coal mine owners say that while there is an abundance of coal in the State, there is not money available for its proper development, and he believes that the situation will become worse every year. "It takes about $1,000,000 to put a coal mine on a proper shipping basis," says Mr. Gibbons, "and no company in Washington State has that much money.

Chair Factory at Portland.

A new chair manufactory has been established at Portland, Or., which represents an outlay of $125,000 and furnishing employment to 100 men. Being close to the lumber country, it is figured that the factory can fill its orders at a most satisfactory figure for its customers.

PROFITS OF MINING.

Sixty-five Millions Paid in Dividends to Stockholders in Eight Months.

During eight months of this year, 109 mines and metallurgical works in the United States have paid dividends amounting to $64,967,181.

These 109 concerns have declared in dividends to date $519,191,882 on an issued capitalization of $555,114,517, showing a return of 93½ per cent. The 104 gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc and quicksilver mines reporting their dividends have already declared the sum of $471,374,208, which is equivalent to 124 per cent. on the outstanding capitalization of $383,239,467.

Copper mines continue to lead in the dividend list. During the first eight months twenty-seven copper mines paid dividends of $41,203,676, making a total of $331,448,166 since incorporation on an issued capitalization of $172,765,275. Calumet and Hecla mine, on its capitalization of $2,500,000, has disbursed to date $103,350,000 or 4134 per cent.; the dividends this year amount to $4,000,000, equivalent to 160 per cent. on par.

United Verde of Arizona is reported to have paid dividends of $23,395,322 since incorporation on its $3,000,000 capitalization; this year it declared $2,000,000.

Sixty-five gold, silver and lead companies have to their credit dividends of $12,478,456 this year, making a total of $127,096,543 since incorporation on an issued capitalization of $195,635,292. Most of these dividends have been paid in small, regular amounts.

One quicksilver property in California, owned in Boston, Mass., has announced a dividend of $60,000 this year, making a total of $940,000 since incorporation on $500,000 capital.

Dr. Leo S. Rowe, professor of political science in the University of Pennsylvania, and who was one of the American delegates to the Pan-American Congress held in Rio Janeiro, will start on Tuesday from Lima, Peru, for a three days' trip to Cerro de Pasco, 130 miles from Lima, the seat of the most important silver mines in that country.

MANSFIELD THE MAN.

BY A NEIGHBOR.

A great deal has been written about Richard Mansfield. But it was of Mansfield the actor, the property of the public, who paid so much a night to sit and watch him recreate the famous characters of drama and tragedy, as only he could, and bring all within the spell of his wondrous power.

But of Mansfield the man, the friends who knew him well can only tell of the love for nature, the passionate longing to be with her in all her moods, the quick understanding, the strong sympathy for anything that was hurt, and, above all, his real sincere loyalty to his friends, his love for wife and child, only they who were with him toward the last and who were in his household and his confidence can give a true picture.

He had a great love for the simple country life that he planned should be his in the end of his days, and when, a few months before he left for England, he called his wife and said to her: "When I die, dearest, I want you to promise me one thing about my burial, and where my body shall be laid. Don't cry over it. I would much rather go than suffer. You will do as I say?"

"Always, always."

"Then don't let them make you think of pomp and all the miserable mockery of putting the dust away, but let me lie where we have often stopped and found peace in the sight of sun shining on the quiet graves, you know where."

"Yes," she said, "I know. In the little old cemetery right here the cemetery that is so near to us. Yes, it shall be so."

It is. The dust of the great actor, the man who brought up art in America to so great a height, the man who worked out his life and his energy in the fulfillment of his ideals, lies in the little God's Acre of an old New England family, the Gardners. Yet in the past there were some hearts among them that thrilled with wider ambitions than the tilling of the soil. It is passing strange that restless spirit should have so hankered after the little quiet haven as did Mansfield.

But it is true. He would never drive past the cemetery without saying to his confidential friends something about it or without glancing at it, even in his gayest moods.

THE STREAK.

Mansfield was born in Heligoland, Germany, in 1857, and spent the first years of his life in the companionship of his mother, imbibing the shrewdness and versatility of the Yankee and the philosophy and grim determination of the German. This is shown in the invincible determination and resolution that marked all his work. They soon began wandering over Europe in obedience to the restless spirit of his mother, and it can be imagined that the boy, imaginable, plastic and receptive, took many ideas then that were never eliminated. He had full opportunity to study human nature in its sincerest and most unadorned moods. He was at school in the great school of life, and it is to this varied career that he owed his ability to read character, to penetrate the motive and get with an enlightenment not often vouchsafed to men, the very essence of the individual or the play. It was this training that made him equally good in presenting a Don Juan, a Chevrial, a Napoleon, a Beau Brummel, a Richard III, a Cyrano de Bergerac, a Shylock, or a Peer Gynt.

Only that imaginative half gloomy and melancholic streak that was in him gave him the real power to understand and portray Peer Gynt. No other can ever take the character and make it live as did Mansfield. It took away much of his lessening vitality.

At the request of his father, who was always interested in him, he was sent, finally, to school in England. He could have taught his staid old teachers much of the world.

His mother was set on his studying art. He did. But it was not painting on canvas, but on the hearts of men that was to make him famous.

Though he had enough of interest in painting and worked hard enough and produced pictures that sold encouragingly for an amateur, his heart was not in the work. He felt instinctively that he could not make a living, still less fame, by the brush, and he threw it up, greatly to the disappointment of his mother. His next effort was a commercial one, and in this he used to recall with delight the success he made as a thorough failure.

The exchequer was low. He was given to understand that as he wished to have his own way, he must depend on his own exertions, and he set out to do so with an odd equipment.

He had received a good musical education. He could play the violin well, and his voice was pleasing and taking. His friends secured him some drawing-room engagements, where his cleverness in singing and depicting characters made him a great favorite. But when society left for the country, his revenue fell off. He was not sufficiently known to be invited down, and then began that terrible struggle of pride and poverty that left an indelible mark on his character.

He walked the streets of London without a penny in his pocket. He slept in an attic, as long as he could, and he earned money when he could by playing in the streets and singing in the music halls. He stuck to his part doggedly, and one day when he was at the very ebb, the tide of his fortune changed.

GOOD FORTUNE.

He had the good fortune to attract the notice of W. S. Gilbert, who was looking for a man to fill a minor part in one of his operas. He told Mansfield at once when he had witnessed his first effort that he could act. Indeed, to all the part assumed such a proportion that the others were dwarfed. Then he knew why he had been fighting fate's battle. He had reached the right path at last.

Mansfield himself told Mr. Gibbs that he had been days with only a crust of bread, days when he debated whether he should not end the game and then would rise to fight again.

He had quite a deal of varied experience in small and some important roles when he made his first appearance in America in 1882. He was very well received, and in less than four years was a star.

In 1883 he got his first great opportunity, when J. H. Stoddard, who was cast by A. M. Palmer for Baron Chevrial in "The Parisian Romance," declined the part. Mansfield, then in a still more minor role, came forward and begged to get the opportunity. It was given him. He stepped on the first round of the ladder of success. His ascent was rapid. There is no need in this article to deal with the public side of his career further.

The one mistake which Mansfield made in his public life was in merging the actor into the manager, but he believed that it was possible to do this and achieve profit. He followed in this act the traditions of Shakespeare, whom he worshiped. Financially he had no cause for complaint, for with his fine artistic soul he had inherited the shrewd Yankee ability to calculate what returns would come from the most apparently daring and extravagant speculation and he generally succeeded. When he didn't, he never displayed the least regret. He was a totally different man in talking business. As soon as that was entered, he became cold, hard, almost like the Shylock of his own creation.

His wife was known on the stage as Beatrice Cameron, but her real name was Susan R. Hegerman, and through deep friendship for her father and family, the late Edward N. Gibbs, a leading merchant of New York and Norwich, came to be the closest of friends in the early years of Mansfield's married life, and all through the life of Mr. Gibbs.

Mansfield and Beatrice Cameron were married in 1892 and his first act was to insist that his wife retire from the stage; not even in private theatricals was she allowed to appear for six or seven years.

They spent their summers with the Gibbs at Pinehurst in Norwich, and at the Eastern Point home of the banker, and there it was that Mansfield first got his great love for New London, where he died.

Their only child was named after Mr. Gibbs and it was when the wife and child and father were together, that the great love he bore for both was apparent to even the most careless observer.

It was a very gay crowd that gathered at the Fort Griswold in the days when Mansfield was on that side. The hotel was under the management of "Billy" Hager, one of the finest hotel men in the country and noted for possessing a wife whose tact was only equaled by her kindness and quick wit. Many of the leading theatrical lights of the day were there, among them Evans and Hoey.

Poor old Hoey, that bubbling spring of mirth, and Evans and Mansfield were inseparables and some one dubbed them the "Three Great Men." Evans was always solemn; never morose or inclined to be reticent, perfectly willing to be drawn into conversation, but always seeming to be carrying the weight of his conceptions with him. When aroused by the pranks of the other two, he would take his part heartily or watch them with smile of content.

Hoey was never still. His brain was a storehouse of fun and his good nature was inexhaustible. He was tender and companionable to the little children and he and Mansfield delighted in giving them pleasure. They gathered all the children in the hotel and taught them plays, and Mansfield, at his own expense fitted up a little theater in the ballroom and coached and arranged the parts in a little play. While in this play, Irene Prayer, who afterwards was his leading lady, attracted his attention and he went to her mother and advised her to have the child educated and he would stand the expense.

Mansfield was fond of practical jokes and played them unmercifully on others but no one but Hoey ever dared to play them on him.

His wit was quick and pungent and he delighted in punning. At that time there was a family of atrocious musicians boarding at the hotel and it was the custom of the members to take possession of the ballroom certain evenings. The orchestra that played, that year was Fred C. Wight's. Wight afterwards became known as composer of the music of Mrs. A. C. Tyler's opera, "The Girl and the Bandit," and is a writer of fine band music. He and Mansfield were friends from the beginning, and Mansfield, who had had an erring love for music, admired Wight's. It is not generally known, but the great actor was very fond of poetry and had written a book which was circulated among his friends. Among the poems were some which Wight had set to music. Mansfield himself had set some of his work to music to airs that were very effective.

"QUITS."

One evening while the family were making night hideous, Mansfield and Wight were sitting together, when a friend approached and said: "For Heaven's sake, what is that noise?" "It is Wight's orchestra," said Mansfield.

"Yes," said Wight, "playing one of Mansfield's compositions."

"Quits," said Mansfield.

On another occasion while waiting for the telegraph operator, Mansfield sat on a pile of papers which the newsboy had just brought into the hotel.

The boy waited a second, then said: "I wish you wouldn't sit on my papers, Mr. Mansfield."

"Why shouldn't I sit on the papers?" asked Mansfield. "They do on me, every chance they get."

His poetic talent he employed in hitting off the characteristics of others and often his friends would be compelled to laugh at something that held up themselves to their own gaze, delivered in the most matter-of-fact manner.

No one could do a more fatal thing than to show that he was afraid of him. This became known to a local gardener who saw that every time Mansfield swore, which was not infrequent when he was trying to have his concepts carried out, those around seemed to be paralyzed with fear. He was in a great rage when he walked up to the gardener and said:

"Why it is that your — idiots cannot carry out what I tell them so plainly?"

"Ah," said the man, "get to the deuce out of here. You are only interfering with the help. I tell you plainly when I'm doing a job, I don't let any —— outsider boss me."

Mansfield looked at him in amazement for a second, then burst out laughing and walked away. That man always got all his trade.

He amused himself by striking terror into those who did not understand him. Having equipped a yacht, he set deliberately to work to make the life of his captain a series of palpitating, bewildered endeavors to ingratiate himself into a favor that never seemed to be his. One summer afternoon, he set out with a party for a sail around the Sound, but the wind died out and they were becalmed. Mansfield walked over to the captain and said:

"Captain, why don't you give us a good sail?"

"We can't sail, sir, when there's no wind."

"But I hired you to sail this yacht," cried Mansfield, assuming his deepest chest tones. "You must sail it, sir."

"But I can't sail it without wind, sir," said the poor captain, actually shrinking before his gaze.

"Then I shall have to discharge you and get some one who can. Whoever heard of a man hiring a sailor who couldn't hoist the wind?"

The captain had a system of grammar that was far from being patterned after Lindley Murray's, and he also had a contempt for the trammels of language. Mansfield would sit beside him for hours and correct his every utterance, with the mischievous air of a big boy on his smooth-shaven face, elaborately begging the captain's pardon every time, until, one day the old salt turned on him and said:

"I dunno as I keer for you for my pilot, Mr. Mansfield."

"Indeed, captain. And why not, pray?"

"Well, we ain't built alike; we never was rigged alike, and we never will be; we don't sail by the same chart; we don't hanker after the same things; my talk's my own. It's different from yourn, and I guess it allus will be. I'm no hand at book talk, but, by the Great Horn Spoon. I can git around the P'int and back agin without no grammar. I'd jest as soon be put in a strait-jacket as to talk like you. Now you lemme steer myself and we'll be mates."

"All right, captain; you are the captain of the deck henceforth."

THE BOY.

Mansfield idolized the little boy who came into his life, nine years ago. And in every way, he is the replica of his father. From the first he took to mimic presentations of life and had his little theater, his toy soldiers and puppets. He is a sturdy, lusty boy, already a fine scholar and possessing his father's force and the sweetness of his mother. He delights in playing soldier and Indian, and carries into his work an earnestness that makes it seem real. A few days before the death of his father he was playing Indian with the gardener's son, and, looking at him, said: "Now, I am going to scalp you."

The boy ran, shrieking, to his mother, who told Mrs. Mansfield, who reproved Gibbs, saying he shouldn't talk as if he meant it.

"Certainly I didn't intend to scalp him, mother, but what was the use of making believe unless I made him believe so?"

"But I don't want you to scare Melchoir, dearest. It makes me sorry."

"Certainly not, mother. I wouldn't make you sorry, anyway."

THE MOTHER

The boy idolized his father and adores his mother. So do all who know her. Not only for her delicate grace and beauty is Mrs. Mansfield liked, but for her permanent good humor. She is always brightly interested in everything that interests her friends, and is willing to help all public and private charities. Her sympathy with young and old is something remarkable, and the devotion she shows to home life utterly refutes the idea that actresses can never be happy off the boards. She is another Mary Anderson.

Mrs. Mansfield was seldom seen out unless in the company of her husband or child, or both. He and she delighted in going out walking with the dog and he always had her with him when he went to the Casino at the beach to take his daily baths. Mrs. Mansfield would remain in the cottage and before he left it, Mansfield invariably bent and kissed her hand. But she was not exempted from his sudden freaks of fancy. One day they were driving up town when he suddenly said that he disliked the jacket she was wearing.

"I would take it off if it were not too cold," she said.

Mansfield said nothing, but as they came opposite a clothing store he gave the signal to the coachman to stop, and alighted. He was gone only a second when he came to the door and asked Mrs. Mansfield to come in. She did with a smile, and Mansfield turned to the clerk.

"There, that white flannel coat is just the thing for her. Put it on."

"But, my dear," said she, "it is a man's coat."

"It was made for a man, but it will be yours when you put it on. Now look at yourself."

She did. The straight lines were very becoming to her slight young figure and she laughed and accepted it.

About five years ago, Mansfield began to be affected by the disease which carried him away. He continued his work, but the pains grew and at last he had to leave off. But though the public were led to believe he would recover he had no such faith after his vain visit to England. His one longing was to get home, back to the New London which he loved.

After leaving Eastern Point the Mansfields came to New London. It did not take him long to see its beauties. He went out on Ocean avenue where, hundreds of feet above the shore, the magnificent panorama of sea and land spread out before his eyes, he worshiped the locality, literally, and would sit for hours on the porch of the Grange, his second home there, looking at sea and land, last year.

He bought a great deal of property as did Mrs. Mansfield, and every thing they did beautified the locality. Then he began the building of Seven Oaks. It was his wish to see it before he died, and the architects hurried the work and full grown trees were transplanted and vines were planted so that when he came it looked as if years of growth were in vigorous foliage and the beautiful trees. The place is a haven of rest and beauty and every detail shows his perfect taste. He liked luxury and yet he loved simplicity. His favorite sitting-room was severe enough in its equipments, yet always had an inviting air.

HIS REGRETS.

His intense paroxysms of pain made him do things that he regretted when they were over. The privations of his early life, the tremendous strain he imposed on himself began to tell. In the fall of 1906, the barn on the property got on fire. Its loss would certainly mean the destruction of Mansfield's own home with its treasures of priceless art and manuscripts and costuming. There was an independent hose company in the colony. The chief ordered it out and the men came rushing to the fire. But Mansfield, with the training of the man who has faced emergencies before, had set every man on the premises to work, and the flames were being subdued. The chief of the independent company interfered and an altercation resulted in which Mansfield, with as little regard for the other as if he were a child, deliberately cuffed him over the face and out of his way.

He wanted to die in New London. He gave up hope in May and simply allowed his wife to believe that he was seeking a cure, when he knew it was hopeless. The fact is not generally known, but Mansfield had a strong leaning to Christian Science, and when in the city, attended its churches. He had a Science practitioner with him for a while.

The Sunday before he died he sat in a wheeled chair on the veranda silent and calm. He seemed to be reviewing his life for he murmured a bit from Baron Chevrial, which was always his best-liked character. He sat out until actually forced by weakness to enter the home which he never left until the end.

It was his desire that his boy, whom he spared all pain, should not be at his deathbed, should remember him as he was, his companion and playmate. To the last, until he passed into the coma of death, the death for which he longed when he saw his case was hopeless, he was considerate, and thoughtful, though bitter, indeed, it was to relinquish the hold on the life which was offering so much to him, the life that he had planned to fulfill.

Never till their own dying day will the influence of Richard Mansfield fade from those who ever knew him, knew him as Mansfield, the man.

CHARLOTTE M. HOLLOWAY.
New London, Ct.

He Needed to Smoke.

Once upon a time, during a strenuous railroad-building battle in the Rock Mountains, Francis Lynde, writer of the new novel, "Empire Builders," was field officer in charge of men-moving. Finding himself at the tracklayers' camp one bitter night, fifteen miles above his base of transportation supplies, he borrowed a construction engine, and with the Irish camp watchman for a helper, started down cañon for a string of empties.

The night was black-dark; the unsurfaced track was as rough as a corduroy road; and the grades and curves were heart-breaking. Very early in the game the substitute fireman lost his nerve. Staggering across the cab, he shouted huskily into the ear of the pro tempore engineer:

"Arrah! Mishter Lynde, 'tis a foine runner ye are entoirely, and I'm sorry to be throublin' ye to stop her."

"What's the matter, Mike? Are you scared?"

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 10.—The centennial of the Declaration of Independence, in Mexico, occurs on September 15, 1910. The struggle of this country for freedom from the control of old Mother Spain commenced on the night of September 15, 1810. The great priest, Miguel Hidalgo y Costillo, on that night roused his parishioners by ringing his parish bell. He then urged them to rise against Spanish control and wipe it off the Mexican continent. With something of the spirit of Patrick Henry he showed to the Indians that thronged about him that thraldom meant death, and liberty meant life. The struggle commenced that night, however, did not definitely triumph until 1821, or nearly eleven years later, when the Mexicans accomplished the task. Under the splendid Iturbide they gave the final blow to Spanish control. But the genetic date of Mexican independence has justly been ascribed to September 15, 1810. Every year at midnight of that date there are characteristic ceremonies in this country and in this capital. The President of the republic appears on the central balcony of the National Palace, and after ringing the old liberty bell which hangs over the facade, he cries, as did Hidalgo: "Long live Mexico!" etc. This year the ceremonies will be somewhat varied on account of the fact that Mrs. Diaz is in mourning and cannot be present at the Presidential reception that night. A mammoth serenade, however, will be given in the center of the plaza, and fireworks will be set off for the edification of the 15,000 or 20,000 people who will throng those historic grounds. The President will give the usual grito, or cry, at midnight, but there will be no official reception.

In connection with the centennial of Mexican independence it is significant that this country is not planning to hold an international exposition. There are many reasons which commend this course. An international exposition, or world's fair, held at this capital on that occasion would involve the national amour propre, and any failure would do immense harm in the country. Failure would be more probable than success, for it would be difficult for Mexico to keep up with the standards already established by Paris, Chicago, Buffalo and other points. This consideration has even prevented some European countries from holding expositions in the near future. In point of romantic interest Mexico can indeed compete with any country in the world, but, on the other hand, it would be probably true that the magnitude of the preparations for a world's fair would be too severe a strain just now on the economic resources of the country. It is doubtful whether the industrial development of Mexico at the present time would efficaciously engage the coöperation of the great manufacturing nations of the world, especially as the world is somewhat weary of expositions on general principles. Some years ago private parties interested themselves in plans for holding a universal exposition in Mexico, among these gentlemen being the late Salvador Malo, Viscount Cornely and John R. dos Passos. Some preliminary work was done on the large Ansures grounds just north of Chapultepec, in the erection of buildings and preparation of grounds. But the government, conservatively and wisely, declined to give encouragement to the gentlemen, and the project fell through. The government considered that success was highly problematical at the present time, and that an unsuccessful attempt would do more harm than good. Meanwhile a building has been erected near the Central Depot, wherein to collect a nucleus for a national exposition. It is possible that the 15th of September, 1921, may witness something definite in the way of an international exposition to celebrate the final triumph of Mexico over Spanish occupation, but at present such a proposition is not practical in this country.

On the other hand, Mexico is in a fever of local improvements, not only in this capital, but in other great cities, where asphalt, pavements, cement sidewalks, electric lighting and electric tram lines are being projected. The country is being, therefore, electrified on a bigger scale than ever before in its history, and by the year 1921 the republic will be in a far more convenient condition for the real celebration of its independence from Spain.

BIG OIL DEAL.

Negotiations are now on between the National lines of Mexico and the Mexican Petroleum Company, Limited, a California concern operating near Tampico. By these arrangements, when completed, all locomotives of the merger lines will use oil for fuel. Thus, two-thirds of the railroads in this country will be supplied with oil fuel. The National lines have been contemplating this move for some time, and are at last getting down to active negotiations. The Mexican Central, which owns one-third of the mileage in the country, or about 3500 miles, is already using about 8000 barrels a day from the Mexican petroleum fields, and the entire amount needed for the merger lines would be about 20,000 or 25,000 barrels a day. The company seems confident of its ability to furnish the oil necessary. It has increased its oil output, and facilities for handling it, and claims that it is in a position to supply the demand made upon it. In some portions of Mexico the objection has prevailed that oil could not be used on account of the many tunnels on the line, but on the Central and other portions which will use oil fuel there are practically no tunnels.

Messrs. Philip M. Keefe and F. M. Main, the former a well-known mining man, and the latter a mining engineer, have just examined the asphaltum deposit on the Hacienda of Palmatalempa, in the State of Puebla. They have a very favorable opinion of it. They found various asphaltum deposits, and examined one small lake about 150 feet in diameter, on the shores of which were large and prominent bodies of solidified asphalt. The product of the lake is carbonaceous compounds of a pitch-like nature, with a very fine black luster, which can be easily extracted and solidified, making a grade of asphalt from which an analysis shows a fineness of 85 per cent. The formations surrounding the deposits are of a porous sandstone, which, from surrounding conditions, show strong indications of petroleum deposits. These beds lie in the same belt as the now famous petrolic and asphalt deposits of Ebano, the oil fields mentioned in the foregoing paragraph. The altitude at the asphaltum lake in Puebla is 500 meters. The superficial area in this vicinity is 1200 hectares, or about 2500 acres. The majority is a very rich soil, susceptible of all classes of vegetation, with plenty of water. There is one water fall of 62 meters, from which about 1000 horse-power can be developed. The gentlemen expect to bore for petroleum, as well as work up the asphalt deposit.

NOTES.

The steamer Strathahan, having on board rails for the Mitchell Mining Company, has just arrived at Acapulco. These mines are located at La Dicha, in the State of Guerrero, and are owned by Californians. The rails have come from Antwerp, and will be used in the construction of the line which the Mitchell company has had under way for nearly a year. The line will give them an outlet for the ore from their mines to the Pacific Coast.

About the 20th of this month, Judge Ignacio Sepulveda and his family expect to start for California. Mrs. Sepulveda, who has been quite ill, is recuperating gradually, and she, with her daughter, Miss Conchita Sepulveda, and her sister, Mrs. George W. West and family, will accompany Judge Sepulveda north. This is Judge Sepulveda's first visit home since leaving, over twenty years ago, and, like Rip Van Winkle, this worthy gentleman, upon whom the snows of time have settled kindly, will find many a change in the old home conditions.

CALIFORNIA RAILROAD AND IRRIGATION PROJECTS.

The following extracts from the 1906 report of the California State Board of Trade are worthy of note.

"The most notable and important movements toward progress in the State, inaugurated in 1905 and actively continued through the year 1906, are railroad building—both steam and electric power—and the construction and extension of irrigation projects. These have a very important bearing upon State development, and will put in circulation millions of dollars and tax the capacity of the State to furnish the required labor.

"Development in Southern California moves along with the rapidity that has characterized that part of the State for many years past.

"Great activity is observable in the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valley regions, and among the northern coast and some of the northern mountain counties.

RAILROAD BUILDING.

"The building of the Western Pacific Railroad through the northern counties is an important movement, calculated to stir the energies of that wonderfully rich country, and awaken its people to the possibilities that lie in it on every hand. Electric roads are projected in many directions through the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys, some of which are under construction. The cities or Sacramento, Stockton and Fresno, through the construction of suburban and interurban lines, are being brought into closer touch with producing centers. It is quite probable that within a very few years these electric lines will have connection with Redding on the north, Bakersfield on the South, Santa Cruz on the coast, the cities of the Sonoma and Napa valleys and the city of San Francisco.

"One electric road has been constructed from Merced into Yosemite Park; a second, viz., from the city of Fresno, is soon to be completed. The expense of visiting that marvel of nature will not hereafter be a barrier to the masses who have not hitherto been privileged to see what opulent travelers have crossed oceans to enjoy. A cross-country electric railway is to be built from Grass Valley to Marysville. Already Chico, Oroville and Marysville are thus connected. Lakeport is to have an outlet through Napa, San Rafael, Tiburon and to San Francisco.

"Branch railroads of the Southern Pacific are being built to the Klamath Basin and to Klamath Falls, to tap the vast district opened to settlement by government reclamation works. It is not improbable that Portland may ultimately be reached by this route and the Siskiyou Mountains be flanked. The Northwestern Pacific Railroad—formerly called California Northwestern—will be extended to Willits, to Eureka, Humboldt county, and not stop short of the splendid redwood forests of Del Norte, and later may thus reach Portland.

"These improvements mean new empires of wealth and thousands of new homes; they mean the development of vast enterprises where partial stagnation existed heretofore, and the opening up to the markets of the world the two largest and most valuable forests on the globe. And, not least, they mean the uplifting and filling with hope and confidence the people of the north coast counties and the northern and central portions of the State, and converting them into active and enthusiastic State builders.

"There is no longer any doubt among landowners that the highest uses of the soil of California can be attained only through irrigation. Much more has been done towards preparation for irrigated farms than is generally supposed. Among the irrigation enterprises in Northern California the most important one in course of construction is the central irrigation canal in Glenn and Colusa counties, on the west side of the Sacramento River. The water is taken from the Sacramento River. The system is designed to irrigate 200,000 acres of land which has heretofore been cultivated almost exclusively to cereals. The works are approaching completion, and considerable land is already being watered by this canal. It would be difficult to overestimate the importance of this enterprise to the people of California.

"Another important irrigation enterprise is by the Butte County Canal Company, which takes its water from the Feather River and conveys it to land in Butte, Yuba and Sutter counties. This system is to cover 80,000 acres and is on the east side of the Sacramento River.

"The Orland irrigation project, under the Reclamation Service—the first unit in the plan for irrigating the Sacramento Valley—is now to be carried forward. The sum necessary for this work, $650,000, has been made available from the United States Reclamation fund, and demonstration of the practicability of irrigation projects under Federal control in that part of the State is to be undertaken at once."

What the great future [illegible] for us along political lines [illegible], but suffice to say [illegible] in the selection of the [illegible] that have presided over the destinies of the greatest nation beneath the sun, the slightest mistake has never been made, because all of these have been strong, courageous Christian gentlemen, each worthy in the fullest sense to merit the confidence of the entire nation. These twenty-one men have, in a period of over a hundred years, conclusively proven that our form of government has long passed the experimental stage. In the period from 1789 to 1904 the Union of States has been put to almost every test that could possibly arise in our national life. The saddest and most crucial period in all these years was from 1860 to 1865. Never in the history of the world did a country experience such a vital test of its positive strength as to the very meaning of the word Union. Happily, over that test—and never forgetting for one moment of time to strew flowers upon the resting places of both the Blue and the Gray—we are forging along at a pace at which the whole world stands in admiration. It should be the highest aim and crowning ambition of every citizen given protection by our flag to see to it that every future President elected by them should be right up to the standard of the past.

NEW CROP.

MUST RAISE CAMPHOR.

CHIEF SUPPLY NOW COMES FROM JAPAN.

In Case of War With That Country We Would Be Handicapped in the Manufacture of Smokeless Powder, Which Is so Necessary in Modern Warfare.

Should this country go to war with Japan, what would we do for smokeless powder?

This is a question of which few people thought, and yet it's a mighty practical query. Smokeless powder has come to be regarded as practically a necessity in modern warfare. No way has yet been found to manufacture it, except with the use of camphor. And Japan has a complete monopoly, up to date, of the camphor market. Upon her Island of Formosa stand the only trees which produce the article in any commercial quantities. And if the Japanese should go to war with the United States, of course one of the first things they would do would be to shut off our supply of camphor. Probably enough could be scraped together in this country to supply the needs of the army and navy for a short war. But a war with Japan wouldn't be short.

Fortunately, there isn't going to be any war with Japan, according to present indications. But wise old Secretary Wilson's Department of Agriculture doesn't propose that this country shall be caught napping in the future, says the Washington correspondent of the Seattle Times. He realizes that camphor might be declared contraband of war, even if we got into trouble with some nation other than Japan, and that consequently our supply might be cut down very seriously. So his department is working upon a scheme to produce camphor in this country, and considerable headway has already been made.

The department's experts have found that the camphor tree will grow in this country, particularly in the southern parts. They have started some of the farmers to growing the trees. The experts in Washington learned some time ago that a Florida man had a camphor tree grove covering forty acres, and that he was about to cut the trees down for firewood. They induced him to let the trees alone, and now that grove is producing quite a bit of camphor.

The Agricultural Department wants to establish a camphor industry in this country which will be quite in contrast to the wasteful methods prevalent in Formosa. There the camphor trees are cut down bodily, and the camphor extracted from the entire tree. This way of doing business is, of course, mighty hard on the camphor forests. Experts here have discovered a better way. They find that a camphor tree can be made to produce an annual crop. They have shown to their own satisfaction that prunings can be taken from a fair-sized tree once a year, and that the camphor can be extracted from these prunings. In Formosa the trees are allowed to grow separately, and to attain great size, frequently being fifty or sixty feet high. The scientists of this country have shown that camphor trees can be made to grow like an ordinary hedge, and that they can be clipped once a year, just as evergreen hedges are trimmed. The annual crop of clippings is the base from which the camphor is extracted.

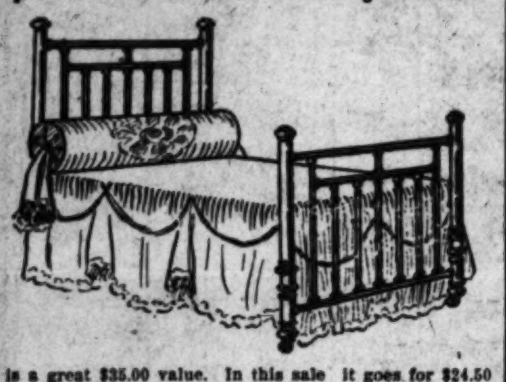
We Are Breaking Selling Records Daily

Every salesman is going the limit every day and we are finding it necessary to employ more of them as the sale grows in volume. Delivery wagons are loaded to full capacity every trip. There's a reason for all this and you will find it on every piece of furniture in the store.

Splendid Brass Bed $24.50



It is a great $35.00 value. In this sale it goes for $24.50 as long as the quantity holds out. The picture above shows the design. You have your choice of the satin or bright finish. This is a rare chance.

Odd Arm Chairs Must Go

We have about 20 designs in arm chairs without side chairs to match. Cost has been forgotten and prices have been made that will sell them out quickly. A few of them:

$6.00 ARM CHAIRS	$4.20
$6.50 ARM CHAIRS	$4.30
$10.00 ARM CHAIRS	$5.65
$8.50 ARM CHAIRS	$5.80

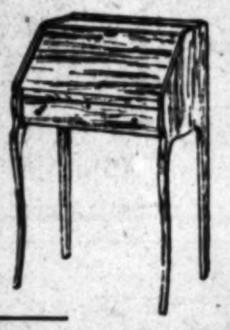
$8.00 House Desks $5.60



We have just received a new carload and they all go in the sale at 30 per cent. less than regular. This one comes in quartered oak and mahogany finish. We challenge you to find its equal in the city at $5.75.

$15 Mission Rocker $10.50

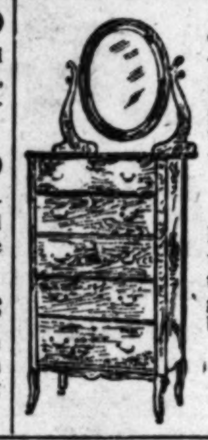
You have the choice of the fumed or weathered finish. The seat is upholstered in real leather, and leather tacked. The chair to match in weathered oak is marked to sell at $7.00.

$32.00 Morris Chair $21.50

We have this chair in both the fumed and weathered finish. The cushions are real leather and you have your choice of several colors. The frame is made entirely of quarter sawed oak.

$14.50 Serving Table $9.75

One of the snaps of the sale. Comes in both golden and weathered oak, quarter sawed in either case. Plenty more bargains in serving tables.



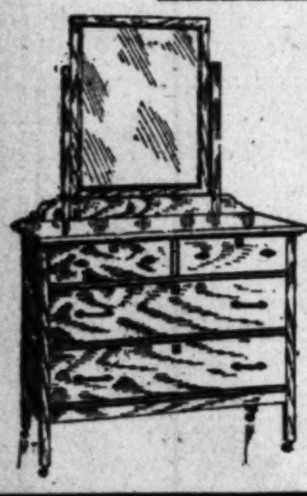
$18 Oak Chiffonier $12.60

This chiffonier is made entirely of solid oak and it is made right. The mirror is heavy beveled plate. There are five roomy drawers and the top one is divided. The same design in pine would cost you more at other stores.

10.00 Iron Bed $6.95

It is one of our regular stock designs, staple as wheat. We offer you a saving of $3.05. How's that for price cutting? Your choice of green and gold or cream and gold. If you want real bed bargains come here.

Big Reductions in All Brass Beds



$20 Mission Dresser $12.75

Just as you see it in the picture on the left—pure Mission in design and made entirely of solid oak. The finish is the real weathered, not a cheap black stain. We have the chiffonier and washstand to match at bargain prices.

$32.50 Princess Dresser $22.50

You can have this Princess dresser in birdseye maple, quartered oak or mahogany finish. It has the full serpentine front with top drawer divided. This is the large size, the mirror being practically as large as a cheval.

$4.25 Iron Bed Cut to $2.95

When you are comparing this with other low priced beds, please consider that the braces at both head and foot are angle iron. That means strength. We have it in green and white. The knobs are brass.

MINES AND MINING—Past Week's News of the Surrounding Ore Distr

IN THE EARTH.

RARE MINERALS, METALLURGY AND CHEMISTRY.

To Correspondents:

This department is not conducted for pay. Its object is to convey reliable information of interest and value to the public, and it is not for the private benefit of any miner, collector, speculator or prospector. Correspondents are particularly cautioned to take careful note of the statements and injunctions contained in the paragraphs below.

(1.) Specimens must be small and bear a tag giving name and address of sender, and the general—not exact—locality from whence the specimen was taken, also the name of it as nearly as the sender knows. Send, also, with the specimen a clearly-written letter briefly describing the find and what the finder wishes done with it. The letter must be properly dated and plainly signed.

(2.) No attention will be paid to anonymous letters or to letters signed merely with initials.

(3.) No examination of samples or specimens will be made in cases where The Times may decide that the specimen and inquiry are not of public interest. This office does not undertake to perform the work of an assay office.

(4.) Inquiries relative to matters of purely personal interests will not be answered.

(5.) When no response to an inquiry made or specimens sent appears in these columns, the inquirer will understand that his inquiry does not come within the purview of this department.

(6.) It is impossible to return specimens, as they must necessarily be destroyed or impaired in the process of analysis.

Address invariably, The Times.

Gannister.

CORONA, Aug. 23, 1907.—[To the Editor of The Times:] In this box please find an ore sample from near Osceola, Nev.

I believe the material is suitable for commercial purposes, probably as fire brick.

Please give me some information on the mineral.

With diffidence, I respectfully ask for another favor. A couple of years ago there was a Russian process tested in the United States for the manufacture of retorts, etc. Can you give me an outline of the process and the materials used therein?

Thanking you most kindly for such facts as you may give me, I subscribe myself

Fraternally yours,
T. B. H.

ANSWER.—The specimen by you submitted is a good grade of gannister. It is "a refractory siliceous cherty stone mixed with fire clay, used for lining Bessemer converters and for macadamizing roads."

There are many processes for manufacturing crucibles and retorts. Paul Klein, Riga, Russia, obtained United States patent No. 787770, which is a "process for manufacturing fire bricks, crucibles, retorts or other refractory articles," and is "a process consisting of pulverized chrome ore, separating the easily fusible admixtures therefrom, mixing the chrome ore thus obtained with pulverized fire clay and with pure hydrate of alumina, molding and pressing and then burning such mixture."

This may not be the Russian process of which you desire information but it ought to be a good one for the purposes indicated.

Wet Processes for Gold.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am a metallurgist, and take great interest in your "In the Earth" department. Will you give me some of your processes for testing gold ores?

With this I am sending you a piece of rock which I would like to have classified. I obtained it on a recent trip near Lida, Nev.

Thanking you in advance for a reply,

Yours truly,
J. J.

ANSWER.—The editor of this department of The Times possesses no process that would not be freely given. There are many ways to test for gold, and very many of those ways are of but little practical value. Where panning gives no results, try the following: "Pulverize the mineral finely; add a dozen large flakes of iodine and about the same number of potassium iodide granules; then about four ounces of water. Shake or stir and let stand for a few hours. Take a piece of thin white blotting paper and saturate with the solution of iodine. Let the paper dry. Burn it and examine the color of the ashes. If purple, the mineral will contain some gold; if the paper is gilded, the mineral will contain much gold."—[Mining Reporter.

In the past twenty years metallurgy has made some little improvement, and, like the subject of medicine, there is a vast field for more improvement. Chemistry seems to be at a point where it is well not to think too lightly of reactions that a decade ago would be regarded as the whims of alchemistry.

There are patient laborious students, now, hard at work, with but little money and less food, who are seeking for the advanced chemistry. There are designing, well-fed and pampered humbugs who claim all knowledge of chemistry, to the extent of "asserting their ability" to obtain great values where the ordinary chemist can obtain but little. The latter class of men work secretly, and their processes are secret for the manifest reason that they cannot, by a practical, open test, "make good."

When one is out on the hills and gold ore is obtained, try the method following: If the ore is a sulphide, arsenide or antimonial one, give it a good, clean, sweet roast. If it is oxydized, pulverize it, and have your roasted samples pulverized also.

Now, place in a bottle (half a pint capacity) two ounces of the powdered ore, add water (in volume) as much in space as that occupied by the ore; add 10 per cent. (volume) strong hydrochloric acid, and then add quicksilver (mercury)—in volume—about one-half a teaspoonful.

Place the bottle and contents in a warm place (in the sunlight will do,) shaking occasionally. Next day shake again several times, then pour off the supernatant liquid and, carefully, save all of the mercury (amalgam.)

From a piece of sheet iron (old stove-pipe will do) make a little pan, in measurements two inches square and one inch deep. Hammer the corners tightly and place the amalgam in the pan. Set the pan and contents on the edge (at first) of a hot kitchen range or camp-stove; on top, of course. When the attached water is evaporated, push the pan and contents where the heat is greatest, and over the pan and contents place an ordinary Macbeth lamp chimney supported on two nails, one at each side of the pan. Cover the top of the lamp chimney with a dampened cloth and occasionally add water with a teaspoon to the cloth during the retorting. When the process is complete, metallic gold (if any in the ore) will be found in the little pan, and the quicksilver can be saved by brushing it, with a feather, into a saucer partly filled with water, and likewise that from the under part of the cloth also. This is a practical and interesting test, costing but little. It is not much on "style," however.

Your rock sample is melaphyre, a basalt that has undergone considerable alteration.

Bismuthinite.

MILFORD (Utah) Aug. 22, 1907.—[To the Editor of The Times:] This sample of bismuth ore is from near Beaver. Will you tell me its mineralogical name and describe it?

Yours truly,
A. T. F.

ANSWER.—The specimen is steel gray in color and shows a blackish streak. Hardness, 2.6. Brittle. Sp. gr., 6.6. Fumes of sulphur are given off in the open tube, with heat, leaving a whitish sublimate. The mineral is soluble in nitric acid and by largely diluting with water a white precipitate falls. The name of the substance appears in the subheading and is bismuth sulphide carrying approximately 81 per cent. of bismuth and 19 per cent. of sulphur.

Fuller's Earth.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 24.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I know but very little of mineralogy, but I am getting interested. A rancher near Imperial sent me some samples of earth recently, and among the samples I find one that simply slides to pieces in water without becoming muddy. It looks to me like a grease of some kind.

I shall await an answer from you. What is it, anyhow

Yours truly,
W. Y.

ANSWER.—The material is greenish brown in color; opaque, dull, soft and possesses a greasy feel. Fracture earthy. Does not adhere to the tongue. Dropped into water, it falls into a pulpy powder and does not form a paste with water. It is a hydrous silicate of alumina and is known as "fuller's earth."

Years ago the material was in great demand for "fulling" cloth, etc., but now the consumption of the earth has greatly fallen off for the reason that a more satisfactory substitute is manufactured.

Some of our greatest abattoirs use fuller's earth of a high and peculiar grade, through which lard and other grease is filtered, as it were. One of these abattoir companies owns a fuller's earth deposit in California.

For present-day consumption, the material used commercially (and almost exclusively) as fuller's earth must come up to the standard for "filtering oils."

Your sample does not come up to the standard called for.

Mohawk Stockholders Decline to Exchange for Merger Shares—The Monthly Dividend of Mohawk-Jumbo—Suit Against President of Stock Exchange.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 12.—The declaration of its maiden dividend by the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company scheduled for a meeting to have convened on the last day of August, has been postponed until there shall be reached a perfect and binding agreement with the miners who walked out of the Mohawk mine and the Combination mine and mill on account of their objections to the system of change rooms in vogue.

In August the several Consolidated mines produced more than 11,000 tons of ore that averaged better than $100 per ton. The heaviest contributors were the Combination and Mohawk mines and the Mohawk-Combination lease, the output of this lease alone being valued at more than $300,000 for the month. It is because of the fact that the Mohawk is the heaviest of Consolidated's producers that many holders of that stock have declined to turn in their shares for merger stock, anticipating a larger dividend on Mohawk than upon Consolidated. On the Laguna the Tonopah Leasing syndicate is installing pumps to drain its 300-foot shaft, which will be sent to the 500 level in search of the Rep Top vein.

FLORENCE LEASES.

Four leases on the Florence are making regular shipments while the parent company is devoting its whole energy to the building of a big mill for company use. The regular shippers are the Florence L. and M., Little Florence, Mohawk Florence and Syndicate, no consignments having been sent out by the January Jones lease since June.

The latest achievement of the Little Florence lease was the tapping of three feet of free gold all-shipping ore by the west crosscut on the 400-foot level. The Syndicate lease, promoted by the Stewart-Warner company, who also own the Rosebud on the Consolidated, adjoining, is following ore that ranges in average value from $200 to $300 per ton. The Florence L. and M. lease, recently acquired by Monnette of Mohawk fame has upraised from the 272-foot level into three feet of $250 material, which may be found to be the old Reilly shoot that yielded over a million dollars in three months. Some high-grade is found on the 150-foot level at the Chicago Florence lease, which, as is true of the Pollard and Kirby, also, promises to advance into the shipping class in another month.

MOHAWK-JUMBO DIVIDEND.

On the Wedge claim, owned by the Jumbo Extension, four leases which are regularly in the high grade market are the Frances-Mohawk, Higginson, Mohawk-Jumbo and Mohawk Ledge, the banner August record having been made by the Mohawk-Jumbo, which shipped nearly 3000 tons, the last twelve lots having averaged $89.25 per ton. That lease has now struck at 500 feet depth five feet of the same sort of ore that yields so handsomely on upper levels, and on September 25 it will hand out its second 10-cent dividend, such disbursements to be monthly thereafter. Ore at 400 feet on the Mohawk Ledge runs better than $100 the ton, and Frances-Mohawk is gaining depth on the bodies which give alluring returns at 365 feet. A crosscut on the 300 level at the Jumbo Extension L. and M. lease or the Poleverde claim is in quartz that promises to make those diggings profitable within a short time.

PROSPECTS AND STRIKES.

The only August shipment from the Daisy was made by the Todd lease, which at 250 feet is crosscutting for the rich ore uncovered on the 200 level. The reserve in sight is enormous, the average is upward of $150 per ton, the lease has a long time to run and there appears every reason for the prophecy of dividends before its expiration.

On company account eighteen miners are drifting on the 400 level at the Kewanas, where there was made a recent strike of gold and copper ore and where several leases are active.

An increasing flow of water is one of the developments on the Rochester taken as an evidence that the high-grade Etawanda fissure is near the face of the crosscut. At divers points the Rochester has exhumed fine milling stuff and some shippable ore.

The Todd lease on the famous old Simmerone, which was one of the earliest producers of the camp, has projected its drift on the 250-foot level into a face that averages $54 per ton and the management is sanguine of opening the same body that made the mine noted three years ago.

Silver Pick Triangle is in trouble. Suits have been brought against President Edward T. Patrick of the Goldfield Stock and Exchange Board, who is one of the directors of the company, the plaintiffs alleging that he made misrepresentations in the promotion of the stock.

SEARCHLIGHT DISTRICT.

Blossom Mine Making Good—Merger of Three Promising Groups.

SEARCHLIGH (Nev.) Sept. 12.—A three months' lease has been secured by the Blossom Mining Company on the mill of the Searchlight Mining and Milling Company, and operations will start within a week. This mill is situated within a few hundred yards of the main works of the Blossom. Failure of the present Searchlight pump to handle the flow of water and the length of time required to receive a larger one from the East are the circumstances which made possible the securing of the lease.

With the Searchlight mill in operation, the Cyrus Noble mill, which the Blossom has also leased, will be halted for repairs. After that, both mills will be run the full twenty-four hours to their full capacity. It is estimated that the combined output of the two mills will be in the neighborhood of $25,000 a month. The purpose of Manager Perew's visit to Los Angeles last week was to secure figures on new equipment. This, he states will begin to arrive in a short time, and will be ready to go into commission by the time the present mill leases have expired. This equipment is to be electrical throughout, and will consist of a hoist, compressor, pumping and lighting plant. There will be a Cornish station pump for sinking and a triplex electric for raising to the surface; also two gasoline engines and two electrical generators, so that either set can be operated separately or either engine attached to either generator. Lastly, the company will erect its own stamp mill.

Report has it that "Sandy" Harris has made a new strike on his Eldorado property. From the surface, in an entirely new place, he is quarrying and sacking ore which is said to be worth $400 a ton. The ore is described as being a decomposed quartz-porphyry, and of unknown extent. It appears to cover an entire hillside. The ore has been run over repeatedly, its discovery being the result of a casual panning.

The Black Hawk Consolidated, at Eldorado Cañon, has an addition of five feet of high-grade ore showing in the face of the east drift on the 170-foot level. The work of assembling the mill is going forward steadily, and the stamps will be ready to fall within thirty days.

Under the name of the Nevada Consolidated Mining Company, three important local properties have been merged. These are the Searchlight-Western, Nevada-Searchlight, and one of the claims comprised in the group of the Searchlight Mining and Milling Company. The property controlled by the Consolidated consists of eighteen claims. The Nevada-Searchlight, comprising two claims, adjoins the Duplex to the north. These claims are part of the townsite, forming a residence section. Development consists of several shafts, the deepest of which is over 200 feet. The Searchlight-Western, fifteen claims, lies farther to the north, being adjacent to the Colorado Mining and Milling Company. On this group a shaft has been sunk to a depth of 300 feet, exploiting a very large vein of low-grade ore. Also the company has secured a three years' lease on one claim of the Searchlight group. Economy of operation is one of the benefits to be gained from the consolidation.

At the Nippeno mine, in the Crescent district, there are at present 240 sacks of high-grade ore ready for shipment, and the ore in the mine is maintaining a uniform richness, a great deal of it showing quantities of free gold.

The Crescent-Searchlight Company has resumed operations on the Legal Tender mine. This is one of the old-time producers of the district, and years ago had a mill just south of where the present town of Crescent stands.

GOLDFIELD STOCKS.

Decline and Advance of Prices for the First Week of September.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 12.—The entire market on the Goldfield Mining Stock Exchange closed at the end of the first week of September more than 9 per cent. net above closing quotations of stocks for the last week of August.

Forty-three different issues recorded sales on both those weeks which ended on August 31, and September 7. Six of these declined an average of 7.87 per cent. Five remained unchanged. Thirty-two advanced an average of 13.87 per cent.

FAIRVIEW DISTRICT.

Shipping Ore Found in the Fairview Eagle Mine in Wide Ledge.

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 12.—Fairview district, in Churchill county, Nevada, is claiming a large share of the attention given outside camps by mining men of Goldfield. The most recent advices received from the Fairview Eagle are to the effect that the big ledge, tapped at a depth of 200 feet, has been stripped since the strike, is found to average sixteen feet wide, and will pay to ship without sorting. Machinery is being installed to care for the flow of water that was encountered with the fissure and the management is preparing to employ as many miners in sinking and drifting as the diggings can be made to accommodate.

Adjoining the Eagle is the Fairview Aztec, under the same manager as the Nevada Hills. Water is coming into the company shaft on the Aztec and those in charge are convinced that they are nearing the east extension of the Eagle ledge.

Another property under virtually the same control as the Eagle and Aztec is the Fairview Climax, on the strike of the Eagle ledge and farther northeast than the Aztec. As rich float as was ever picked up in the district comes from the Climax and there is now being made a strenuous effort to find its source.

THE SLUMP IN COPPER.

REDUCTION OF OUTPUT OF THE DOUGLAS SMELTERS.

Depression Thought to Be Temporary, but Causes Uneasiness. Tombstone Mines Getting Into Rich Ore—Copper Glance in Old Dominion—Sale of Lease on Silver Queen.

BISBEE (Ariz.) Sept. 12.—The slump in copper values is causing deep uneasiness locally. Though it is felt that any depression would be but temporary and that the great mines of the district would continue to turn out ore in increasing quantity, the prospect for the near future is not an encouraging one. At the Copper Queen smelter, at Douglas, four furnaces have been hung up, leaving only six at work. Almost the regular shipments of ore are sent down from Bisbee, however, much of it going into the vast stock piles. Custom work is to be cut down in the same proportion, and the works will receive only about half of the usual consumption of outside ores. This will particularly affect the Imperial mines at Silver Bell and the Shattuck at Bisbee, which have been shipping 200 tons each per day. The monthly pay day, early this week, turned half a million dollars loose in Bisbee, and the management of the Copper Queen has made announcement that there will be little reduction in the working force at the mines for sixty days to come. A considerable number of miners are to be put upon strictly development work. But after two months of this, according to General Manager Walter Douglas, "We shall retrench by cutting off a large number of miners." He stated that his company's metal product would not be over 60 per cent. what it was in August, and that it would continue to grow smaller for months to come. At the smelter, 150 men, mainly Mexicans, have been discharged, and more are to go after completion of improvement work now in progress.

Four furnaces, the usual number, have been in operation steadily at the Calumet and Arizona smelter at Douglas, turning out converter copper at the rate of 4,000,000 pounds a month. There has been no curtailment of production by this company, but it generally follows the lead of its greater neighbor.

There has been no intimation of possible lowering of wages, yet it is appreciated that the present high wage scale was to continue in force only while copper remained above 18 cents a pound.

Added to the other troubles of the copper miner, announcement has been made of a raise in the freight rate on eastern coke of $1.39 a ton, effective to El Paso. This will make little difference to the Douglas smelters, which get their coke mainly from the Phelps-Dodge kilns in Northern New Mexico.

For some time work has been in progress on a long drift, driven from the Higgins shaft into ground of the Wolverine and Arizona Company, to strike an ore body located by means of a diamond drill. Last Friday the face of the drift passed into a good body of copper ore, fully 125 feet from the drill hole. It is believed that the whole distance yet to be driven will be in solid ore.

TOMBSTONE BONANZAS.

It is told that the forty-stamp mill of the Consolidated Company at Tombstone is turning out over $100,000 a month, in addition to the income secured by shipping the better ores to El Paso. Much of the stuff going through the mill is from the old dumps, rejected when ore that ran much below $50 a ton was considered "waste." The main problem is the pumping, about 6,000,000 gallons being raised daily, at an expense for oil fuel alone understood to be over $40,000 a month. In the development work on the lower levels, rich ore is being found continually and there are many of the old miners who believe that the drifts will yet penetrate gold-silver ore bodies rivaling those that once were the wonder of the mining world.

A ledge of red oxide of unknown width has been struck on the Valenzuela mine, twenty-five miles northwest of Benson, in a tunnel that is being driven to strike the main lead of the property. The new ore body is a "blind" one, the miners expecting to pass through 100 feet of limestone before reaching the main ore shoot.

A concentrator, with 1000 tons daily capacity, has been ordered for the mines of the Mineral Hill Consolidated Copper Company, eight miles from Twin Buttes camp, Pima county. All ore mined from this date on is to be stacked awaiting completion of the concentrating plant.

NORTHERN COPPER CAMPS.

The highest grade ore ever known in the copper mines of Globe district was found a few days ago on the thirteenth level of the Old Dominion property, where a drift passed through eighteen inches of glance and native copper that averages from 40 to 70 per cent. metal. The month's production of copper is expected to be about 3,500,000 pounds, the same record that has been maintained for several months past.

For the fiscal year of the Shannon Copper Company, ending with August, the net earnings are reported to have been about $800,000, beside the retirement of $100,000 in bonds, the building of a great concentrating mill and extensive additions to the smelting plant.

A large force has been put at work on the new placer strike on the Ray ground, above Kelvin, and much of the dirt being washed is paying $3 a yard. The dirt is carried by burros to Mineral Creek, 500 feet distant, where it is being put through sluices. The work is in charge of Edward Costello, one of the men who have leased the ground from the Ray company.

The Casa Grande Development Company is the style of a corporation organized by H. B. Hovland, H. A. Smith and several other Bisbee men, to work 850 acres of copper ground secured by the purchase of an old mine thirty miles south of Casa Grande station and within Pima county. The property has been opened up in a desultory sort of way, with about 4000 feet of tunnels, shafts and drifts, sampling through the workings, showing considerable ore having value running from 7 to 15 per cent. copper. On the property is an old, twenty-ton smelter, but of little value.

At a meeting of the Queen Copper Company, held last Saturday at Superior, it was voted to sell the company's lease on the Silver Queen mine, together with ownership in five adjoining mining claims, for a consideration approximating $100,000, which would realize about 2 cents a share on the capitalization. About a year ago these shares sold as high as 20 cents. The Queen during the year has shipped some phenomenal ore, running over $10,000 to the carload, and the lower levels, which have been allowed to fill with water, are understood to be extremely rich. Work lately was suspended on a tunnel which was to drain these lower levels, and the shipment of ore was discontinued, though a payment of $25,000 on the lease will fall due in January. The sale of the lease has been engineered by President Fisk, who has just returned to Superior from the East.

CORN SPRINGS MINES.

Little Known Desert District Shows Some Good Gold Prospects.

Corn Springs is a new district located some 180 miles from Los Angeles in the Chuckawalla Mountains, and distant from the station of Salton on the Southern Pacific railroad about thirty or forty miles. The country is heavily mineralized in a granite and porphyry formation, gold predominating with silver, lead and copper.

Though the district may be termed "new" to mining investors, it has been known for the past nine or ten years. It has been little prospected as yet on account of its apparent remoteness and lack of knowledge of its water resources; however, as the roads and water holes have recently been marked with county sign-posts, prospectors are gradually drifting in from Arizona and Nevada. At present a great deal of attention is being paid to the dry placers, which are now being worked in the near vicinity.

Many hundreds of tons of ore, running in value from thirty to several hundred dollars per ton, have been shipped to the smelters in El Paso and in San Francisco. So far as opened up, the ledge from three to WORKERS' PAGE—Maine Crustaceans Coming to California Coast Waters.

FOR NEW INDUSTRY.

EASTERN LOBSTERS FOR THE PACIFIC.

ANOTHER attempt will be made this month, says the San Francisco Chronicle, to plant the common lobster of the North Atlantic —the homarus Americanus of the scientists—in Pacific waters.

Few attempts have already been made, most of them in conjunction with the California State Fish Commission, to transplant the lobster to the western coast of the United States in localities ranging from Puget Sound to Monterey bay, but as far as is known, the attempts have been failures, although it is possible that there may be limited numbers of the crustaceans alive and breeding in Monterey bay, San Francisco bay off the northern and southern coasts. Inasmuch as the fishermen of the Pacific do not use any contrivances akin to the lobster pots of the eastern fishermen, they are not in a position to take lobsters except by accident.

The lobster is found on the eastern coast from Delaware north, and it is said that he is absent from southern waters because the temperature is too warm for him. There is a lobster on the southern coast and on the Atlantic coast of Europe which is similar to the lobster or crawfish, known to the piscatorial craft as the California or rock lobster, and scientifically as the panulirus interruptus. It is not related to the eastern

The Fish Commission possesses specially constructed cars for the transportation of fish, and it is one of these cars that has been selected for the transportation of lobsters intended to stock Pacific Coast waters. The lobsters chosen will probably be secured from the Maine or Massachusetts coast, and will be carefully transported to the Sound, where this experiment is to be made.

The last experiment made on the Pacific Coast was in 1906. The lobsters were transported very successfully, a large proportion remaining alive to the end of the journey, and were planted in various localities in great hopes that they would live and multiply. Afterward it was reported on several occasions that specimens had been taken or had been seen in shallow water; but it cannot be said positively that the observers were sure of their ground.

LOBSTERS WILL GROW HERE.

In spite of this, Dr. Smith says that the commissioners are fully persuaded that the eastern lobsters can be grown on the Pacific Coast, and consequently a shipment will be made in September after the moulting season is over. There is a strong disposition to favor as the ground from which to take the specimens for the experiment. The lobsters, to the number of 300, will be shipped in a refrigerator car with the most elaborate provisions for their comfort. There will be several attendants to look out for their welfare.

Many of the lobsters will have spawn attached to them, and it is expected that millions of young will be liberated as soon after they reach their destination. The lobsters will be packed in wet rock weed, which will be sprinkled occasionally, perhaps every two or three days, with sea water. They will be kept at a temperature of about 35 or 40 deg. and on frequent examination during the trip those that die will be thrown out.

The first attempt to colonize lobsters in the Pacific was in 1872. It was a joint State and government effort, and the shipment was in charge of Livingston Stone. The shipment consisted of 162 lobsters and some fish. At Omaha only forty lobsters remained alive and soon after leaving there the car was wrecked, thus ending that expedition.

EXPERIMENTS.

The last shipment was made successfully in June, 1888. J. F. Ellis was in charge of the shipment, which consisted of 250 males, 360 females, eight of them being with spawn died, and 15,000 loose eggs. These lobsters were packed in open trays in loose, moist rock weed, kept at a temperature of 42 to 45 deg. The trays were of zinc, 22x18x13 inches in size. These were placed in wooden boxes big enough to leave a five-inch space between the tray and the wooden box all around, and this space was packed with fine ice. On the third, sixth and ninth days one quart of sea water was sprinkled over each tray. On the eleventh day an examination showed the lobsters were in as good condition as when they were taken from the water. A second lot which was wet down with sea water once in nine days was also in good condition.

This lot arrived in San Francisco, escorted by J. D. Redding and Dr. H. M. Harkness of San Francisco, who met it in Sacramento, short just 282 individuals, which represented the mortality on the journey. Prof. Leslie A. Lee and Lieutenant-Commander Z. L. Tucker, in command of the Fish Commission steamer Albatross, made examinations of the water in San Francisco Bay, and found that its salinity was less than the ocean, being in the most favorable places 1.01988, whereas normal sea water is 1.0274. That was considered too fresh for any normally-constituted lobster, so Lieutenant-Commander Tucker fixed on Monterey Bay as the most likely place to suit the taste of the finical homarus Americanus.

DIVIDE THE SHIPMENT.

It was decided to divide the shipment, so 162 lobsters were planted in the bay between Pacific Grove and Chinatown in twelve fathoms of water; ninety-five were deposited one mile and thirty fathoms off Point Lobos and thirty were taken by the Albatross to a point a mile and a half off Trinidad light on recommendation of Prof. George Davidson, who thought that the most favorable location for them. The eggs were hatched and after placing 2000 of them in San Francisco Bay, the remainder were deposited in Monterey Bay. There is still to be accounted for a number of lobsters in this shipment. The experiment was tried of placing a quantity of them in a crate or cage and leaving it in the waters of Monterey Bay. On opening the cage to take some out it was found that they had become so lively that they could not be taken with a dip net, and forty-five of them escaped into the bay. While some chagrin was felt over this incident, it was decided that the lobsters were in fine condition and that they ought to take well to their new surroundings.

R SIGNALS ON RAILROADS.

ING OLD SYSTEM OF ICES TO TRAINMEN.

for All Right, Orange for , and Red or Uncolored for Peril—Revolution That Occurred Since the Introduction of the Block System.

board of experts appointed to the signal system of the of the United States will be at the outset with the fact there has been a complete and or less startling revolution in signal practice during recent says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald. This is nothing less than changing universal and time-honored light from a safety to a danger

Ever since block signaling went into use on American railways, and even before that time, the white light at has been the notice of safety to on the "head end." It still is the majority of the lines, but the managers throughout the have decided, almost without that the best signal practice demands the white light as a sign "clear" and transforms its to "something wrong. Stop " The revised language because of the fact it has been discarded from the by the best authorities by many of the largest railway in the United States.

WHITE LIGHT'S NEW MEANING.

the lines where the white light no has a place, its appearance denotes that something has gone wrong the regular signal, and therefore they are unable to say there is safety ahead or ruin if they proceed. Accordingly there is only one thing to do, and that is to stop until the doubt can removed. The greatest value, therefore, in discarding the white light lies the fact that it appears always there has been a broken signal and it denotes the further information that no signal is being

In the old signal lexicon, there were colors for the road which used "permissive" block signal system, is the signal that permitted an to enter a "block" of from mile to seven miles in length and with his train under running at no higher rate than thirty miles an hour, prepared to find the "block" occupied and to stop immediately.

three lights formerly in universal use: Red for danger, green and white for safety. Now approved signal code calls for danger, yellow, or, preferably, orange for caution, and green for W. E. Chamberlain, formerly manager for the New York, and Hartford road, was of this code, and it is have been suggested by an At a certain point a house was located at to the railroad track light from one window used the engineer's line of vision that he was expected the light of the block approaching. Several light from the house was mistaken for the "clear" signal and disaster narrowly was averted. This possibility soon became known to all engineers, and all accordingly slowed their trains on approaching this "block" until they became certain of their ground. The house afterward was bought by the railroad company and torn down.

WHITE LIGHT'S PERIL SEEN.

The engineers' trouble caused Mr. Chamberlain to ask why, if a white light thus easily could become a source of danger, the safety signal of the railroad also could not become such. Then it occurred to him that whenever a glass in a danger or caution signal lamp should be broken a red or a green light would at once be transformed into white, denoting safety. Accordingly, the New Haven discarded the white light in 1901, and this set all the railroad magnates in the country to thinking over the accidents that had been caused by the breaking of signal lamps.

The use of green for safety is not altogether devoid of liability to failure. Instances have been recorded where an accident occurred through an engineer's running by a danger signal and then swearing that he had seen a green light. In one case, which happened on the Rock Island and was investigated thoroughly by the management, the engineer was proved to have been right. On the night in question there was a heavy fog and the lamp was shown to have smoked.

RED TURNS GREEN.

A noted scientist was called into the case, as President B. L. Winchell was anxious to learn whether the engineer was right. The scientist demonstrated that the engineer really had seen a green light, despite the fact that the red signal had been exposed by the tower man. It was explained that it takes a combination of red, white and black to produce green. The red was furnished by the danger signal, the white by the fog and the black by the smoked glass in the lamp. But such a combination of circumstances would be as rare as a load of dynamite being struck by lightning at the very moment that a passenger train was passing the car containing the explosive, which has happened once in the history of railroading.

The abolition of white also insures the engineer being better able to be sure of his signals. Often he is called on to pass through a bewildering array of white lights, and to distinguish his own from among the many is difficult, while to mistake one of the host for the signal of safety is easy. With the white light eliminated, the worst that can happen to him is a mistake that will be on the side of safety and cause him to stop.

ORANGE AS A CAUTION.

Signal lamp manufacturers have made many attempts to secure a satisfactory yellow glass, but in vain. Accordingly, many of the roads prefer the orange for caution, as that color is likely to show a tinge of red, which will cause the engineer again to err on the side of safety if it changes its tingle. Not a few of the roads, however, do not believe in the "permissive" system of block signaling, and therefore have no bother with a third color. Notable among such is the St. Paul, which has only two block signals—"stop" and "proceed." It does not believe that the engineer should be given any discretion, but that his right to proceed and his command to do otherwise should be absolute.

The Northwestern was one of the first roads in the Middle West to adopt the new signal-light code, and the officials of that road would not go back to the old system for anything, so superior do they believe the new to be.

The problems the new board will have to solve will be the same that the American Railway Association has been trying to decipher for many years. One of them will be the making of lexicons for the semaphores by day and for the signal lamps and their positions by night. A new system being tried on the Pennsylvania gives the semaphore at least twelve expressions. Many expert signal and operating men look askance at this, for they believe that the language of the semaphore should be made as simple and brief as possible, as is the case in England, where traffic density is much greater than here. They hold that the language of the semaphore should be confined to three words—"stop," "proceed" and "caution." Any additions to these multiplies the danger of mistake.

BUSINESS WITH CHINA.

TRADE TRAINS ACROSS COUNTRY.

PROPOSED THAT RAILROADS HELP MANUFACTURERS.

Scheme Whereby Trade With China May Me Developed and Goods Ordered May Be Delivered on Time—Railroads to Run Special Trains on Certain Dates.

[Washington Star:] That Chinese and other far eastern trade may be accelerated, Maj. John M. Carson, chief of the National Bureau of Manufactures, has called upon the various managements of great railroads and laid before them a proposition of putting on a special freight schedule for goods shipped to the Orient, and running trains to San Francisco on that schedule. These trains would connect with regularly departing steamers and American merchants would be able to pledge deliveries on a given date. The Pennsylvania road, with its western connections, looks favorably upon the proposition, and is examining into the details.

The idea of the special freight train to the Pacific grew out of the recognized disadvantage under which the United States works in her attempt to compete with European countries for Chinese trade. Germany, England, France and other European countries have direct connections by regular schedule with the Far East, and are thoroughly intrenched in established trade with China.

They understand the needs of the people of the Flowery Kingdom more thoroughly than does the United States, and have arranged transportation facilities accordingly. The United States is, however, nearer China than any of these countries, and the feeling toward her is so friendly that the trade would come here if the conditions were similar.

BIG OPPORTUNITY HERE.

Maj. Carson has long preached the gospel of a specially manufactured line of goods for China, especially packed and shipped. The trade has reached approximately $100,000,000 a year, but it is held that it might be many times that amount. The Chinese Empire is showing every sign of a rejuvenation and with that awakening the great opportunity of doubling the trade many times will come. A readiness for it depends largely upon the provision for transporting the product of the factory in a satisfactory manner.

"Some time ago," said Maj. Carson, "I requested the heads of the freight departments of a number of the trunk lines to call upon me and listen to my proposition. A number of them responded, notably the Pennsylvania people. I endeavored to show these officials that there was a possibility of vastly increasing the traffic with the Far East and that every increase in that traffic would prove so much profit to them in that they would haul the freight. It was merely a matter of whether or not it would pay that appealed to the railroad men, and they were at first skeptical. The more they investigated it, however, the more the scheme appealed to them.

FAST FREIGHT TO PACIFIC.

"I asked them how long it required at present to freight from the Atlantic seaboard into San Francisco, and was informed that the period was sixty days, and that no guarantee was made on even that time. I suggested that the freight for the Far East be placed in special cars that were not subject to stoppage and sent straight through, that this freight be collected along the line, and when there was sufficient of it that it be placed in a train that ran on a schedule to the Pacific. I pointed out to them that a schedule could be arranged and advertised, and that all such freight could meet the fast freight, and its progress be expediated.

"My contention was that the existence of such a train would create the trade that would make it profitable. The trade even in the face of the present difficulties is sufficient to pay for a certain service, and the service would give birth to an increased trade. When a merchant in Hongkong buys goods for his summer trade or his winter trade he wants to know if those goods are to be on hand at the time he needs them. The American exporter has been unable to give him any satisfactory guarantee of that fact, while the German will give him the exact date of arrival.

TO MAKE GUARANTEE POSSIBLE.

"Lists are available that will show the date of sailing of every vessel for a year ahead that will carry goods to China. The fast freights could be arranged to meet the departing of those steamers. The railroad company could make up its schedules to meet those steamers and advertise them among the exporters. Knowing these time tables, the merchants anywhere along the line could sell in China with a positive guarantee that the goods would be on hand at a given date, and the Chinese merchant could consistently place his orders with American firms. There is no reason why the trade should not be increased almost immediately to $400,000,000 annually, four times what it is at present. The millions of people in China are going to reach out in the next few years and somebody is going to get their trade. The special service on the part of the railroads would be the first great step toward swinging a great part of that trade to this country.

"I am very hopeful that the Pennsylvania will soon see fit to put on the service. They are going into it in detail, and are in a position to handle it successfully. Should they decide to do so, the bureau will extend every resource in its power to bring the fact to the attention of both the manufacturers at home and the consumers abroad. It would mark a new era in eastern trade."

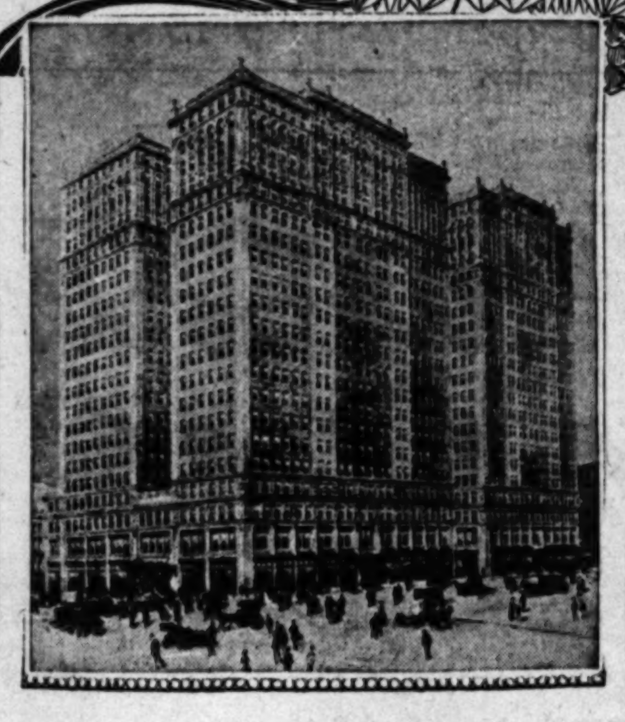
WHOLE CITY UNDER ROOF OF THIS SKYSCRAPER.



Greatest Railroad Station.

New York's latest skyscraper will hold two world's records, combining the largest office building with the greatest railroad passenger terminal. This city under one roof will have thirty-nine avenues in the shape of elevators, intersecting twenty-two streets in the shape of floors.

The number of business persons who are to occupy offices and shops in the Hudson Company's terminal will equal the total population of either Portsmouth, N. H., Helena, Mont., or Middletown, Ct.

It is estimated that 182,000,000 persons per year will pass through the station, entering and leaving trains.

BIG THING IN TREES.

CALIFORNIA LUMBER INDUSTRY'S FIGURES.

BY WALTER J. BALLARD.

According to Bulletin 77 of the Bureau of the Census, California ranks seventh as to capital invested, and tenth as to the value of yearly product among the lumber States of the Union. The State held the same rank as to capital in the census of 1900, but it was then fifteenth as to yearly product. Thus it has since gained five points in that regard.

Here are the latest official figures, just issued in connection with the Census of Manufacturers, of California's lumber and timber industry as a whole:

Number of establishments	308
Capital invested	$25,709,302
Wage-earners, average number (13,111 men)	13,191
Their yearly wages	$8,643,637
Cost of materials used, yearly	$2,682,951
Value of yearly product	$18,275,891
Increase in five years, 1900 to 1905—
Establishments	27
Capital invested	$10,578,654
Wage-earners, average number	2,517
Their yearly wages	$3,496,073
Coest of materials used, yearly	$1,975,714
Value of yearly product	$4,555,106

Those figures show an increase, in only five years, of 25 per cent. in the value of the yearly product. California is eighth in the State's increase of yearly product ranking.

Including duplication in reckoning by the value of the rough manufactured lumber, being also part of the value set for "lumber and timber products," California's increase in yearly product was $7,920,779, or 57.7 per cent. The increase for Oregon was $6,752,068, or $1,168,711 less than that of California.

Average per establishment—comparison:

	1905.	1900.
Investment in machinery	$80,802	$27,027
Value of yearly product	70,235	49,702
Wage-earners	43	39
Yearly wages disbursement	28,064	18,651

The average wages paid are higher in California and the Pacific Coast States than in any other section of the country.

CALIFORNIA'S LOGGING CAMPS.

For California the census of 1905 gives these, as follows:

Number	288
Capital invested	$4,976,748
Salaried officials, clerks, etc., number	177
Their yearly salaries	$218,160
Wage-earners, average number	6,436
Their yearly wages	$4,301,177
Miscellaneous expenses, yearly	$1,057,140
Materials used, yearly	$1,877,015
Value of yearly products	$8,944,190

The average value of the yearly products of the 288 logging camps of California is $31,056. In this respect, California rose from tenth place in 1900 to ninth place in 1905. Since 1900 the growth in the logging and timber camps industry has been the most rapid in the Southwestern and certain of the Pacific Coast States.

The log stumpage of California rose from $1.16 value per 1000 feet, B.M., to $1.39 in 1905, while the saw-log value per 1000 feet, B.M., rose from $4.62 to $7.24 under the same comparison of years.

A substantial increase was made in the stumpage value of redwood, found only in California, the advance per 1000 feet being 49 cents, or 46.2 per cent.

SAWMILLS.

The statistics (1905) of the sawmills of California, both "independent" and attached to logging and timber camps, are:

Number of sawmills	289
Capital invested	$18,092,805
Officials, clerks, etc., number	432
Their yearly salaries	$584,640
Wage-earners, average number	5,990
Their yearly wages	$3,144,960
Miscellaneous expenses, yearly	$1,060,139
Cost of materials used, yearly	$7,721,222
Value of yearly product	$15,337,850

The average annual value of the sawmill product per plant in 1905 was $53,072. Sawmilling so largely increased in California in the five years, 1900 to 1905, that the State rose from twenty-second place to tenth in the sawmilling States. The highest wages in the country for sawmilling were paid in the mills of the Pacific Coast States. The wages increased 50 per cent. in the five years in the three Pacific Coast States. In the matter of sawmills capital, California rose from twenty-third to seventeenth place in the ranking of capital invested in American sawmills.

CLASSIFICATION OF PRODUCT.

Number of mills—	Yearly output, ft., B. M.
68	5,000 to 500,000
44	500,000 to 1,000,000
60	1,000,000 to 5,000,000
20	5,000,000 to 10,000,000
22	10,000,000 to 50,000,000
1	50,000,000 and over.

In 1905, the sawmills of the State turned out a total product of 1,077,499,000 feet of rough lumber, valued at $14,068,745, consisting of—

Conifers—	Feet, B. M.	Value.
Yellow pine	355,622,000	$4,983,282
Hemlock	9,000	180
Douglas fir	60,879,000	788,941
Spruce	14,181,000	155,421
Redwood	519,667,000	6,061,490
Cedar	5,841,000	116,821
All other conifers	83,540,000	1,295,174
Hardwoods—
Oak	84,000	8,540
All other hardwoods	94,000	22,875
Shingles	737,559,000	874,285

PLANING MILLS.

California's share is:

Number of establishments	333
Capital invested	$11,004,299
Officials, clerks, etc	431
Their yearly salaries	$300,207
Wage-earners, average number	5,525
Their yearly wages	$4,074,396
Miscellaneous expenses, yearly	$561,523
Cost of materials used, yearly	$11,018,054
Value of yearly product	$18,978,461

In the number of planing mills, California rose from thirteenth to seventh place among the States between 1900 and 1905; also from eleventh to seventh in the average number of wage-earners, and from eighth to fourth in the matter of yearly wage disbursement, but fell from ninth to ten rank in the yearly value of products.

Fifty-five years' growth in California lumber:

Year—	Value of product.
1850	$ 919,466
1860	4,008,471
1870	5,227,064
1880	4,495,950
1890	8,794,035
1900	12,717,785
1905	18,275,891

How California's lumber capital is placed:

In logging or timber camps—
Land	$ 197,760
Buildings	140,750
Machinery and equipment	4,202,735
Cash and sundries	435,503
Total	$4,976,748
In saw and planing mills—
Land	$ 856,488
Buildings, kilns, etc	2,754,625
Machinery, tools and implements	5,234,237
Cash and sundries	11,887,504
Total	$20,732,554
Summary—
In logging or timber camps	$ 4,976,748
In saw and planing mills	20,732,554
Total capital invested in lumber industry	$25,709,302

This large investment, with its $18,275,891 yearly product is managed by 433 officials, clerks, etc., at a yearly salaries disbursement of $584,660, or, in round figures, for 3¼ per cent., a very reasonable executive salary list. The $1,877,015 spent in 1905 for "materials used" was for:

Stumpage—timber cut for logs or bolts	$1,523,339
Other stumpage	96,462
Supplies	257,214
Total materials used	$1,877,015

PRODUCT IN DETAIL.

Class—	Value.
Logs for sale as logs	$ 375,730

REDWOOD OF CALIFORNIA.

Referring to the redwood of California, Mr. Henry Gannett, geographer, United States Geological Survey, says: "Redwood, (sequoia semperirreus) is found only in a narrow strip closely bordering the Pacific Coast, from the southern line of Oregon, southward through California nearly to San Francisco Bay, with a few comparatively small patches south of the bay. The strip ranges in width from 5 to 25 miles, never extending inland beyond the influence of the coast fogs. The area of the strip is approximately 2000 square miles. Its features are extreme moisture, much rain in the winter season, and fogs all the year round.

"The forest is nearly pure, practically the only admixture consisting of a small percentage of red fir, or, as it is there designated, Oregon pine. The trees are large with an average diameter of about 5 to 10 feet, while many exceed 20 feet in diameter. In height they range up to 300 feet, from one-half to two-thirds of which is clear lumber. The forest is extremely dense, the average stand being nearly 50,000 feet per acre, while many tracts of considerable size carry from 100,000 to 150,000 feet per acre. Indeed, in the yield of lumber, this forest is probably the densest on earth, exceeding the fir forests of Oregon and Washington.

"Lumbering is carried on at many points in the strip, at Crescent City, Humboldt Bay, and at various points in Mendocino and Sonoma counties. The principal center of this lumber industry, however, is about Humboldt Bay, of which Eureka is the metropolis. The lumbering and milling are carried on in this neighborhood by large companies, and the most methods and machinery are there employed. The redwood mills about Eureka probably represent the ihghest development of lumber manufacture in the world.

Labor's Open Shop.

THAT GREAT BOYCOTTING CONSPIRACY, "THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR," AND ITS MALICIOUS METHODS.

IT IS generally known that the American Federation of Labor is a voluntary association with a membership exceeding two millions of persons and that Samuel Gompers is president; Frank Morrison, secretary, and J. B. Lennon, treasurer. The executive council of the American Federation of Labor consists of eight members. The federation is subdivided into numerous subordinate groups, combinations and associations of unions, so-called, under names indicating generally the trade or occupation of the members and holding certificates of affiliation with the membership of said American Federation of Labor. The executive offices of the federation are located in Washington. Its revenues are derived from a per capita tax levied on all its members.

The federation was formed in 1886 by Samuel Gompers and other persons associated with him for the express purpose, as declared in its first constitution or written articles of agreement and association, of securing the unification of all labor organizations in aid of boycotts declared by any of them against the business of individuals or concerns. It has since remained the duty of its executive council to secure such unified action by its members and their sympathizers in carrying out such boycotts; to bring to bear all the power of the association through combination of that purpose; to injure thereby the business of such individuals and concerns, and to restrain and destroy their interstate trade and commerce with their customers in other States unless they shall yield to its demands in the direction and conduct of their business.

During the twenty years of its existence it has repeatedly declared boycotts and has actively prosecuted the same by using the combined power of the association for that purpose. It has widely published and proclaimed this fact in order to add to the effectiveness of such attack upon others. The destructiveness of these attacks upon the business of any person "under its ban," as it is said in the reports of its executive council, is well known to the public geenrally. It is only natural that this knowledge should add greatly to the power of the boycott, which is now maliciously directed against the business of the Buck's Stove and Range Company.

That the oppression point of view is recognized and followed by the federation is clearly indicated in the following report and recommendation made by the federation Committee on Boycotts at the convention held at Pittsburgh, November 20, 1905:

> We must recognize the fact that a boycott means war, and to successfully carry on a war we must adopt the tactics that history has shown are most successful in war. The greatest master of war said that "War was the trade of a barbarian, and that the secret of success was to concentrate all your forces upon one point of the enemy, the weakest if possible." In view of these facts the committee recommends that the State federations and central bodies lay aside minor grievances and concentrate their efforts and energies upon the least number of unfair parties or places in their jurisdiction. One would be preferable. If every available means at the command of the State federations and central bodies were concentrated upon one such, and kept up until successful, the next on the list would be more easily brought to terms and within a reasonable time none opposed to fair wages, conditions or hours but would be brought to see the error of their ways and submit to the inevitable. Under the present system, our efforts are largely wasted and our ammunition scattered. Let us reduce the boycotts to the lowest possible number and concentrate our efforts upon those and we feel certain better results will be obtained.

It does not seem necessary to give further instances to prove the undoubted fact that the American Federation of Labor is organized to declare war against any commercial enterprise refusing to accede to its demands. If such proofs are necessary they can be found in the system upon which the federation conducts its attacks. An important part of the system is the use of certain publications having a very wide circulation, and in which is published the lists graphically termed "unfair" and "We-Don't-Patronize." The principal publication issued by the federation is the monthly journal, the American Federationist. This is the official organ and mouthpiece of Samuel Gompers, who is its duly authorized editor.

There are other journals of minor importance owned by the association, but the mainspring of publicity is the American Federationist. In each copy of this magazine there appears a notice to all of the unions and members of that particular concern, who, from the application of particular unions named, and after due investigation and attempt at settlement, have been declared "unfair" by the executive council, and requesting the secretaries of its 27,000 local unions to read such notice at the meetings of the unions and requesting the local and reform press of the country to copy it. These notices are signed by Sampel Gompers, as president of the federation, in behalf of it and all its members. In each monthly issue of the American Federationist appears, under the heading, "We-Don't-Patronize," an official list of individuals and concerns which in previous issues have been declared "unfair," which are to be boycotted.

The use of this particular branch of the federation militant system seems simple enough, but its effect can clearly be understood by recalling the many instances in which the "unfair" boycotting system of the American Federation of Labor has injured legitimate American industrial enterprises.

A great many people have long felt that such methods as these not only interfere with individual liberty, but to attack, to oppress and to injure, were not only unjust and immoral, but illegal. It has not seemed clear that there was any moral difference between this kind of a conspiracy to ruin a corporation or an individual, and a conspiracy to injure in any other way. By the pending action a legal decision will be rendered in due time, determining to the public satisfaction whether or not what is known by all right-thinking men to be wrong under the moral law, is also in general in violation of the statutes.—[American Industries.

A Case in Point.

The efforts of ill-managed labor unions to obstruct industrial progress are illustrated by a little occurrence in the pressroom of the World's Work.

Mechanical feeders are now made which feed paper to printing presses with greater regularity and at greater speed, and consequently with greater economy than men can feed it; and the presses on which this magazine is printed are equipped with these mechanical feeders. The Feeders' Union in New York demanded that as many men should be employed in this shop as would be required if no mechanical feeder had been invented.

This demand means that a number of men must be kept at full wages, whose sole duty it would be to stand (or to sit) and see the machinery run—see the presses fed better than they could feed them. When the owners of the shop declined to accede to this demand, all the feeders and pressmen as well, who had not even the feeders' excuse, went out. Some of them, or their fellows of the union, are now spending their days on the street near by as "pickets," endeavoring to persuade the men who have their places to give up their jobs.

This demand is the same as to say that a shoe manufacturer who pegs shoes by machinery must employ as many shoemakers as would be necessary to peg by hand all the shoes that he makes by machinery. It is the same as to say that a cotton manufacturer must employ as many women as could spin by hand all the thread product of his mill, and so on. In a word, the industrial advance made by machinery must be stopped! This in the face of the fact that every competent pressman in the United States can get a job at good wages.

When a union or any other set of men undertakes so large a task as checking the use of machinery, they make a pitiful display of a wrong relation to life and to work in this year 1907, and in these United States of America. Such unions are throwing away the help and sympathy and cooperation of other working men—of the owners of this shop, for example, who themselves are working men or nothing.

Of course, such an effort is a foregone failure. Else who could conduct shops with any hope of success? But for the moment even as pitiful an effort to reverse human progress as this is causes some trouble. For instance, a part of the edition of the July number of The World's Work was delayed for a few days, to the annoyance of some subscribers. There are very few pardonable reasons for delay in issuing a periodical. But, if any delay be pardonable, the publishers hope that this is.

To those who have been patient or sympathetic under this annoyance, the publishers wish to express their hearty appreciation. The union feeders and pressmen have done them good service by making this publishing house an open shop from the top floor to the basement; and it will remain an open shop.

Most questions that arise in the conduct of life or of industry are debatable. But this is not one of them. The conclusion was reached before the controversy was begun. The owners of this publishing house might conceivably shut it up and earn their livings in some other way—a contingency, however, that is not imminent; but, as they regard their duty to themselves and to society, they could not conceivably conduct it at the retrogressive and uneconomic dictation of other persons, especially when this dictation is based on a plan of work that makes for inefficiency and weakens manhood.—[The World's Work.

The Open Shop Necessary.

That condition of liberty protected by law, which is of the essence of our political institutions, can be maintained in the relations of labor only on the "open-shop principle"—that is, the equal right of men to work in their trades and occupations without joining any organization or submitting to its rules or the authority of its officers, if they so prefer, and the equal right of employers to hire and keep in their service men of their own choice without discrimination on account of membership or non-membership in unions. These rights are fundamental and wherever they are infringed violence is done to the foundation principles of free government.

Our "labor leaders," most of them of foreign extraction, have failed to realize the importance of this principle to the mass of workingmen and to the people as a whole, and they have seemed to adopt the theory that labor organizations could be made successful for purposes admitted to be legitimate only by the policy of coercion and intimidation, and even of force and violence where they seemed necessary to accomplish the immediate objects. The trades unions of England have passed that stage, and the "open shop" is the rule there, though that phrase is not used. Non-union men and union men work side by side, and the unions rely on other methods than coercion and violence for accomplishing their ends. If unions would devote themselves to elevating the standard of efficiency and character in labor, to improving conditions and making union labor more valuable and desirable, at the same time leaving the door open to competition, which is the only safeguard against the abuses of monopoly, they would make more hopeful progress in this country and win back some of the sympathy which they have been forfeiting for years past. It is certain that the people of this country will not tolerate a despotic labor monopoly until they are ready to surrender the principle of liberty protected by law, and when that unhappy time comes there will be a struggle for supremacy in which organized labor will not come out on top. The safety of workingmen lies in the preservation of liberty and equality, not in their sacrifice.

Blame Unions for Wayward Boys.

That the restrictions imposed by labor unions on the number of apprentices tends to work against effort on the part of probation officers to get wayward boys to reform, was the statement made a few days ago at the meeting of the Seidel investigating committee of Milwaukee by Probation Officer William A. Zuerner. According to the officer the greatest problem is with the older boys. Many of these boys roam the streets simply because they can not get work that suits them. They refuse to do odd jobs or run errands and insist that they want to learn trades. "I know of the case of one young man," said Mr. Zuerner, "who had been loafing around and had refused to work in the factory. I had a talk with the boy and he told me that he wanted to learn a trade. He said that he wanted to be a mason. I thereupon telephoned to a numbr of mason contractors in the city. They told me that they would gladly take on the boy and other boys, but they were unable to do so under the restrictions laid down by the union."—[Square Deal.

HAVE YOU A FUTURE?
IF SO, CONSULT
MME. LE PIERRO.

What is happiness? It is to know yourself. Is there on earth any human being that feels himself actually happy? Practically not, because divine wisdom uses our longing for happiness to spur us on and force us to the effort necessary for the accomplishment of our destiny.

A little thought makes it clear that men can neither hope for nor reasonably expect HAPPINESS, PEACE AND PROSPERITY in their present state.

Man looks out at the universe with the puzzled, ignorant expression of a small child when the light is suddenly brought close to its face. Everything that we see astonishes us and proves our ignorance. Happiness must be found in knowledge, and the power that knowledge gives. Men are ignorant. They know nothing of their destiny. Thousands and tens of thousands of centuries hence, as long as the sun's heat shall preserve us—human beings will still be seeking it, because HAPPINESS IS IN SEEKING, IN TRYING. If you have time this day for quiet thinking, reason it out.

CONSULT MME. LE PIERRO.

The world-known, born with a double veil, can safely be consulted, and guarantee absolute satisfaction.

KNOW THY FUTURE
BY CONSULTING THE WORLD'S GREATEST PSYCHIC, PALMIST AND SPIRIT PSYCHIC,
PROF. MILBURN,
PROF. MILBURN,
PROF. MILBURN,

PERMANENTLY LOCATED IN HIS NEW HOME, 428 W. SIXTH ST., CORNER OF OLIVE, OPPOSITE THE PARK.

FORTY YEARS A PRACTICING PSYCHIC, KNOWN FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN AS THE MARVEL OF TWO HEMISPHERES, PRESS AND PUBLIC RECOGNIZE PROF. MILBURN AS THE FOREMOST AND MOST ABLE PSYCHIC NOW BEFORE PUBLIC. WHERE OTHERS FAIL, HE SUCCEEDS WITH EASE, AND HE POSITIVELY WILL NOT ACCEPT FEE FOR HIS READINGS UNLESS YOU ARE PERFECTLY SATISFIED AND RECEIVE THE INFORMATION YOU DESIRE. MARVELOUS DEMONSTRATIONS OF SECOND SIGHT, THAT MUST BE SEEN TO BE BELIEVED, SO BE SURE AND CONSULT HIM AT ONCE. ELEVATE THYSELF. KNOW THY FUTURE. POSITIVELY NO EQUAL ON EARTH IN HIS PROFESSION. BY HIS WONDERFUL POWERS HE WILL GIVE YOU NAMES, TELLS WHAT YOU CALLED FOR, TELLS WHAT YOU WANT TO KNOW. IF NOT CORRECT, FREE, FREE. SO POSITIVE AM I OF MY OWN POWER TO TELL THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE, THAT I WILL MAKE NO CHARGE, NO CHARGE, NO CHARGE, UNLESS YOU OBTAIN THE INFORMATION YOU DESIRE, AND FIND ME THE SUPERIOR OF ALL PSYCHICS AND PALMISTS IN THIS CITY.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR ONE WEEK ONLY. Realizing there are many skeptical people in Los Angeles, and that this city has been overrun with pretenders, etc., and that many of its best citizens would be only too anxious to visit a TRUE psychic exponent were they assured of satisfaction, therefore Prof. Milburn will (to convince the public of Los Angeles of his superiority over all psychics) give his special readings for seven days only, at 50c.

50c.

WHEN CONSULTING A PSYCHIC ALWAYS CONSULT THE BEST. AS A TEST IN HIS REGULAR READING, HE WILL GIVE NAMES, AGE, OCCUPATION, WHOM AND WHEN YOU WILL MARRY.

ASSISTANCE FOR TROUBLED OR unfortunate; if you are in trouble of any kind, discontented, unhappy, or not satisfied in life, or have domestic, love or business troubles, you will be told how to overcome all trouble. WHEN OTHERS FAIL, HE SUCCEEDS WITH EASE.

HE GIVES ADVICE ON BUSINESS, speculation, investments, insurance, changes, travels, health, sickness, love, divorce, marriage, lawsuits, separations, wills, deeds, mortgages, patents, claims, collections, mining, etc. He will tell you what trade, speculation or profession you are adapted for.

LAWSUITS, WILLS, DIVORCES. He can render you assistance and give you advice in a way that will bring success in business transactions, property speculation, investments, mining, etc.

LOVE, COURTSHIP, MARRIAGE. Gives truthful revelations of all live affairs, troubles, marriages, restores lost affections, reunites the separated, settles lovers' quarrels, etc.

Tells how to WIN the man or woman you love, and how to make your husband or wife be true to you, and how to overcome all your enemies.

WHY CONSULT AN INFERIOR PSYCHIC WHEN PROF. MILBURN, THE ACKNOWLEDGED LEADER OF THEM ALL, IS HERE AND HIS FEE IS NO HIGHER THAN THOSE LESS COMPETENT.

His past record and strictly honorable dealings are sufficient guaranty for his future work, and have won the good will of the press and public.

READING BY MAIL, ONE DOLLAR.
SEND DATE OF BIRTH.
REMEMBER THE REDUCED PRICES
FOR ONE WEEK ONLY.

HOURS—10 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily and Sunday. Satisfaction guaranteed or no pay. All business sacred and confidential. Lady in attendance. Private parlors and office.

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (Suite 17,)
by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn, in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HAS HIMSELF WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in everyday life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health, marriage and domestic life, financial conditions and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill-luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

PERSONAL—
PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE of 303½ S. Spring st., near Third,
THE CELEBRATED, RELIABLE PALMIST AND ASTROLOGER.

A resident of Los Angeles for 24 years, and whose work is known throughout this entire land, and who has made a life study of PALMISTRY AND ASTROLOGY, has convinced hundreds of the best intellects and persons in all walks of life that HIS REMARKABLE READINGS AND PREDICTIONS FOR FUTURE EVENTS IN THEIR LIVES ARE UNPARALLELED.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S readings, which are thorough and scientific, have nothing in common whatever with the fictitious readings of illiterate, unreliable humbug palmists, astrologers, psychics, fortune tellers, and those who, THROUGH TRICK METHODS, CLAIM TO TELL YOUR NAME, etc., after you yourself have written the information—who scarcely know one line or mount from the other, and who, by their disgraceful readings, drag these useful sciences into the mire of fortune telling and fraud. PROF. ALTHOUSE is not actuated by any feeling of ill-will toward any reader who may be GENUINE (for he believes all RELIABLE readers should be encouraged;) but he will—in the future, as in the past—denounce humbug work whenever and wherever he can.

A SATISFACTORY AND ABSOLUTELY CORRECT reading can only be had from one who has thoroughly mastered the laws of these wonderful sciences, through years of critical study of planetary influences on the lines of the hand and in the Horoscope, combined with large experiences, trained judgment, etc. The palm shows diseases, love, marriage, divorce, deaths, money, investments, changes, talents, travels, etc., etc., and many other things which cannot be mentioned here.

WITH EACH PALM READING THERE IS ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.

PROF. ALTHOUSE stands at the very head of the profession, having read—FROM LIFE—more celebrated people than any other reader. He does not deceive the public in this respect. HIS READINGS, TOO, MUST IN NO WISE BE CLASSED WITH THOSE OF ANY OTHER READER NOW OPERATING IN THIS PART OF THE COUNTRY, AND HIS SKILLED WORK HAS NO COMPARISON WITH THEIRS WHATSOEVER.

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK, THE GREAT SINGER, WHOSE HANDS WERE READ AND HOROSCOPE CAST BY PROF. ALTHOUSE, writes and says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded, and having been prepared for the same, I was not taken unawares. YOUR WARNING regarding an oncoming illness also PROVED A FACT, as not more than ten days later I was at home with a severe attack of la grippe. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

DR. ALEX. J. M'IVOR-TYNDALL, editor Swastika Magazine, writes and says: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides, and I feel certain that you are able, through your accurate and scientific knowledge of these sciences of human life and culture, to guide and direct to the best possible advantage, the lives of those who apply to you for advice. I wish you every success in your work."

E. H. SOTHERN says: "I find your readings coincide with Cheiro's," and "I am greatly interested in Palmistry and Astrology." FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading of my hands was most satisfactory. Your knowledge and skill in palmistry is REMARKABLE and gave me a much more exalted idea of that science than I have hitherto entertained." LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "I wish to say that your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY." PAUL GILMORE, actor, says: "I want to express to you my keen appreciation of your reading. It is by far the most scientific I have ever had." JULIET CROSBY, actress, says: "Prof. Althouse has given me a most helpful, complete and satisfactory reading." Prof. Althouse also read Admiral Schley, Senator Clark, ex-Gov. Pardee, Gen. Chaffee, Baron Rothschild, Joaquin Miller, Ysaye, Sousa, Edison, Capt. Hobson, Creatore, Caruso, Huntington, Susan B. Anthony, Nance O'Neil, Lillian Nordica, Constantino, Calve, Julia Marlowe, Modjeska, Adaberto, Sembrich, Gadski, Jefferson, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Anna Held, Grace Van Studdiford, Lillian Russell, Wm. Desmond, Blanche Hall, Papinta and hundreds of others. These names of NOTED people are merely given because they are PUBLIC persons. It indicates the class of people being read by PROF. ALTHOUSE, together with hundreds of the very best people of Los Angeles—WITH WHOM ALL HIS BUSINESS IS STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL IN EVERY PARTICULAR. Intelligent, HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED—those capable of appreciating the superior qualities of a fine reader.

ASTROLOGY AND THE HOROSCOPE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE has also given many years of critical study to, and is an experienced practitioner in, the science of MODERN ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE IS DECIDEDLY A GUIDE IN LIFE, showing remarkable things when properly cast for YOU INDIVIDUALLY, from the position of the planets at YOUR BIRTH. It indicates the condition of health, all kinds of diseases, the constitution, how best strengthened, when weak; tells all about love—whom to marry and when, describing the marriage partner; shows deaths, divorce; tells about children, speculation, the best time to invest or to push affairs, and when to hold on to what has been gained, your talents, what best adapted for; your environment; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when one will be in danger of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles; also of your good periods coming—giving dates of these events for the future; IN FACT, TELLS EVERYTHING ABOUT ONE'S SELF WORTH KNOWING, being in truth one of the best investments the world offers. YOUR HOROSCOPE is also a key to the character of OTHERS, and in this respect can be of the utmost use to you.

SCIENTIFIC PREDICTIONS ON ALL QUESTIONS OF LIFE, for the present, and future events up to the close of life—made by these sciences—with most complete primary and secondary directions (arcs, etc.)—through the trained judgment of PROF. ALTHOUSE—will stagger the senses. BEWARE, HOWEVER, OF UNRELIABLE READERS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in hand reading and casting of horoscopes has brought him a large and successful practice. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances.

WANTED—
"DON'T WORRY"—
We will secure a position for you if you are a
Stenographer........Book-keeper.
Cashier........General office man.
Chauffeur........Machinist.
Carpenter........Finisher.
Janitor........Driver.
Shipping clerk........Or in any other line of work, in which you are proficient.

Do you believe for a moment that in a city the size of Los Angeles there is not a good position for you? Our business is to find that particular position for you. "Every man to his place."

One moment's conversation with one of our outside representatives will convince you that if you have a chance in the city, he will get it for you. We employ only men who have had years of experience in dealing with the business world, who have tact and ingenuity, who know how to approach an employer to get the best results, men who will have a dozen positions before the average man decides he wants a job.

It is much easier to get a position for some one else than for yourself.

An employer may need a man the worst way, have a desk full of applications of competent help, and a little personal solicitation by us, nine times out of ten, will get an interview for you. Then it's up to you to make good. Last and not least, our terms are very reasonable.

BARTEE & CASH.

WANTED—
Help, Male.

WANTED—
We have many desirable positions open from day to day. We furnish the largest firms in Los Angeles with competent men and women, and our business has now grown to such an extent that we are now supplying firms throughout California, Nevada and Arizona and occasionally we get a call from Mexico.

Frequently we receive telegrams, telephone calls or letters from the heads of firms for certain kinds of employes and they have such implicit faith in our judgment and honesty that they allow us to select the persons they want. In other words we do the hiring. We have only secured the confidence of the business men of the Southwest by strict attention to business, fair methods, and using good judgment in making our selections. For instance, we never send a "mule driver" to accept a position as "bank cashier" or vice versa. Every applicant for a position must furnish us with references as to honesty and ability before we consider him at all.

Ours is the only agency on the Pacific Coast which describes the qualifications of employes in a magazine. This unique publication, GOLD vs. BRAINS, is sent to thousands of employers monthly, and the qualifications of each man or woman registered with us is described therein. We give each applicant a number and in that way no publicity is given to the individual.

It does not make any difference whether you are idle or employed and wish to better your condition, if you know how to do one thing and do it well, and can furnish first-class references, the chances are we can place you in a short time.

We are now working on the next issue of GOLD vs. BRAINS and if you would like to place your qualifications direct before the business men of Los Angeles and the Southwest generally, come in and list with us on or before the 20th inst.

The position which we fill day to day command salaries ranging from $360 a year to $5000. We have the highest bank and mercantile references and will show you a list of hundreds of brain workers whom we have placed in the past 60 days. We invite the fullest investigation and in the future as in the past we will continue to give both employers and employes a square deal.

BETTER THAN INSURANCE, REAL ESTATE OR MINING STOCK.

Statistics, commercial agencies and your personal knowledge will bear me out that there is no investment that will compare with the investments in the line we are offering. It was proven hundreds of years ago and has made good throughout the world and will always be good. Why invest your money, much or little, in long shots? Why not invest where you have more than a reasonable assurance of both the return of the principal and an advance in the value of your holdings, besides promising dividends that will return your principal yearly. Thoroughly co-operative and so planned that the smallest investor may take advantage of the proposition on a very easy installment plan; $5 will start the ball to rolling. Get particulars without delay. Backed by good men. We substantiate all our claims before you make the investment.

FOR SALE—WHOLESALE LIQUOR BUSINESS. Here is a business offering an opportunity seldom found. My business includes three prominent beer accounts, with sales averaging four cars in the winter time, eight to ten cars in the summer. All trade well established. Good bar in connection. Rent of premises $125 per month; am offered $250 per month to move out. My stock will invoice from $16,000 to $18,000, consisting principally of double stamped whisky in wood; balance of stock such as is usually carried by wholesalers. This business is paying a net profit of about $1400 per month. My price to move out and turn over stock, lease, license, fixtures and good will of the business is $23,500. My reason for selling is, I have all the money I want and am retiring from all active business. Address all communications P.O. BOX 2, Los Angeles, Cal. 15

FOR SALE—

COUNTRY STORES.

At present the country store offers one of the best opportunities for the small investor who wishes to purchase an established business where he is sure of securing a reasonable compensation for his time and money. A great deal of attention is being paid at the present time to country property, with the result that the smaller towns which are located in the farming districts are enjoying a rapidly-increasing business which is not subject to the strong competition found in the city.

We have at the present time three of these stores which have been established in farming districts for a number of years and from which the owners have made a fortune. They wish to retire and have a rest from so many years of work, and are willing to sell their business for the actual value of their stock and fixtures, not taking into consideration the good will of the firm, which is always worth considerable in an old-established business. These openings require from $2000 to $10,000, part of which might be in desirable property.

STOCKS AND BONDS—
And Mortgages.

OIL STOCKS, OIL STOCKS, OIL STOCKS.

For two weeks past I have been naming in my "ads" the oil companies which are and have been paying large dividends.

During the past week there has arisen a doubt in the minds of some people as to whether one of those companies named in that list, which is and has been paying the largest dividend of any oil company according to the amount of money invested in the stock, would pay its dividend this month and continuously each month in the future.

The company about which the said doubt has arisen as to whether it will pay the regular 2 per cent. dividend this month as it has been doing for many months or not, or only pay 1 per cent. or 2 per cent. per month, or no per cent. at all, but simply pay the dividend and not pay any, this month nor for some months to come that company is the RICE RANCH OIL CO. The question is, will the said company PAY or PASS its dividend? Rumor has been saying this week that it will pass it. Is rumor reliable and trustworthy? Not always, and quite often is not. What then causes the price of Rice Ranch Oil Co. stock to go down so rapidly from $4.10 per share to $2 on August 21, the last recorded cash sale of said stock on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, and private sales reported as low as one ninety-five ($1.95) and perhaps they have been as low as $1.90 or a decline of 120 points in a few months. If it is true what was said about that stock a few months ago to cause the price of it to advance to $3.10 per share, is it not also true that the RICE RANCH OIL CO. is very cheap now at $1.90, $1.95 or even $2 per share, whether the company continues to pay the dividend or passes it for three or four months? The dividend on 1000 shares for one month is $24 and for five months only $120. If the company should pass its dividend and have good reasons for so doing, the stockholder will be benefited by the company using the surplus money for developing the property and increasing the production of the plant, and this increase in the property will inure to the benefit of the stockholder when dividend paying is resumed. If the stock is on a meritorious basis, and the market price of the stock is based on actual value, when the dividend is passed or cut down for honest reasons, then the stock should not decline, but little in its actual or market value. If this company has been paying a larger dividend than it could afford to pay for the best interests of the company during the past, present and future, then the large dividend paying has been done to the injury of the company, and to the people who bought the stock at such high prices, and now will be compelled to lose their dividends received by the difference between the cost of the stock and the present price. Those only benefiting by the advance in the market of the stock and receiving their dividends until the top price was reached, and then unloading on the public. It looks like that might have been. It also looks like that those who sold out high would like to buy back again at as low a price as possible, and if the dividend is passed it may scare some into selling at the low price, and at a great loss. If the price of the stock was so high when there were only two producing wells, why should it be so low now when the third well is about 2000 deep? It would seem natural if the stock was advancing now rather declining. The price of oil is higher now than some months ago. Then why should this stock be declining like it has been since August 20 last? Is it natural and reasonable that it should? It was either too high in price some months ago and was not based on value, but on fictitious and false value, or it is unreasonably too low now. A party said to me this week that Rice Ranch was liable to be $5 or $6 a share in the future. Mr. Investor, don't you think it is a good time now to buy Rice Ranch Oil stock? Parties were hunting good buys in oil stock last week. If you wish to buy oil stock at a bargain, you had better buy it while it is low. Oil stocks are very low in price now. Take the opportunity while you can.

MINING—

"A WONDERFUL COPPER AND SILVER STRIKE."

I have just returned from a 3 months' prospecting trip and have discovered a virgin silver and copper district, which covers about 10 square miles, the assay certificate shows $183 ore on one location, $24.20 on another, and $23.70 on the third location, these claims being about a mile apart and being surface cross-sections, gives some idea of the richness of this territory.

I am open for any legitimate proposition with the right people—to go back and locate the best of this mineralized land.

Address 204 FAY BLDG., L. A., Cal.

INCORPORATE YOUR BUSINESS UNDER Arizona laws. Most liberal in the U. S. No franchise tax. Stockholders exempt from all corporate debts. No public statements required. [illegible] of the Week. STATE OF THE MARKET

Los Angeles Sunday Times

Part V—14 Pages. SECOND LINER SHEET

[illegible] YEAR. SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 15, 1907. On All News Stands, Trains and Streets. 5 CENTS

Houses, Lots and Lands—Saturday Review of Buildings and Development.

[illegible] AND COMMENT.

[illegible] all kinds of [illegible] these days about the real [illegible] market. Some say it is dull, [illegible] that it is quiet, few that it is ac-[illegible]. It all depends on your point of [illegible]. The agent who was engaged in [illegible] to the public faraway lots [illegible] lacking all conveniences, [illegible] which had speculation for ten [illegible] naturally things the [illegible] is dull. It is dead for that kind [illegible] and likely to stay dead [illegible] time. As a matter of fact, for [illegible] property needed for investment [illegible] the market is strong under a [illegible] demand, and confident holding [illegible] values on the part of present [illegible]

[illegible] dead.

[illegible] any part of the city or [illegible] suburbs, where light-[illegible] are installed, where water [illegible] and where street-car serv-[illegible] and you will find anything [illegible] real estate market. East [illegible] to Florence avenue is [illegible] edge of the business center. [illegible] car service is found there, [illegible] new houses are going up at [illegible] would astonish some who [illegible] estate dull. The class of [illegible] being built in the district is [illegible] and bungalows costing [illegible] to $3000. East of the river [illegible] direction one goes new houses [illegible] up. These are mostly invest-[illegible], homes being built [illegible] those who will occupy [illegible]

[illegible] Homes.

[illegible] the greatest activity prevails [illegible] high-class residence districts. [illegible] houses prevail. All the [illegible] from Sunset Park along [illegible] of Wilshire boulevard the [illegible] up dotted with new houses [illegible] of construction, from those [illegible] foundation has just been [illegible] recently finished and now [illegible] by the owners. These houses [illegible] cost from $5000 to $25,000. [illegible] are all investments. The [illegible] recently been purchased and [illegible] for the buildings to be [illegible] with all reasonable dispatch [illegible] who will make their home [illegible] when finished.

[illegible] Development.

[illegible] go far afield, even outside [illegible] to the west, where well-[illegible] subdivisions are on the mar-[illegible] street-car service, lighting fa-[illegible] water to be had. West [illegible] Heights is one such district. [illegible] realize that Los Angeles [illegible], and that large sums of [illegible] being invested in real es-[illegible] investment basis. A visit [illegible] will convince any but [illegible] that real estate is not [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] keep on going until you [illegible] Heights, and still you [illegible] activity in building. [illegible] "half-way house" to [illegible] along West Gate, the [illegible] all the other high-class [illegible] houses are going up. [illegible] large area. This outside [illegible] for many miles. [illegible] new homes going up ev-[illegible] just outside the busi-[illegible] until you reach the high [illegible] it must impress you [illegible] the fact that the aggregate num-[illegible] houses going up is large. They [illegible] homes for families. They are [illegible] structures, indicating abun-[illegible] in the hands of the own-[illegible] a population in this class [illegible] so steadily the future in [illegible] seems secure.

[illegible]

[illegible] the report of the build-[illegible] of the city, week by [illegible] little, if any, falling off [illegible] building compared with last [illegible] report is for the city proper. [illegible] of the districts here referred [illegible] no building inspector, and [illegible] are taken out. In all these [illegible] much greater building [illegible] summer than last. The [illegible] service is so good that it is [illegible] to living in the city. [illegible] and lighting facilities are [illegible] same as in the city. The [illegible] supply is good. In the city the [illegible] has gone up very much [illegible]. A more ample lot may [illegible] in these outside districts for [illegible] in some of these subdivi-[illegible] in city has to pay. For [illegible] purposes in scenic [illegible] as from West Arlington Heights all the way to the Palisades or the San Gabriel Valley at any point between Pomona and Monrovia. All this indicates anything but a dull real estate market. There is no speculation in it. Each purchase is an investment, and means a new family added to the population. It is a solid growth, which means higher prices for real estate in coming years.

New Go East.

Take notice of the illustrations in this department today. Some of them portray the activity which prevails far east of the city. South of Pasadena as far as Alhambra is a district of unsurpassed beauty, with the primeval forest trees carefully preserved, with orange orchards of wide extent, with frequent car service to the city, lights, water, fine streets, and matchless views of mountain and plain. This district could not fail to attract. Here is a district where they say a finished house is being turned out of the contractor's hands about every half working day in the week. Residents in the district keep count of the vans which pass their doors loaded with the household effects of the newcomers, who are about to occupy one of the newly-finished handsome homes.

IMPRESSED WITH LOS ANGELES.

Indiana Man Buys Handsome Home Within Four Days of His Arrival in the City.

L. W. Leighton reports the following sales: B. C. Tyler to William H. Guthrie, a nine-room, two-story house at No. 1713 Oxford avenue, between Sixteenth street and Washington street for $7500. Mr. Guthrie has purchased this for a home. He is a business man from Logansport, Ind., having sold some of his interests there and has come to Los Angeles to live. He shows his good faith in the city by buying a handsome home within four days of his arrival here.

James H. Kelsey has sold to Edmund Haney, an eight-room, two-story house at No. 2108 Cambridge street, between Jasmine street and Harvard boulevard. Lot 52x140 feet, for $5000. Mr. Haney has bought for a home. Mr. Leighton was assisted, in this deal, by J. R. Kirkpatrick.

L. W. Leighton also reports the following: F. W. Bishop has sold to Paul E. Le Poids, a six-room bungalow at No. 2361 West Twenty-first street. Purchased for a home. The price was $4700. G. A. Bailey has sold to Sarah Dillian, a lot on the northeast corner of Western avenue and Cambridge street, for $2250. This property will be improved. Miss Philipps has sold to H. A. Barclay a lot 48x120 feet, on the north side of Roxbury street, 100 feet west of Hobart boulevard, for $1500. This lot will be improved with a bungalow. H. A. Winslow has sold to William Hardwick 1¼ acres on National boulevard at the Palms, price $1500.

PURCHASES ON WEST SEVENTH.

Newcomers Buy Handsome Residence Site in Fulmer Tract and Will Improve.

The Arthur W. Kinney Company reports the sale of a lot on West Seventh street. A. F. George has sold to T. J. Lesher, a lot, 60x155 feet, on the south side of the street, about 180 feet east of Westmoreland avenue. The reported consideration is $4750. Mr. and Mrs. Lesher plan, eventually, to make this city their home, and contemplate improving the property, with a high-class residence.

An unusual feature in connection with this lot is that it has been sold three times in the last seven months and by the same firm, each of the different owners realizing large profits on the investment. The location of this lot is in what is well known as the Fulmer tract, adjacent to Westlake Park. There are two more houses to be started at once on Leeward avenue, each to cost at least $4000, and a third one will be begun on Seventh street, ground for which will be broken during this month. The cost of this home alone will represent an expenditure of $15,000.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED AN ACRE.

Sierra Madre Ranch Purchased for Big Price—Buyer Will Improve With Home.

The Main Realty Company reports the sale to a local investor of a ten-acre orange grove at Sierra Madre. The property was sold to Will L. Wade of this city. It is situated on Sunnyside avenue, two blocks north of the car line. It is platted into thirty-four large lots, and is in an ideal location for subdivision purposes. It is set to 8-year-old Valencias and navels, and is considered the finest grove in the town. The price paid for the grove was $15,000, or at the rate of $1500 an acre. The new owner is planning to erect a handsome residence on the property within the near future.

SELL OCEAN PARK HOTEL.

Among the most important sales of George C. Peckham & Co., are the Hotel Savoy at Ocean Park to an eastern capitalist for a consideration of $60,000. A twenty-acre orange ranch, with a five-room bungalow at Arcadia, to a Los Angeles capitalist, for $25,000.

BUYS OPPOSITE THE ARCADE.

Investor Pays Eight Hundred Dollars Foot on Central Avenue.

Eight hundred dollars a foot was paid by A. R. Fraser of Ocean Park for frontage on Central avenue, between Fifth and Sixth streets, nearly opposite the entrance to the Arcade station. Mr. Fraser, according to the Courthouse records, purchased a lot, 50x100 feet, from T. W. Parker. The total consideration is $40,000. The property is improved with a two-story frame building with stores on the first floor and rooms above. The place brings a rental of $150 a month.

Several important transactions of Central-avenue realty are reported made by the Parker Realty Company, of which the above is only a small part. One of $80,000, it is rumored, followed that reported above for property immediately adjoining the place purchased by Mr. Fraser, who bought as an investment.

CATTLE KING BUYS CHOICE DOWNTOWN CORNER.

Hundred Thousand Dollars for Property at First and Main—Sold by German-American Bank to N. E. Cramer, and Deal Important in That He May Further Improve.

The largest sale of downtown real estate which has been reported for several months is that of the northeast corner of First and Main streets by the German-American Savings Bank to N. E. Cramer of Buffalo, Wyo., for a consideration of $100,000 cash. The transaction was negotiated through the offices of R. A. Rowan & Co., and William M. Garland & Co.

The property has a frontage of forty-five feet on Main street and is 111 feet deep on First street. It is improved with a substantial two-story and basement stone and brick building. The walls and foundation of this structure are capable of carrying several more floors, and it is more than likely that within the next two or three years Mr. Cramer will add at least three stories to the height of this building.

Part of the building has been occupied by the German-American Savings Bank for several years, in fact, the corner banking-room has been the cradle of the financial institution, in which it has grown from a very small affair to be the second largest savings bank in Los Angeles. The directors of the bank were induced to sell because they have taken a long and costly lease on the southeast corner of Fourth and Spring streets, and will need the funds to make necessary improvements to the new quarters. They will not give up the fine location at First and Main streets, however, having obtained a ten-year lease on the property, and will retain the branch there as a feeder. The remaining portions of the building are rented to thirteen other tenants, and the gross rental is about $11,000 a year, this sum paying about 9 per cent., net, on the investment.

Mr. Cramer is a wealthy cattle man of Buffalo, Wyo. For the last seven years he has been spending his winters in Los Angeles, and recently made an extended visit to Florida, Cuba and the Hawaiian Islands, and upon his return to Los Angeles expressed his feelings toward this city by investing $100,000 in a business corner. Mr. Cramer has been marketing his cattle in eastern cities for the past thirty years, and is thoroughly familiar with conditions throughout the eastern States. He says that he is far more impressed with the future of Los Angeles than with any other city in America.

SOUTHWESTERN ACTIVITY.

Vacant Lots and Small Houses in Demand in Section East of Main.

E. J. Clark has sold to O. F. Reckner, a lot 40x137 feet, improved with a five-room, modern cottage, on the north side of East Forty-eighth street, between South Park avenue and San Pedro street, for $2550. The sale was made through the agency of Kroesen Bros. The same firm reports the following: Abram Jacoby has sold to McClain Brothers, two lots, 40x100 feet each, on the north side of East Fortieth street, between South Park avenue and Eureka street, for $1800. D. W. Basselman has sold to H. Caruthers, a lot 40x165 feet, on the north side of East Forty-ninth street, between South Park and McKinley avenues, for $800. Kroesen Brothers have sold to J. F. Thomas, a lot 40x140 feet, improved with a small California house on the rear, on the east side of Walrath street, south of Slauson avenue, for $1150. Kroesen Brothers sold to James T. Judson, a lot 30x130 feet, on the west side of Harwood street, south of Slauson avenue, for $430. The same firm also has sold to G. A. Thomas, a lot 40x140 feet, with a small California house on the rear, on the east side of Walrath street, south of Slauson avenue, for $1000.

FOREST PARK ACTIVITY.

F. D. Davis has purchased the new eight-room house at No. 124 Commonwealth avenue, for $7000. The sale was made by Strong & Dickinson, who also report that the Anderson Mill Company has begun work on the foundation for a two-story eight-room house at No. 181 Commonwealth avenue. The mill company has also set the stakes for two other houses on the same street, and in the same block.

RAPID.

SOUTH PASADENA IS A GROWER.

FAST BECOMING HIGH-CLASS RESIDENCE SECTION.

Thousands of Handsome Homes Going Up in Oneonta Park and West Alhambra—Vying With the Crown City as a Show Place—Continued Demand for Property.

One of the most rapidly-growing sections surrounding the city is the district known as South Pasadena, Oneonta Park and the western sections of Alhambra. Situated on a gently sloping plain, this large section is particularly healthful. Thousands of homes have been erected in these districts, which is fast becoming one of the high-class residence sections. It is even vying with Pasadena as a place for fine homes. Great oak trees dot the entire region, and lend a parklike air to the place, much enhancing it as a residence section. Fast and frequent car service is another feature of almost every part of the district.

Photographs made by The Times last week, printed herewith, illustrate the class of residence being erected in great numbers in the districts named. Building is going on on every hand, an average of two houses a day being finished. These, of course, do not all rank with the class illustrated, but are the homes of people who can afford to put between $4000 and $7000 in dwellings.

Real estate men report considerable activity in the property. Conditions are improving, and are very solid. The values continue to hold up well, and the buying is almost entirely for improvement. Very little speculative buying has been noticed for months. The demand for homes, already completed, is brisk, but these are more or less scarce and prices are up, ranging from $25 to $60 a front foot. Unimproved lots vary in price from $900 to $1500 each.

Perhaps the most unique home of all those illustrated is that of C. B. Boothe, on the northwest corner of Oak street and Garfield avenue. It stands in the midst of a five-acre tract, planted to oranges. It is a new type of architecture, and is described by the owner and the architects, Parkinson and Bergstrum, as Californian, not Mission style. The building is very large, and irregular in shape, the picture showing only a glimpse of the front. It is absolutely fireproof, being built of hard-burned hollow tile, which is reinforced with strips of steel wire mesh, embedded in cement. It contains about twenty rooms and is finished in several kinds of mahogany, in a very simple manner, and is distinctly a "home place," and not one built for effect.

R. H. Lacy has a charmingly-situated dwelling on Garfield avenue, near the Arroyo. It is a two-story building designed by Hunt and Eager. It covers a ground space about 60x100 feet, and is surrounded by several acres of well-kept orchard. It tops a little rise, and is approached by a driveway lined by great oaks. This type of architecture is described by Mr. Hunt as Domestic English with American modifications.

The northwest corner of Milan avenue and Laurel street, Oneonta Park, has been improved by A. E. Halsey with a handsome two-story dwelling, containing nine large rooms. The house sets well back from the road, and is surrounded by grounds of a little more than an acre in extent. The chief characteristics of the exterior are the attractive cobblestone pillars on the side supporting the porch, and making the door frame. Six large oaks are especially attractive features of the grounds.

Teh upper picture in the small group shows a view of the recently completed Colonial style home of John K. Urmston, on Wilson avenue, near the Arroyo. Hudson and Munsell are the architects. The building is a particularly pure style of the Colonial type of architecture. It contains fourteen large rooms, and is surrounded by grounds of five acres extent. Two pergolas on either end, supported on characteristic Colonial pillars, are feature of the exterior. The house is surrounded by a terrace paved with brick, still further carrying out the idea of the old days. The interior is almost entirely finished in either ivory or white enamel. The dining-room is an exception, being finished in mahogany.

The small Spanish style of building, on the south side of Huntington Drive, near Oneonta Junction, appearing just below the photo of the Urmston home, is the new residence of W. W. Huntington. It is a beautiful type of this class of dwelling, being handsomely finished inside with hardwood and the latest improvements. A small court, or patio, in the center is a feature. This is roofed over with a skylight, under which is a pool for lilies. It contains twelve rooms, and cost between $12,000 and $15,000.

There are several other large buildings being erected in the district. E. P. Bosbyshell has a frontage of 165 feet on Oak street, in South Pasadena, and is now having the property cleared preparatory to building a $25,000 home. Train & Williams are the architects. This firm has several other attractive residences to build in the same section. One, a two-story ten-room house for L. T. Garnsey, local street-railway magnate and an associate of H. E. Huntington, will be located on the north side of Huntington Drive, west of Oneonta Junction. This will cost about $10,000. C. W. Brashear also will build a small bungalow on a side street near Huntington Drive, which will cost about $3000.

Stimson & Skidmore report considerable activity in the demand for homes in South Pasadena. Among the transfers of the past week was the sale of a five-room modern bungalow, which the firm is building in the North Oneonta Park tract, at Oak and Ramona streets, to William T. Lisenby, for a consideration of $4000. Mr. Lisenby is general manager of the Union Home Telephone and Telegraph Company, and has bought for a home. The same firm has several bungalows under the course of construction, and they have designed and are building an eight-room Swiss chalet for Frank A. Stephens, on Laurel near Milan, and in Oneonta Park.

HOMES AND HOME SITES.

J. P. Steffen reports the following sales: For Mrs. William Gilman, property at No. 1409 Temple street, consisting of a five-room cottage and a lot, 27x140 feet, $2800. For James R. Catherwood, a five-room cottage at No. 1054 Edgware avenue, Angeleno Heights, $3800. For Levi Scheidler, a lot on the southwest corner of Ellsworth and Robinson streets, $800. For Mrs. Amanda Pike, a lot on Burlington avenue, near Arnold street, $1800; and also a lot on the southwest corner of Kent and Casco streets, $1000.

NEW COTTAGE PARTLY FURNISHED

$4250 $4250 $4250
$4250 $4250 $4250

We have, for $4250, which price includes the worth of furniture, a handsome new 6-room cottage on an east-front lot on a desirable street. Photographs of both exterior and interior may be seen at our office.

Fine cement steps lead to a large roomy front porch. The entrance is attractive, having bevel plate glass, leading to a large, attractive living-room with beamed ceilings, paneled walls, built-in seats and bookcases, and French windows. The dining-room is bright and cheerful, having plenty of large windows and has a handsome buffet and brick mantel. To the rear of this room is a mighty convenient kitchen with fine nickel plumbing and a plentiful supply of bins, drawers, shelves and cupboards. There are three large, sunny, artistically-tinted bedrooms.

This house is unusually attractive on the exterior, having a large gable on the front which is finished with exposed beams and plaster. Inside the lighting fixtures are tasty, having been specially designed, while a little touch of individuality is lent through the arrangement of the opening between the dining-room and living-room, which is finished by two artistic buttresses supporting posts which run to the ceiling.

This is a bargain—a sacrifice—as the owner desires to leave at once.

If you are looking for a perfect home in the swell exclusive Westlake district, here is one which will meet all requirements. Substantially built on a well-located lot, this 7-room house has many unique and desirable features.

The reception hall, finished in antique oak is, like every other room in the house, floored with quarter-sawed oak. Large, bright and attractive, it is just the kind of a room to make your guest feel at home. The crowning feature of the living-room is the fine brick chimney, which with the commodious built-in seats and fine weathered oak beamed ceiling and paneled walls make an exceedingly attractive picture.

The dining-room has a beautiful built-in buffet with art metal and art glass doors, which with attractive casement windows and broad-paneled walls with woodwork finished in ebony make a room all that could be desired. The kitchen and the bathroom are supplied with the finest and most up-to-date plumbing. The sleeping rooms on the second floor bright, attractive, finished in ivory, are well supplied with closets.

As a bargain this cannot be duplicated at the price.

Here's a modern 8-room residence, just completed, located on an east-front lot, 60x150, on exclusive St. Andrew's Place. Nowhere in the city can you find a more desirable environment. It's a high-class residence in every respect, with first-class appointments, the lighting fixtures for instance being the equal of those in a $25,000 house. The floors are of highly-polished quarter-sawed white oak; the entrance of handsome oak and bevel plate glass approached over a fine cement driveway.

The reception hall is large, has art glass windows on the landing of the elegant winding staircase. The living-room is spacious with 5-foot paneling in oak, above which the finish is imported Spanish leather. Here is a built-in bookcase 12 feet long; also writing desk in the same treatment. The walls of the dining-room are paneled in leather and silk tapestries; there is also a built-in buffet with bevel glass and hard metal doors, and opalescent rear window, while the woodwork of the room is finished in antique oak. The buffet kitchen is equipped with many large drawers, bins and plenty of shelf room.

Upstairs are convenient and attractive sleeping rooms finished in ivory with built-in drawers and clothes closets; also modern up-to-date bathrooms equipped with high-class plumbing and fixtures. There is a servant's bedroom with lavatory and bathroom in connection on the first floor.

This house can be purchased on TERMS if you act at once.

$12,500 $12,500 $12,500
$12,500 $12,500 $12,500

This home is finished throughout the lower floor in fine quarter-sawed oak, put in by the best workmen obtainable in the city. No expense was spared to produce an A-1 job, and as the house has never been occupied the beautiful workmanship on window and door frames, doors, and paneling on walls and ceilings is perfectly intact.

SPECIAL NOTICE—The glass used in bookcases, buffet doors and throughout the house where bevel plate is used, is the best in the market—quoted today at $3.50 per square foot.

The large, cheerful dining-room, with walls paneled 5 feet high with oak, has a specially-designed built-in buffet with heavy glass doors and hand-carved oak trimming. In the pantry in the rear beautiful shelf, bin and drawer room is available. The whole front of the house has plate glass windows, while the entrance itself is of heavy oak with art plate glass on the sides, making a very attractive appearance. The den, so dear to the heart of every man, has walls of paneled oak and luxurious imported tapestries, together with a mantel finished in old gold and built-in bookcases with plate glass doors furnished with glass knobs.

Five large bedrooms, one of them 21x16, exclusive of a front alcove, which contains built-in seats, are all tinted in soft harmonious colors and well supplied with closets. The cemented and bricked cellar contains the best furnace manufactured; the large cemented porch in front extends the whole width of the house and everything else in the appointments of the place is strictly up-to-date, even to an interior telephone.

REMEMBER, this house has never been occupied, its location is superb, facing a $20,000 home, and for the price it cannot be duplicated at the present price of materials and building.

MODERN AND ATTRACTIVE HOMES.

ON W. 22ND ST.

Here is a 6-room bungalow, almost new, right down to date in every feature, that is offered at a bargain. Big lot, 50x137 ft.; house has veranda and living-room across entire front, oak floors, built-in seat, book shelves, fireplace with outside chimney, etc.; dining-room paneled, with plate rail, buffet and casement windows; 2 large bedrooms, fine bath, cabinet kitchen and laundry porch; a splendid home at $4250; easy terms.

CLOSE IN BUNGALOW.

Near 2 car lines and but a few blocks from St. James Park, we offer this attractive home of 6 rooms. Lot is 50x150 to alley, nicely improved; house has large veranda, spacious reception hall and living-room, bright and complete dining-room, 2 bedrooms, bath, kitchen, pantry, and large screen porch. In appearance this property is a typical bungalow; lies in sewer district, with every convenience; attractive quality; quoted at $4750.

A $[illegible] BARGAIN.

This is a very handsome property of 7 rooms, 4 bedrooms, located on W. 22nd street in charming locality. Party must sell; the chance of the summer for you. There are 5 rooms, including living and dining-rooms, reception hall, 2 bedrooms, bath, kitchen, pantries and screen porch, downstairs, and above stairs are two large bedrooms, big closets, store room, and hot and cold water, with drainage basin. The property is almost new, right down to date with flemish oak, oak floors, panelings and beam ceilings, book shelves and outside chimney. It could not be built for nearly $[illegible].

10-ROOM RESIDENCE.

Brand new, just out of the contractor's hands, but must sell. Location near Adams street in most exclusive district. Broad cement veranda, fine spacious living-room, music room and dining-room; also den, kitchen apartments and servant's bedroom below stairs; 4 big sleeping rooms, many closets, bath and large balcony above. The finish and completeness of this home are extraordinary. The white enamel is 5 coat work, and all the oak and flemish oak is brought to a surface that cannot be surpassed. It is one of those houses built to last a lifetime and still look always young. There are extra lavatories, basement with two entrances, furnace, etc., etc. The price of $[illegible] is $[illegible] too low.

ON ARAPAHOE ST.

In this superb close in home we simply say to you we have astonishing value; go to see it and if it suits we guarantee you will buy it. The ten rooms include reception room, music room, library, dining-room, (all spacious, splendid apartments arranged in unique and cozy fashion,) then sun room, kitchen, pantry, laundry and verandas; all living-rooms have oak floors, handsome decorations, broad windows, charming appointments, and give long vistas and spaces for entertaining. Above stairs are 4 sleeping rooms, two ordinary balconies, and a third broad, partly inclosed and covered balcony that only needs glass panels to make of it a 5th bedroom. There is basement under nearly the entire house, furnace heat in every room, double floors, attic, large closets, the best of material and construction throughout. The lot is 67½ feet wide, with retaining wall, cement drive, barn and garage; abundance of bearing fruit trees, rare flowers and vines. This property could not be replaced under $11,000. The price is $[illegible].

WHY PAY RENT ANY LONGER?

There is no excuse for you doing so. We make it possible for every one to own their own home.

Do you know a man is not half a man until he stops paying rent?

We will sell you one of our new modern cottages or bungalows on our ELDER PLACE NO. 1, or our new SOUTHWEST TRACT, or we will build TO SUIT YOU, on any lot in either of these two tracts, and in either case you make us a small cash payment of 20 per cent. on cost of your house is given to those buying or we build for you in our new SOUTHWEST TRACT.
AND BALANCE MONTHLY, INCLUDING INTEREST. SPECIAL DISCOUNT.

This remains in force a short time only. Our cottages and bungalows are selling faster than we can complete them. 10 sold last week.

We have over 30 under way and have sold already all but six of them; selling them before they are half completed.

Many before they are started. Never had a better demand for our houses than we are having for the ones in our new SOUTHWEST TRACT.

We intend to build 400 modern homes there.

Also 2 unique business blocks of 5 rooms each, with second floors for school, church, social and lodge purposes.

The very best of improvements, 5-foot cement sidewalks and curbing. Petrolithic paved streets, gas, electric lights. Sewer, city water, lawns, graded and seeded to grass, shade trees and palms.

This tract will be made by us one of the choicest residence sites in the city.

We do all of our work, draw all plans and specifications, etc.

Have 20 men now working for us. Have built over 1200 homes in the city.

We build the best class of homes. This is one reason why our houses are so in demand.

DON'T LOOK LIKE DULL TIMES OUT MONETA AVE. WAY.

It's one continuous building boom out here. To see the many new homes being erected at a time when the realty market is said to be dull is tribute enough to the popularity of this district as an ideal home section. Hundreds who realized the future of this section three, or two, or even one year ago, have been made rich by their foresight. The same opportunity exists for you today. You must realize that values here will steadily enhance if for no other reason than that Los Angeles must grow towards its harbor—San Pedro.

We're selling lots now in

PECKHAM'S
MONETA AVENUE
SQUARE.

At $425 up, that will return you a good profit before your payments are completed. We've priced them low enough to make them the CHEAPEST HIGH CLASS lots in the southwest, and we've completed all improvements, including oiled streets, cement walks, trees planted, water piped. All lots level and above grade. Situated right between Figueroa st., Moneta ave. and Main st. blvd., 5 cent fare. Better buy now before winter activity, when prices will be higher. Easy terms. A new residence tract only 20 minutes' ride on Huntington's inter-urban line.

This beautiful tract lies about 8 miles from the city, in the beautiful San Gabriel Valley.

We have just completed a fine business block in the Mission style. A number of new houses are under construction and plans are being drawn for others.

Soil is perfect, no alkali or adobe. HUNTINGTON says THE SAN GABRIEL VALLEY is the GARDEN SPOT OF CALIFORNIA.

We have 120 acres and are putting all of our time and energy into developing and making this a beautiful high-class subdivision. We are SUCCEEDING.

A number of lots sold this last week, and we have many inquiries. BUY NOW AND REAP THE PROFITS.

A 100-foot boulevard runs through RAMONA PARK. Free tickets and further information at our office. Let us talk to you in person about beautiful RAMONA PARK.

MANCHESTER HEIGHTS.

Now is your opportunity to investigate the wonderful opportunities of this high-grade subdivision, which is a beautifully lying piece of land, with a gradual rise from Vermont avenue to Normandie avenue, and the altitude gives a fine view of the long ranges of mountains and of Los Angeles and surrounding country, and also the benefits of the ocean breeze. Manchester Heights has two rapid transit electric lines, and opposite the southwest boundary of Los Angeles, also has the pleasures of country life and the conveniences of the city, near stores and churches, and only one block from a new $14,000 public school. The improvements are high-grade, including graded and oiled streets, lined with beautiful trees; also cement sidewalks and curbs and abundance of artesian water piped along the rear of all lots; these improvements are of the best workmanship, which will be finished by an early date. The soil is of a dark, sandy loam, where fruits, vegetables and flowers grow of surpassing quality. Invest your idle dollar where it will double every year; large, sightly lots, 152 feet deep to 16-foot alleys. Our agents on the ground at all times. Office open Sunday. Bring your friends or your family out and view the beauties and pleasures of this healthful location.

A GOOD INVESTMENT.

FOR SALE—
A SNAP A SNAP A SNAP

I will sell you 17 of the finest located lots in beautiful Huntington Park; 8 facing west, and 9 facing east. Two corners 57x150, 7 inside lots 57x150 and 8 inside lots 50x150 to a 15-foot alley, making a frontage of 456 feet on two streets, and 315 on another. This property is now improved with a full two-story strictly modern 8-roomed house, built on a solid concrete foundation 12 inches thick up to floor joice. Has concrete basement, and steam heat in all rooms and bath, artistically laid out grounds, well set lawn, worlds of fruit, shade, and flowers, good barn, electric lights, telephones, piped for gas. Finest water in the world, exceptionally fine soil. Everything grows here like magic, (no mud in wet season) as the soil is of a sandy loam. These lots are all piped with 2-inch pipe, and 2-inch openings for sub-irrigation. This is an exceptionally fine place for someone to build houses to rent, or sell on the installment plan as there is a great demand for houses there right now. From the fact this property is only one block from the new $32,000 school house, or this property would make a fine lemon ranch or truck garden, from the fact it is so well watered. If you are looking for something good see this at once. The price is right. Prof. GEO. A. GARLOW, owner, room 428 Citizens' National Bank.

FOR SALE—
INVESTORS, ATTENTION.

THERE IS NO SECTION OF LOS ANGELES THAT PRESENTS AS PROFITABLE A FIELD FOR INVESTMENT AS THE SECTION EAST OF MAIN STREET, FROM FOURTH TO SEVENTH STREETS, AND FROM MAIN TO CENTRAL AVE. THE TREMENDOUS IMPROVEMENTS BEING MADE IN THIS SECTION OF THE CITY AND THE LOW VALUES COMPARED TO OTHER SECTIONS PROVES THIS STATEMENT. EAST FIFTH, EAST SIXTH, EAST SEVENTH AND CENTRAL AVE., FROM FOURTH TO SEVENTH STREETS, ARE BOUND TO SHOW A GREAT ENHANCEMENT IN VALUE DURING THE COMING YEAR.

WE CAN DELIVER 100x110 FEET TO ALLEY ON GLADYS AVE., DIRECTLY OPPOSITE THE NEW UNION DEPOT, WHICH WILL SHORTLY BE BEGUN BY THE SOUTHERN PACIFIC. PRESENT INCOME $125 PER MONTH. CAN DELIVER AT $4,000 FOR A SHORT TIME, WITH SUITABLE TERMS. THIS IS THE BARGAIN OF THE DEPOT SECTION.

WILL PAY A HIGH RATE OF INTEREST WHEN IMPROVED WITH A FIRST OR SECOND-CLASS HOTEL. LET US SHOW IT TO YOU.

WE HAVE MANY OTHER PROPERTIES ON EAST SIXTH AND EAST SEVENTH STREETS AT PRICES THAT WILL SHOW A VERY LARGE PERCENTAGE ON YOUR INVESTMENT IN THE VERY NEAR FUTURE.

FOR SALE—
One of those close-in corners that are seldom offered for sale and especially at a price that you can afford to own it. When I tell you what corner it is, you will be surprised. The crowd down there now is about as thick as they are at 4th & Spring streets, perhaps not quite so many dudes, but more of the brawn and sinew kind, the kind that develop and build up a town.
There will be two car lines on E. 7th st. inside of the next sixty days. The corner I wish to have you consider is the southeast corner of 7th & San Pedro sts., 100x112½. This corner will bring in five or six thousand dollars per year with an additional investment of $7000 to $8000 for a one-story building. We have tenants already waiting.
The owner might consider a smaller piece of property valued between $25,000 to $30,000 as part payment.
Perhaps before you call you had better look up the price of the other three corners, so you will be posted and ready to talk business when you call at our office. No information over the phone.

FOR SALE—
FRUIT AND FARM LANDS
IN THE GREAT WORLD RENOWNED SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY.

The home of the early orange, fruit and agricultural products.

Buying this land is the road to success.

You haven't seen California if you have not seen San Joaquin Valley.

These are some of the most fertile lands in America. They successfully grow the orange, lemon, grape, fig, walnut, eucalyptus tree, alfalfa, sugar beet, potatoes, peanut, corn, barley and wheat. It is here some of the greatest vineyards of the world are found. This country produces the most perfect type of the grape whether it be table, wine or any of the varieties of raisin. As for the grain, it might be termed the granary of the Western Continent. It is here farming is done on a large scale, some farmers sowing five to ten thousand acres to wheat annually. It is here, the most modern of farm machinery is put into use. These vast farms are now being cut into smaller holdings; settlers are filling up and developing this country. This is one of the best places on earth for the man of moderate means, for the investor, speculator or capitalist to get good lands cheap. The soil is a rich sandy loam, from 7 to 20 feet deep, with a mixture of decomposed granite and a heavy subsoil, making it easy to cultivate at any time. There is an inexhaustible supply of the finest water in the world, obtained at a depth of from 10 to 75 feet.

Located in Tulare and Kern counties, the climate is equable; no fog, no ice, snow, blizzard or cyclones, an ideal health resort, the air perfectly dry, nights cool and only a few hours run from Los Angeles. Such is this, the heart of the great San Joaquin Valley, the peer of any citrus, deciduous or agricultural land in the West. Will produce each year grain sufficient to almost pay for the land. This land will produce four to five crops of alfalfa each year; it will produce navel oranges five to eight weeks earlier than Southern California. This fruit is the first to reach the eastern holiday market, when high prices prevail.

Many large tracts are now being planted to oranges, walnuts and grapes.

We wish to call your attention to the land before the advance is too great; while they are at these low prices, while you can now get in on some of the most select pieces at from $15 to $40 and some cheaper ones at $8 and up. We are reasonably sure that in a short time they will be double the price they are today, yes, twice double what they are today. Land of such quality right in the heart of the great State of California, with this superior climate, at prices from $10 to $50 per acre cannot remain at these prices very long. Three-thirds of the people who go to see this country, buy. This is your opportunity to get in on the ground floor. If you cannot buy a large tract, get a price; in any event go up and see it. We run weekly excursions at a low rate and will be glad to have you join us on one of these trips. For full information and particulars address NATIONAL REALTY AND TRUST CO., 122 S. Broadway, Los Angeles. Home [illegible]. Main [illegible]. Residence Temple [illegible]. 15

FOR SALE—AT A GREAT SACRIFICE, 1600 acres of choice level land in the heart of the best fruit district in Southern California, surrounded on all sides with orange and olive orchards and considered the best grape land in the county; only 30 miles northeast from Los Angeles, on main line of S. P. and Santa Fe railroads, in one of the best irrigated districts in the State. An unlimited supply of water can be had at a reasonable cost. The land has been planted to barley and will pay a handsome rate of interest on the price asked, for that purpose. Lands on all sides are selling from $300 to $1000 per acre; this would sell readily for $200 per acre if cut up in 5, 10 and 20-acre plots. There is a great profit in this for some one; it will stand the closest possible investigation. It must be sold in order to settle up an estate, and we have a short time in which to offer it at the sacrifice price of $50 per acre. Don't overlook this if you want to buy land that is land at less than half its value. Full description, location, etc., will be gladly given any one. Call at our office.

FOR SALE—A FINE COUNTRY PLACE OF five acres, at a bargain, four-room California house, surrounded by the following fruit and ornamental trees and shrubs—14 peach, 6 pear, 2 apricot, 3 quince, 4 fig, 3 plum, 5 apple, 1 pomegranate, 4 crabapple, 2 English walnut, 3 almond, 15 large eucalyptus, 1 large pepper, 2 pine, 3 large umbrella trees, 1 jasmine, 1 lemon verbena, 6 lilac, 24 choice roses and an immense Gold of Ophir climbing rose covering an entire building. Excellent well and windmill with water piped to house, barn and poultry pens; 3 acres of this in grapes, now ripe. An ideal location, 4 blocks from new Covina car line, 28 minutes from Los Angeles. $4200 buys it, $1500 cash. C. M. LIPPINCOTT & CO., owners, 915 Union Trust Bldg. Home phone F4788. 15

FOR SALE—
I have got the choicest 10 acres of Hollywood close-in foothill property on the market. It is improved with house and orchard and can be made to pay 6 per cent. on the investment as it is. Subdivided, a profit of over 100 per cent. can be shown. Hold it and it will inevitably increase largely in value. The new Franklin ave. line will go within one block. Call and see me about it; a snap.
ARTHUR W. CLEAVER,
325 Bryson Block. B'dway 2636. Phone. 15

FOR SALE—SNAP, IN FACT IT'S A REGUlar pickup. Think of it. 22 acres of choice land just southwest of the city on Western ave., only short distance from the Vermont-ave. car lines; surrounded with first-class improved tracts, where lands have sold as high as $800 per acre in the last year; this must be sold and the price is way low for a quick sale; price $175 per acre. There is $2000 mortgage at 6 per cent. Can remain or be paid off. So it only requires a small amount of cash. If subdivided would sell for $500 per acre. Act quickly for it's certainly a bargain. A. T. JERGINS & CO., room 400, Herman W. Hellman Bldg., corner Fourth and Spring sts. 15

FOR EXCHANGE—
BY HOUSE & ANDERSON, 306 BRYSON BLOCK.

We have this week had listed with us some very fine properties, especially acreage property and all clear. We want to notify all owners and agents that we are prepared this coming week to take up any large or small deals that you may have. We have clear acreage and cash to put in on Los Angeles property up to $10,000.

We have a 6-room modern house in the south part of the city, $2000 and same owner has 20 acres near Riverside worth $800, two lots clear in Los Angeles $400. Will put in all this property clear for house and lot in Des Moines, Iowa, or Kansas City, Missouri. Have other property to put in up to $7500, or will take property at same value.

11-room modern house in the Southwest, close in, $7000, mortgage $2000, and 10 to 20 acres close to Los Angeles, all in alfalfa, abundance of water, $200 an acre clear. The owner will put these two properties in together with some cash up to $5000, for any good business property in the South or Southeast. Bring in your descriptions and we are prepared to make a quick trade, as the owner is right here.

We have a fine home on East Jefferson st., 6 rooms, hard finish, large lot, price $2250; Jefferson is the widest street running from Central to Main in the South and is now being paved, which will make it a thorough business street. The owner wishes to exchange his equity of $1250 for small property, improved or unimproved, Ocean Park or Santa Monica; might put in some cash or clear lots in Los Angeles if property is bigger than his equity.

3 houses and 3 lots in the city of Fillmore, price $4000. Owner wants to exchange for Western Nebraska land, cheap land that can be put under plow. The property has a mortgage of about $800; will clear the mortgage if owner can get land enough for the amount or will trade his equity.

We have party with 15½ acres, price $250 per acre, and all clear, in a city of 10,000 inhabitants, close to Los Angeles on the Salt Lake, Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads and also electric line. Owner is going to Indianapolis, Indiana and will make a quick trade for improved property in that city; will put in some cash if necessary, or will trade clear for clear or unimproved property. Wants to make the trade before the first of next month. 15

361—25 acres adjoining the city limits of Anaheim in 15-year-old walnuts. Place has its own water, and sells enough to other people to make it absolutely free. Improvements are of the very best and with the stock that goes with the place, could not be duplicated for less than $8000. The home has all the modern conveniences, is large and in every way a very desirable residence. Price $25,000, clear. With the improvements, water, and location, the grove is a bargain. Owner will take good rental property in Los Angeles in exchange.

620—10½ acres at West Riverside, located on 8th street, being the Los Angeles-Riverside Boulevard, 5 acres in 16-year-old navels; 3 acres in Valencias; 4 acres in apricots. The place has a constant flow of water which is practically free, being a Spanish right. The income on this grove will go to $3000 a year as soon as the Valencias are in full bearing. Cash price $18,000 clear. Adjoining property is held at $1300 an acre. Will take L.A. or Ocean Park income in exchange. Don't overlook this bargain.

462—160 acres in the foothills east of Santa Ana, with excellent water. The water alone is worth the price of the property. The location is ideal for a club or sanatarium. Cash price $5000; clear. Want Los Angeles improved in exchange.

STUDENT ARMY AWAITS SIGNAL.

Campaign of Learning Is to Begin Tomorrow.

Eighty-two School Portals Will Swing Wide.

Old-fashioned Ideas to Give Place to New.

"To school, to school," will be the cry tomorrow morning in Los Angeles. Eighty grammar and two high schools will open their doors to receive the future citizens. Friday and yesterday the two high schools were registering new pupils, and each reports a record entrance list.

Yesterday a teachers' meeting brought the instructors of the city together at the Polytechnic High School, where "the four wise men," as the superintendents of schools are called, told them of the policy for the coming year. "No spectacular features, no striving for effect, but a steady improvement," is insisted upon.

Assistant Superintendent Frank Bunker, who begins his first school term here, thanked the assembled teachers for their cordial reception of him and expressed the hope that future relations would be both pleasant and profitable.

Deputy Superintendent Bettinger has just returned from an outing in the mountains. He said he planned his speech while climbing a difficult trail, and he lost his theme when he lost the trail.

Deputy Superintendent Moniux pleaded for the education of the heart and the hand, as well as of the head. "The three H's of today, head, heart, and hand," declared he, "touch every point, while the three R's of our fathers touch only the least important, the head."

COURSE OF STUDY.

The new course of study embodies the newest educational ideas. It has been mapped out by the combined efforts of the principals, the teachers, and the parents of the children. It is not offered as a perfect plan of school work, but is believed to be a step in the right direction. An effort has been made to do away with useless things, and to make prominent everything that is practical.

The small boy will find a number of pages left out of his arithmetic, or at least he will not have to study them. Mere routine work has been eliminated that more time may be devoted to essentials.

The reading course is outlined, too, with a view to teaching pupils what, as well as how to read, and a list of books for home reading is provided.

Webster's time-honored spelling book will not be used as a text-book, but spelling will not be omitted, of course.

Writing is to be "revived" this year, and English will be given prominence, although grammar will be spelled with a small g. But the most important changes have been made in such studies as history, geography and literature, which the framers of the new course feel are entitled to a larger measure of attention than they have received in the past.

As the result of strong public opinion and the conclusions arrived at, and at the late N.E.A. convention, moral instruction in the public schools has been made a feature of the new course. For the first time in years definite moral instruction will be given by the teachers. It is intended that no child shall lack instruction in honesty, and the other fundamental virtues. A sound body to house a sound mind and a pure soul is the keynote, and there will be daily lessons in proper methods of walking, sitting, standing and breathing, as well as in morality.

A PORTABLE SCHOOL.

A new school has been organized at Denver avenue, in the Burke tract one block west of Figueroa street. The pupils will be housed for a time at the school building at Main and Fifty-second streets. The Board of Education, however, has advertised for a portable structure that can be put together like a puzzle. It will not be an insignificant affair, but a fine-looking building and "Old Glory" will float above it. When a permanent building is provided, the portable structure will be used elsewhere.

It is expected that fully 2500 additional pupils will have to be provided for on the first day of school, and that by the end of the term, 4000 will have been added to last year's number.

To accommodate all, half-day sessions will be the order of the day in many of the primary departments. It is hoped that no such arrangement will be necessary for the grammar grades.

An ungraded room has been added to the Twenty-first-avenue school in East Los Angeles. By a coincidence it makes the twenty-first ungraded room in the city. As soon as money can be realized from the special school tax lately voted, new school buildings will be erected.

JILTED LOVER SHOOTS GIRL.

THOUGH HIT IN THREE PLACES, VICTIM MAY LIVE.

Jealous Italian Turns Gun on Himself, but His Aim Is so Poor He Misses the Mark, Then Her Friends Jump on Him—He's in Jail and She's in the French Hospital.

Crazed with the fear that a rival had won from him the love of his sweetheart, Lorenzo Isaia, a young Italian, yesterday made one last plea to the woman. Scorned, he drew a revolver and fired three shots into her body. He then turned the revolver upon himself, but so poor was his aim that he missed twice.

The woman, Marie Isaia, is in a dangerous condition, but the surgeons in attendance have hope that she will recover. One bullet struck the left clavicle, ranged across the breast, creating a flesh wound, and came out just over the right clavicle. The second bullet struck her in the right arm and a third bullet wound showed in her back just to the right of the spinal column.

Following the shooting, Isaia was set upon by a number of his countrymen and severely beaten. Things would have gone hard with him had not Patrolman Leon heard the sound of the fight and dashed to the rescue. Isaia is in jail pending the result of the woman's injuries. Although of the same name they are not related.

The man had worked for some time as baker in the Franco-Italian restaurant. When he had accumulated enough money he decided to return to Italy and bring back with him the sweetheart of his boyhood. Luigi Isaia, brother of the girl, consented to the match and Isaia returned to Italy, sought out pretty Marie and asked her to be his wife. The woman consented, it is said. It was arranged that she was to accompany Isaia from Italy to America and that the wedding should take place in Los Angeles. Marie knew nothing of chaperones and trusted herself to her lover.

On the way over, the woman alleged her sweetheart forced such indignities upon her that she loathed him. When she arrived in Los Angeles she sought out her brother and told him of the trials to which she had been subjected.

The brother advised her to have nothing more to do with Isaia and the sister accepted his advice. She moved to the Hotel D'Italia, No. 6[illegible] New High street.

Yesterday morning, Lorenzo, hearing that his sweetheart had decided to give him up and that even then she was looking with favor upon another suitor, thought of the $1000 spent in the voyage and became very angry. He went to the Hotel D'Italia and dramatically asked Miss Isaia if she would marry him.

She replied that she would not and that she never wanted to see him again. Then he fired. The injured woman is at the French Hospital.

AMONG THE LODGES.

Social Functions Past and to Come in Secret Society Circles—Elaborate Danish Affair.

Princess Marie Lodge, a Danish organization, will hold a reception, lecture and dance at Symphony Hall Saturday evening. The affair will be the most elaborate function ever given by the order. Mme. Back-Myer, the lecturer, will speak on "Anderson's Fairy Tales." The arrangements committee is composed of Mmes. Dodd, Mohr and Nelson and the Misses Larson and Jenson.

The members of Southgate Chapter, B.O.P., were entertained Wednesday by Mrs. A. L. Davis at her home, No. 1220 Newton street. The afternoon was devoted to music. At the dinner, which followed, the guests numbered twenty-five.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry R. Coates entertained the members of Southgate Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, at Hotel Welland, last Tuesday evening, in honor of the birthday of Worthy Matron Addie F. Dunn. Luncheon was served in a dining-room decorated in pink roses and carnations. The centerpiece was a large birthday cake, inscribed with the name of the guest of honor and bearing a wax candle for each year of her age. After the luncheon Mrs. Dunn was presented with a set of sherbet glasses. The presentation speech was made by Associate Matron Alice Smith.

Last Saturday evening the Past Noble Grands' Association of Paloma Rebekah Lodge gave a card party at Burbank Parlors. Whist was the game played. At the close of play refreshments were served. Mrs. M. A. Wright and Mrs. E. Clapper were hostesses.

On September 27, Magnolia Lodge, Degree of Honor, will entertain the delegates to the semi-annual convention at Mammoth Hall. The drill team demonstrate various intricate parts of the ritual of the order.

Señor Aldasoro, who is an engineer, expressed a desire to see the hydraulic process of dam construction employed by Engineer Mulholland at the Silver Lake Reservoir, and after luncheon at the Jonathan Club, the delegates from Mexico, accompanied by Mr. Corey and Gen. H. G. Otis, made an automobile trip to the reservoir site and inspected the work. They were much interested in the hydraulic operations, and in the work of covering the Ivanhoe Reservoir with a roof supported by concrete pillars and girders, which is progressing rapidly.

The Mexican officials will go to San Diego today, and later in the week they will proceed to Yuma. Señor Puga is inspector of protective works on the Colorado River, and he will go down to the Imperial heading and examine the dams closing the break and the levee built by the Southern Pacific to prevent a repetition of the excursion of the Colorado which resulted in the creation of Salton Sea.

LICENSE TO MOVE?

Man Bringing Household Goods from Gardena to Los Angeles Says Officer Demanded It.

Stopped inside the city boundary when he was moving to town from his Gardena ranch, J. K. Thompson of room 317 Blanchard Hall, was told by a policeman that he required a license to haul his wagonload of household goods. Thompson says he thinks the city is drawing the license lines pretty close when it demands a head tax from every one who attempts to move in.

"Maybe the policeman who stopped me was mistaken, or possibly it was because I started to move on Friday, the 13th," remarked Thompson last night. "Anyway, I was coming to town from the ranch with my household possessions loaded on a hay wagon. I was holding the rope to which was attached our family cow, and a Gardena man, who had contracted to move the stuff, was driving the team.

"At Central avenue and Fortieth street a policeman wearing star No. 353 stopped us, and said we would have to have a license before we could go any farther. After a good deal of parleying, in which I could not understand what the license was for, I told the officer he was at liberty to arrest us, but that we could furnish no license.

"While he was talking with us, a big moving van that had a license number on it, brushed up against our wagon and smashed about $5 worth of furniture. Of course, this may have been just an accident, but I thought at the time that it was strange.

"Finally the officer took the names of myself and the driver, and we continued our journey to my new home at No. 805 North Soto street.

"This license wrinkle is too complicated for me to fathom. Maybe some of the city officials can explain this circumstance when they get around to the City Hall on Monday."

SAN DIEGO STIR IN SELLING

MORE TRADING IN OLD TOWN BY THE BAY.

Thirty-five Thousand Paid for Corner at Eighth and E—Angeleno Buys Two Lots and Will Improve. Local Contractor Getting the Job. Many Other Transactions.

A number of fair-sized sales of realty were made during the week at San Diego, where the market continues active. J. A. Delucca, a merchant of Julian, has bought from Paul Finch, the northwest corner of Eighth and F. streets, 54x71 feet, for $35,000. The property is occupied by a three-story concrete building, the lower floor being used for stores and the two upper stories as a rooming-house.

"The Hillcrest" at National City Terrace has been sold by Gertrude Horton to Dr. E. W. Walsh for $11,000. This is considered one of the choicest bits of suburban property in the county.

Attorney James E. Wadham has bought from J. W. Jackson of Denver, Colo., the northeast corner of Eighth and Ash streets, 100x200 feet, for a consideration of $16,000. A fine house is on the lot. Mr. Wadham buys the property for a home.

W. H. Francis, county clerk, of San Diego, has bought from Fannie R. Eaton, the property at the corner of Ninth and Beech streets, 125 feet on Ninth street, by 100 feet on Beech street, for $11,000.

For a consideration of $11,500, George Risinon of Los Angeles, has bought two lots on Ninth street. On one of the lots he plans to erect a residence which will cost about $8000. The other will be improved with a flat building, calling for an expenditure of $7500.

Mrs. A. H. Baxter has bought a lot at Sixth and University, 50x54 feet, upon which she will erect a brick building which will be occupied by a bank. The structure will cost about $10,000.

M. Hall announces that he will build a clubhouse at Bird Rock, beyond Pacific Beach, which will cost $10,000. A contract was let during the week for the construction of the Lanier Hotel, to cost about $40,000. Word has been received from the Los Angeles Trust Company that the $150,000 issue of school bonds was probably legal. The money will be spent in the construction of new school buildings and additions to existing buildings. The contract for building the Sun block has been awarded to C. G. Anderson of Los Angeles. The California and Mexican Fishing Company has applied to the Harbor Commissioner for a wharf franchise. If this is granted, a number of buildings will be erected. The Roman Catholic Church has announced plans for important additions to the property at the corner of Third and Beach streets, including the construction of a school building.

RANCHES IN DEMAND.

"Twin Oaks" at La Verne Bought by New York Woman—Resale of Claremont Property.

Prof. C. B. Sumner has sold his orange grove of ten acres, known as "Twin Oaks," in La Verne, to Miss Louise Fisk, a wealthy New York woman. Miss Fisk will build a handsome $8000 home on the property.

Silas B. Himrod, who bought a ten-acre orange grove from George A. Ferris on Cucamonga avenue, in Claremont, three weeks ago, for $10,500, sold it last week to David A. Hawk, of Pomona, for $11,500. The sales were made through the F. E. Harrison agency.

BUYS ALHAMBRA RANCH.

The Alhambra Realty Company reports the sale of a three-acre orange ranch near Alhambra by Dr. S. C. Balch to Mrs. J. C. Spong of Minneapolis, upon which the purchaser plans the erection of a $10,000 home. The reported price is $8000.

ALHAMBRA PLACE SOLD.

Famous "Champion Place" Purchased by F. P. Burch for Thirty Thousand.

Another transfer of one of Alhambra's beautiful homes has been made. The famous "Champion Place" has been sold by the former owner, S. W. Champion, to Franklin P. Burch of Ocean Park, for a consideration of $30,000. This well-known show place in the now famous Oak Knoll section is perhaps the most attractive of the larger dwellings in the neighborhood of Los Angeles. It is surrounded by spacious grounds, which are dotted with huge live oaks and other natural shrubbery. There is also an eight-acre orange ranch in connection with the place.

The sale was made by the Alhambra Realty Company.

AUGUST BUILDING STATISTICS.

Twenty-two Cities Show Gain Over Last Year—General Conditions of Building Trades.

Twenty-two cities in the United States show gains in building construction varying from 1 to 463 per cent. for the month of August, compared with the building record for the same month in 1906. Twenty-eight other cities show a slight loss, ranging from 1 to 73 per cent. in the same statistics. As August, 1906, was a record-breaker in the building and construction trades throughout the country, the statistics of the past month are encouraging. With Greater New York eleminated from the calculations, a general loss in building activity of only 3 per cent. is apparent. Greater New York, composed of the boroughs of Manhattan, Brooklyn and Bronx, shows a net loss of 21 per cent. The following statistics, compiled and tabulated by the American Contractor of Chicago, tell the story in a terse manner.

ON EAST FIFTY-SEVENTH.

The Cornell Company has sold for Lucy A. Shaw to L. J. Zabolio the property at No. 1026 East Fifty-seventh street for $1400. The lot is 40x136 feet, and is improved with a six-room California house.

DOCTOR BUYS HOSTELRY.

Hotel on Alvarado Street Purchased for Seventeen Thousand Five Hundred Dollars.

Seventeen thousand, five hundred dollars is the price paid by Dr. W. L. Wade for the property at No. 717 South Alvarado street. The property consists of a lot, 50x150 feet, which is improved with a two-story, seventeen-room hotel building. The grantor is Charles L. Washburn. The sale was made through the agency of the Main Realty Company. The new owner is planning extensive improvements, which, when completed, will make the building one of the most modern on Alvarado street.

The same agency also reports the sale for Mrs. Mattie Stambook of the northwest corner of Twenty-second street and Griffith avenue. The lot is 45x135 feet, improved with a seven-room house. The purchaser is I. Perlin, and the reported consideration is $6000.

The same firm also reports the sale to a local investor of the property at No. 1923 South Ellendale Place, consisting of a lot, 50x150 feet, improved with an eleven-room modern residence. The seller is John L. Marshall; the price was $4500.

The Jones & Ryder Land Co. has sold the eight-room residence at No. 1225 West Twentieth street, lot 50x150 feet, to J. M. Boyd for $6500. The house was designed by J. A. Mathis, and is a handsome residence in every particular.

RESIDENCE PURCHASED.

Corner of Country Club Boulevard and Terrace Avenue Brings Eighteen Thousand Dollars.

George A. Otis, the owner of the famous Pomona Rancho, has purchased, through the agency of Simpson & Carter, a large corner lot on the southwest corner of Country Club Boulevard and Terrace avenue, in the Country Club tract, for a valuation of $18,000. The lot is improved with a handsome, two-story, eleven-room residence. In part payment Mr. Otis has transferred a well-improved quarter section of land, valued at $6500. The buyer intends to make this city his home.

BUYS ON WATER FRONT.

The Globe Grain and Milling Company of Los Angeles has closed a deal for the purchase of land between Ash and Beech streets, on the water front, at San Diego, for the erection of its mill. The price is $16,000. The mill will have a capacity of 250 barrels of flour a day, and will cost in the neighborhood of $150,000. Work will be commenced at once on the construction of the plant.

FIRST SALE IN TRACT.

Frontage on Bixel, South of Seventh, at Two Hundred a Foot—New Apartment Section.

Mrs. J. H. Magner has purchased, through the agency of R. A. Rowan & Co., a lot on the west side of Bixel street, between Seventh and Eighth streets. The property has a frontage of fifty feet with a depth of 100 feet. Price $10,000 cash. This is one of the first sales in R. A. Rowan & Co.'s new subdivision.

The paving of the street will now be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible. This work has been delayed on account of the map not going on record on account of some technicality of the State law, which has now been overcome. This tract was selected and is being laid out for the especial purpose of apartment houses, and is ideally located for that purpose.

In a report earlier in the week the price was given at $11,000, or $220 a foot. This was a mistake, as the agent is holding all frontage at $200 per foot.

BUSY IN EAGLE ROCK.

Purchases of Vacant Lots Have Been for Improvement—Many Handsome Homes to Be Built.

Eagle Rock agents report a lively interest in that suburb during the past week. Seven new houses have been started during that time, ranging in cost from $2000 to $4500.

Among the recent sales by Edwards & Winters Co., are the following: To Nettie Bryan, the northwest corner of Las Flores avenue and Acacia street, a lot 60x175 feet, for a consideration of $1000. The corner was bought for improvement with a bungalow to cost about $3500. To Fred E. Biles, two lots in Las Flores tract, adjoining the northwest corner of Las Flores and Acacia, a lot 100x175 feet, consideration $1550. Mr. Biles is cashier of the Eagle Rock Bank, and has purchased for improvement with a modern home. To Clara S. Ellis, the northwest corner of Townsend avenue and Stanley street, 50x125 feet, for $950; this is in the townsite of Eagle Rock. To R. E. Ayars, the northeast corner of Stanley street and Virginia avenue, consideration $650. Mr. Ayars has already begun the erection of a six-room bungalow upon the property.

There has been an unusual demand for homes in Eagle Rock all summer, and almost every sale of a vacant lot has been for home building.

Edward Quayle has made plans of a two-story brick building with plastered exterior to be built at the corner of Tenth and Orange streets, Coronado, for the Coronado Bank. The first floor will be occupied by the bank and the second floor will be divided into a number of three-room suites. The building will be 75x75 feet and have all modern conveniences.

INCREASING.

AMONG BUILDERS AND ARCHITECTS.

BUILDING RECORD FOR MONTH SHOWS LARGE GAIN.

More Than Half-Million Dollars the Cost—Two Hundred and Ninety-one Permits Issued—Only Nine Working Days Represented in the Report—Other Details.

That there is no slackening in the building operations in Los Angeles is amply proven by the report from the department of buildings at the City Hall, which shows a total of $562,776, divided among permits numbering 291 for only nine working days. The report embraces the period from September 1 to 13. There are two Sundays and two holidays in the period. This is away in advance of the record for the same period in last September, when the same holidays came in, which has a total of $439,100 divided among 257 permits. This shows a difference, and a gain of thirty-four permits and of $122,596 in valuation.

One large permit was issued last week for $90,000. It calls for the erection of a three-story store and apartment building at Nos. 1100-1110 South Main street by the Hicks-Hager estate. Several smaller apartment houses and one or two warehouses of substantial construction also are among the number for the last week. As always, the permits for the construction of the small one and two-story frame dwellings predominate in number, there being ninety-four permits for one-story structures, having a total valuation of $96,510, and thirty-three permits for the two-story buildings, which have a gross value of $134,022. The report of the Chief Inspector of Buildings, J. J. Backus, compiled by Mark Cohn at the building office, is as follows:

	No. of permits.	Valuation.
Class A, steel frame	1	$ 21,515
Class B, 1 1-story	1	28,000

TOPICS OF THE STAGE.

"I am neither Italian nor French—nor anything else than American, and, further 'Aida' is my real name, not a nom-du-theatre adopted after I became a singer. My mother, who was an ardent lover of music, found her favorite opera in Verdi's most spectacular work, so that at the arrival of a small brown-haired girl in her home, 'Aida' was a name already decided upon."

Such was Aida Hemmi's personal dictum as she sat the other day in the dimly-lighted square that served as a sort of gloomy lobby to the ancient Casino Theater.

Aida Hemmi off stage is much better looking than the actress in character. Most people, as theater-goers have observed, are saved by grease-paint; judicious make-up will almost transform the beast into the beauty. Miss Hemmi, however, is best as herself. Her casual visitor gets the full expressiveness of a pair of unusually rich brown eyes, the frank, honest hand grasp of good-fellowship, the visual delight of a well-figured woman handsomely gowned.

And for one thing, it's this very directness of personality, this pleasure in comradeship, which helps Miss Hemmi in light opera work. As every visitor to the Los Angeles Theater must have noted, she and Arthur Cunningham are the vocal salvation of the whole company. Her undimming tones are marvels of sustained excellence and ear-resistance.

"Yes, I often thought of grand opera," said the prima donna, tapping the floor retrospectively with her parasol, "but I could never bring myself to undertake it regularly. The work is so hard, and one is almost isolated. The requirements for greatness are well-nigh impossible. Failure is so bitter, so bitter!

"Have I ever——?

"Yes, I have sung Santuzza, in 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and I adore the part. Perhaps we shall put it on here as a special bill, with Mr. Russo as Turiddu, and Mr. Cunningham as Alfio. There would be a great team. Russo is such an intense little actor—and Mr. Cunningham! I wish you could see him in the part! He sings and acts the role with a ferocity that makes even men shudder. Santuzza my ideal of a singing character; she is thirty-five minutes of hard, resultful, expressive work, and it's the sort of work that counts.

"The greatest thing in music is expression. Expression means everything. There must inevitably be an earnest thought behind the sound. There must not only be strength and mechanical ability, but heart, for heart is art.

"Now among bandmasters Sousa is described as a freak, and sometimes, by the more venturesome, as a simple charlatan. Yet I think Sousa owes all his celebrity to the very thing that goes to make the greatest art—expressive originality. He has a new way of doing things. His direction is at all times typical of himself, and in his marches he is surely freakish—but inimitable. Just for the fun of it, I'd go miles to see Sousa direct one of his own trivial inspirations. Wouldn't you?

"When I was in Germany I was fortunately situated for a time near a concert garden, at which the elder Strauss was dispensing his waltzes. Every afternoon saw me propelling myself toward the Strauss enchantments. Here was personal expressiveness in its most refined sense. The master works of the Strauss programme were, of course, the waltzes, and the director not only made the waltz sound from his instruments, but scattered it broadcast upon every beat of his baton. He himself almost waltzed as he led, and after twenty bars his whole audience was swaying in 3-4 time; only the pebbles under one's feet were still, and I always thought that they rolled a little easier when the band was playing.

"American audiences, you know, are very variously constituted. Sometimes they are the antithesis of anything emotional. There are nights when a singer goes home disheartened and discouraged, wondering if it all pays. Sometimes I feel that the study on the self-sacrifice and the years of endeavor are all in vain: that the people in front want horse-play and flat jokes, and that singing is only a microscopic layer of butter on the cheap sandwich of musical comedy. But perhaps the very next night there are rows upon rows of people out there whom I know have an artistic sense about them—people who'll appreciate my attempts, feel what I'm singing, pardon my shortcomings.

"That's why light opera in this country has such fascination. The singer never knows whether to anticipate a triumph exclusively her own, or the acceptance of a few crumbs scattered good-naturedly by the funny men."

Miss Hemmi has an admirable record of achievement. She has worked almost constantly during the past few years, has a line of parts practically unequaled by any contemporary, either here or elsewhere, and has actually scored success in every one.

Vocally, she is the vanguard for a whole host of admirable characters in comic-opera history. She arrived at the wrong time, for she came in when the prima donnae of humor had stopped singing. They talk now. Not one of the recent visitors in such productions has evinced a tithe of Hemmi's lyric ability.

Dramatically, she equals any of them. Her personality was the saving actorial grace of "The Singing Girl." The rest of them—with two or three exceptions—were reminiscent of moving pictures and nickel admission.

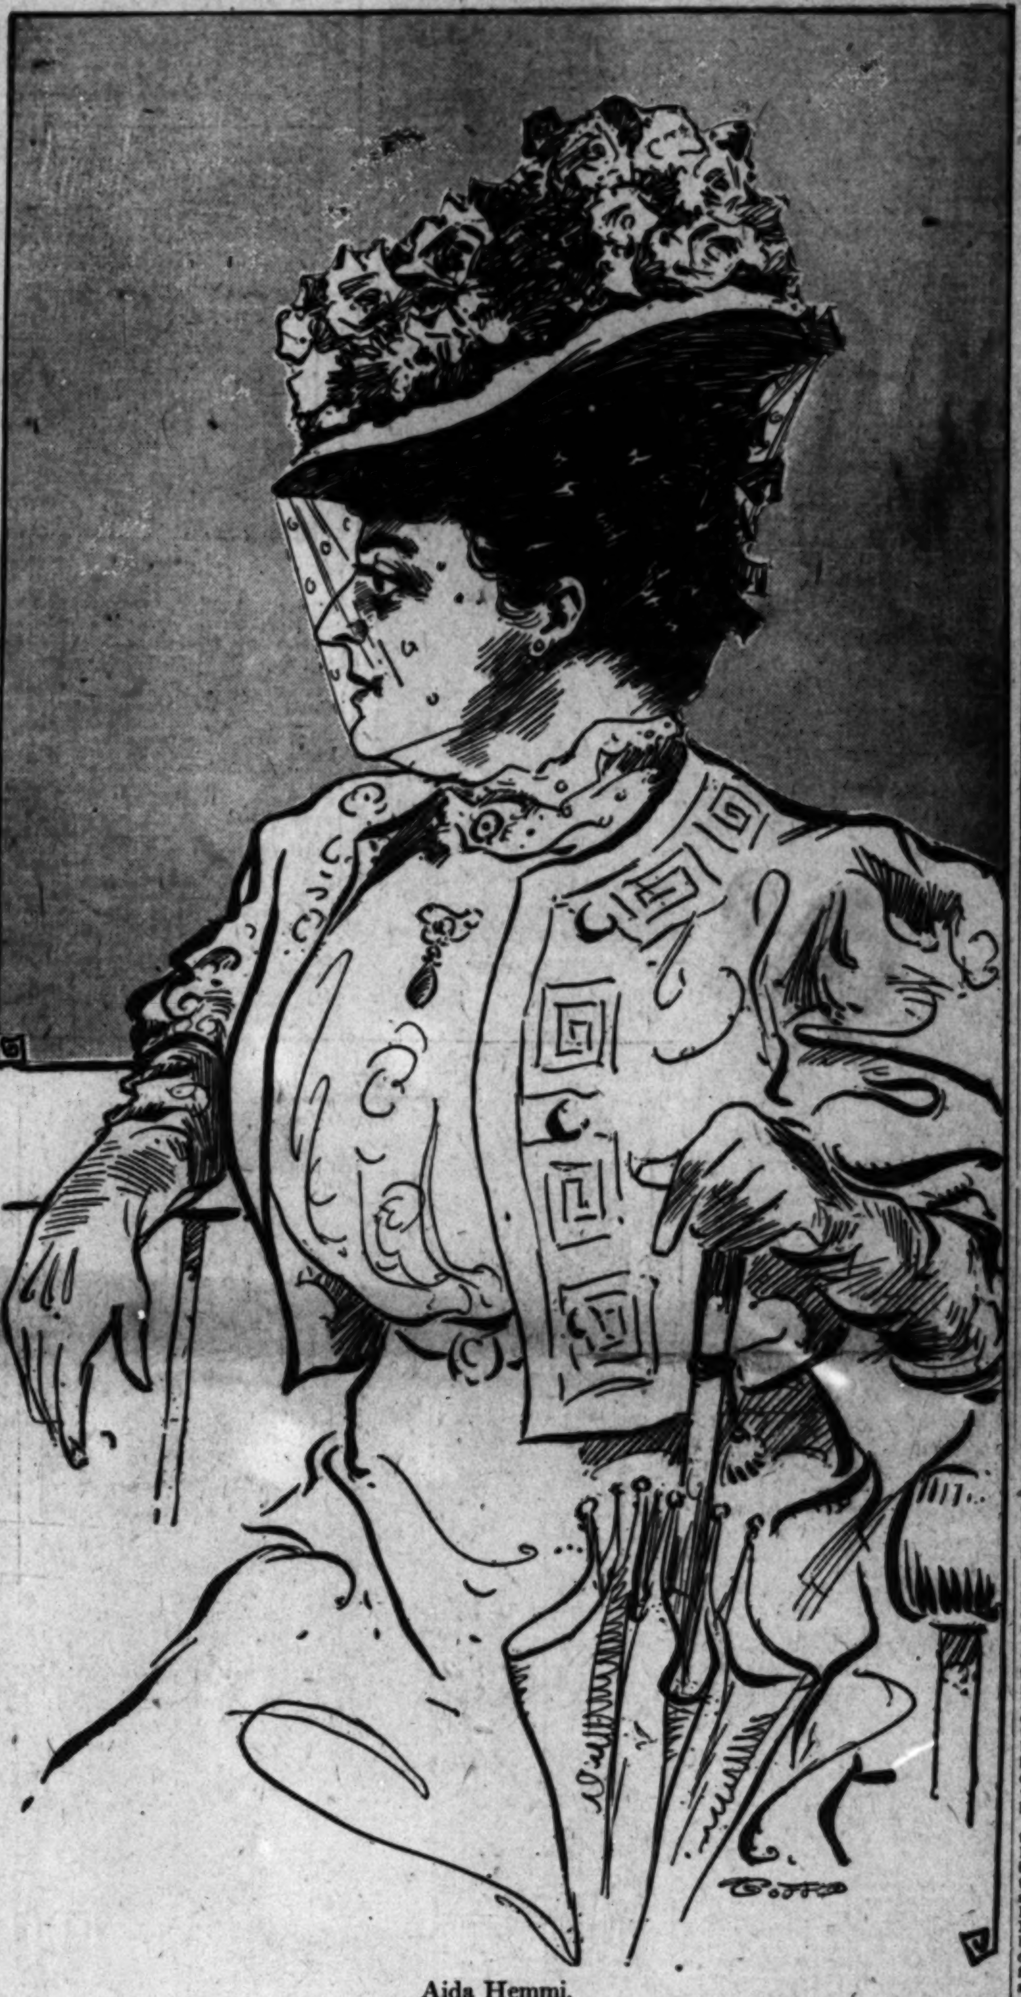
Certain people are eagerly waiting that some-day revival of "Cavalleria." "Robin Hood" and "The Bo' Girl" would be a fitting background for the Hemmi soprano, also.

Louis James, who is one of two or three sincere and noteworthy exponents of Shakespeare upon the contemporary stage, will be in town this week.

"Of the thirty-seven plays written by Shakespeare," said he, recently, "there are probably not over twenty-one of them that are today presented to the public, and while the remaining sixteen possess sterling literary and dramatic value, to a twentieth century audience, they do not appeal with favor.

"After my forty-five years of service, I will be bold enough to affirm that I have played more Shakespearean parts, in a wider field of operation, than any actor in this country. Why are not all the plays produced? Simply because, according to our standards of moment, they are not actable. In Shakespeare's day there was no star system, no great central personality. The theme carried, the actor was subordinated. Now things are different; the star is first, and play links in second. The public seem to demand it, and actor acquiesces. 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'The Tempest,' are nothing without a big scenic investiture. 'All's Well That Ends Well,' 'Two Gentlemen of Verona,' and 'Love's Labor Lost,' would put a modern audience to sleep. What would 'Twelfth Night,' or 'A Winter's Tale' be without a strongly-balanced cast?

"Shakespeare today must be strenuous, virile, emphatic. We want action and plenty of it. Those plays that are revived, therefore, must be modernized to that extent, and they must be susceptible to such treatment without mutilation."



Aida Hemmi.

"Why is light opera fascinating?" said Miss Hemmi "Because the singer never knows whether to anticipate her own triumph, or a few crumbs scattered good-naturedly by the comedy-man."

Mr. Fiske's Tribute.

It is to be hoped that the carpers of the yellow press will stumble upon Harrison Grey Fiske's tribute to Richard Mansfield, given editorially in the last issue of The Dramatic Mirror.

In a sense Mr. Fiske was a direct rival to Mansfield, as a producer of plays. Here are his words: "The death of Richard Mansfield comes as a shock to the dramatic profession as well as to the great public which for years he entertained with eminent versatility of personal achievement and an artistic enterprise that placed him among the more distinguished contemporary actors of the world.

"The story of Mr. Mansfield's career adds a singular chapter to the always-varying yet inevitably-absorbing record of great accomplishment in spite of untoward early circumstances and long-continued discouragement.

"Mr. Mansfield's equipment for the work of an actor was exceptionally fine, both as to natural gifts and acquired graces. His early environment was artistic, and his inherent aptitudes were such that he mastered many things and effectively touched many others that rounded out an admirable personality for the stage. He was a finished musician, he had knowledge of various tongues, and in the language given to his vocation he was scholarly. Few actors of his time, or of any other time, enjoyed so many adorning advantages, and Mr. Mansfield so employed his that even the uncritical recognized the authoritative nature of his professional work.

"It is not meet or timely here to measure Mr. Mansfield's stature as an actor. As true estimates always have been formed, there must elapse a considerable period before his place among the more notable actors of his time may be fixed. It is enough to say that among the character actors of the higher type—actors dealing with characters of dominant personality yet of idiosyncratic and eccentric nature—Mr. Mansfield was in the front rank. Perhaps, since the death of Irving, in this class he was supreme among those who employ the English language. There were in him personally strong tokens of individuality that militated against his pronounced success in the more normal yet great romantic roles; still, taken as he was revealed in a wide range of parts, Richard Mansfield was among the foremost players of his time.

"Much has been written of Mr. Mansfield's artistic eccentricity in his professional contacts. But all of this may be explained of a temperament highly nervous, often tried by associative lacks which to an artist secure in his own wide range of knowledge and acquirement are sometimes intolerable.

"Richard Mansfield's death involves an irreparable loss to the English-speaking stage. It was untimely. He should have been active yet for many years; and in future activity he would have given new honors to the theater that he has so notably distinguished and himself won even greater distinction."

THE LOCAL WEEK.

The week at the syndicate theater, the Mason Operahouse, will be divided between Jessie Busley, in her presentation of "In the Bishop's Carriage," and Louis James, in Shakesperean repertoire.

Miss Busley, who will be seen the first half of the week, has been playing the novel-dramatization for some time, and has achieved considerable success in the part. Among the members of her company are Hallet Thompson, George Richards—who will be remembered as a star with Hoyt's "A Temperance Town"—George Gaston, Harry English and Virginia Reeves. There will be a Wednesday matinée.

On Thursday evening Mr. James will open with his New Amsterdam Theater production, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," in which he himself plays Falstaff. Mr. James promises a complete and carefully-selected cast, headed by Frederick Paulding, who staged the production, and who plays Mr. Ford. Aphie James continues as Mistress Ford. Anne Schaefer is Mistress Page, Ida Werner is "Sweet Anne Page," Eugenia Webb is Dame Quickly, and Effie Weston plays Robin. Justice Shallow is interpreted by Chrystal Miller. The scenic investiture and costuming are said to be unusually complete and correct.

On Friday night Mr. James will appear as the two Dromios in "The Comedy of Errors," perhaps the first time that one man has essayed both parts. Just how Mr. James manages to dispose of the second Dromio in the last act is his own particular mystery.

"The Merry Wives of Windsor" will be played Thursday and Saturday nights, while "The Comedy of Errors" will be given on Friday night and at the Saturday matinée.

"The Mills of the Gods," a comparatively new George H. Broadhurst play, will have its first Western presentation tomorrow night on the Belasco stage. From all accounts it should be well adapted to the Belasco people.

Lewis Stone, Harry Glazier and Blanche Stoddard will have the leading parts, while a "jury that looks like a jury" is promised for the court scene.

Eleanor Merron's quaint rural drama, "The Dairy Farm," is billed for production at the Burbank Theater, for the week beginning this afternoon. "The Dairy Farm" has never been offered here in stock, and great pains will be taken for a picturesque and correct production. An old-fashioned "rally," with torchlight processions and banners and transparencies, will constitute a feature of one scene.

The Stange-Edwards musical comedy, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," will be put on at the new Los Angeles Theater tonight. Cunningham will be heard as Col. Graham of the Federal army. "My Own United States," the principal song hit of the piece, goes to him. Miss Hemmi will have several pleasing ballads. The comedy of the piece will fall to Kunkel and Fred Rogers, the latter playing Uncle Tom, while Kunkel has a character that runs from humor to pathos. Maude Beatty is cast as Constance Pemberton, and Daphne Pollard will play Cordelia. Lillian Raymond will play Robert Pemberton, and two newcomers among the men will have small parts.

Pretty costuming and effective stage pictures are anticipated.

The sensational feature of the Orpheum bill will be furnished by Houdini, who styles himself "handcuff king," and "champion jail-breaker." Houdini is probably the most famous hand-cuff manipulator in the world, and challenges the police of any country to produce a handcuff or fetter from which he cannot escape.

Chris Richards, English singing, dancing and juggling comedian, will make his first American appearance, thus commencing the Orpheum circuit. The Farrel Taylor trio will present an act in black-face comedy, "That Minstrel Man." Fred's monkey actors are the same which formerly appeared as "Gallati's Monkeys."

The artistic end of the programme will be maintained by Domenico Russo, local tenor.

Acts retained from the previous bill are O. Hana San and her company, Leona Thurber, and Balzers.

"Since Nellie Went Away," story of a runaway marriage and its consequences, will receive attention this afternoon from the Ulrich players, at the Grand Operahouse.

Dramagraphs.

Frans Lehar, composer of The Merry Widow, is coming to America to witness the first performance of the operetta in this country.

Marie Dressler is to be starred in "The Education of Mr. Pipp" in London, this winter, and will play the role of Mrs. Pipp.

Clyde Fitch, it is said, is planning to sell his summer home, "Quiet Corner," and build a new home at Cross River, N. Y., where he has bought four hundred acres of land.

Guy Standing returned from Europe on August 31, and will soon begin rehearsals of Eugene W. Presbrey's dramatization of "The Right of Way."

Elita Proctor Otis has gone into vaudeville at Chicago, and is using a monologue called "Engagement and Marriage Up to Date."

Mrs. Leslie Carter will produce her new play at the National Theater, in Washington, early in November and then come to the Astor Theater.

Miss Ida Conquest will be the leading woman for David Kessler, the Yiddish actor, when he makes his debut on the English speaking stage in "The Spell."

It is said that Margaret Anglin is to try her hand at a play based on the career of Jeanne D'Arc next summer during her Australian tour.

Gustav Mahler, who has been engaged by Heinrich Conried as a conductor-in-chief at the Metropolitan Operahouse, will receive a salary of $15,000 for a season of three months.

"The Tout," a musical comedy by Ralph T. Kettering and Ivan L. Davis, is in the hands of the Shuberts awaiting production. These two young authors have several vaudeville sketches on the road at present.

Otis Skinner will appear in a version of a drama that, under the title of "La Rabouilleuse," was a pronounced success at the Odeon in Paris last season. His part will be a romantic adventures who fought under Napoleon.

Marie Doro is back from Paris, and is to begin rehearsing "The Morals of Marcus" in a few days. She is to make another attempt to become a star.

Virginia Harned has written to Arthur Wing Pinero, asking him to revise Iris, by rewriting the fourth act and adding a fifth act, to show the final misery of the woman. Miss Harned wishes the play to be a vindication of Iris, and if Mr. Pinero agrees to her request, she will probably produce the play at the end of this season.

Burr McIntosh, who gave up the stage six years ago to go into the business of photographing celebrities, has returned to the boards and is making his reappearance at Keith and Proctor's Twenty-third Street Theater, New York, in a sketch called "The Colonel's Christmas Eve," written by himself. Mr. McIntosh has played many southern characters, and the role he enacts in his present offering is that of a Kentucky colonel. He may possibly remain in vaudeville the entire season.

According to a story that gained circulation last week, the Ringling Bros. have secured an option on the Barnum & Bailey Show, and if the negotiations are carried out, will, within a few weeks control that organization, as well as Buffalo Bill's Wild West, which is affiliated with the Barnum & Bailey interests. This deal would place the Ringlings in full control of all the big circuses in the United States, and give them practically a monopoly of the business. Barnum & Bailey, Limited, is a London corporation, the majority of the stock being held by Mrs. Bailey, who inherited it through the will of her late husband.

Laurence Irving has recently dramatized Dostoievski's novel, "Crime and Punishment," and his adaptation has been secured by E. H. Sothern. Under the title of "The Sixth Commandment" a version of the same book by the late Robert Buchanan was produced by Mrs. Lancaster Wallis at the Shaftesbury Theater, London, in 1890. "Rodion, the Student," in Richard Mansfield's repertory, was made from the same novel by Charles Henry Meltzer.

Rogers Brothers' new musical production, "The Rogers Brothers in Panama," had its premier at Buffalo recently at the Star Theater. Sylvester Maguire and Aaron Hoffman are responsible for the book of the new piece. Edward Madden composed the lyrics, while Max Hoffman wrote the music. The book is said to be original and a departure from the usual run of musical comedies, while the music is of that catchy, swingy style that sent the audience out into the street at the close of the performance gayly whistling the strains of several of the numbers.

According to "Le Monde Artiste" the Royal Opera in Berlin receives a larger subsidy than any other of the State-subventioned theaters in Europe. Its yearly grant is $225,000; the Opera in Paris receives $160,000; that of Dresden, $120,000; Munich, $62,500; Wiesbaden, which is allied with the Berlin Opera, $60,000; Carlsruhe, $75,000; Prague, $75,000; Darmstadt, $62,500. The Imperial Opera of Vienna draws but $120,000, the same as Dresden's subvention, but the deficits are met by the imperial purse.

Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger have begun a new war on New York sidewalk speculators, which has been crowned with immediate success. Last Tuesday night agents of the New York Theater were detailed to watch the speculators, and when tickets were bought on the sidewalk the purchaser was followed to the door, where the doorkeeper was instructed to refuse admission to the holder of such tickets. The move resulted in much confusion, as altercations between buyers and speculators were numerous, but the speculators in nearly every case were forced to return the ticket money. This, of course, was unprofitable. The next night not one speculator put in an appearance at the New York.

"Artie," a dramatization of one of George Ade's stories in slang, was presented for the first time to a metropolitan audience at the Studebaker Theater in Chicago recently. The play seemed to please everybody present. Lawrence Wheat, who, impersonating "Artie," a young man about town, and Miss Viva Stowe, who took the part of "Mamie," were recalled a dozen times during the evening. At the end of the third act repeated calls brought Mr. Ade to the stage, and he talked to the audience for several minutes.

son. Mr. Cartwright originated the part of Kleschna in Leah Kleschna, when Mrs. Fiske produced that play at the Manhattan Theater. Mr. Cartwright will have an important role in Mrs. Fiske's new play, to be produced in December. He will also originate a powerful part in the one-act play by Roberto Bracco, the American rights of which Mr. Fiske has secured. The Bracco play is entitled "The Sins of the Fathers." Mr. Cartwright during the autumn, will make a starring tour in England in dramatizations of several Dickens works. On the conclusion of this tour he will come to America to join Mrs. Fiske's company.

Giuseppe Anselmi is regarded as one of the most gifted of the Italian tenors of today. Though unknown in this country as yet, he has appeared frequently in the larger South American cities, as well as in St. Petersburg and the cities of Southern Europe. In the memorable performance of "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," in Jean de Reszke's private theater in Paris in the early summer, in which Mme. Patti sang Rosina, he was the Almaviva. Rumors were rife last winter at the time Caruso made his demand for higher salary at the Metropolitan that Mr. Conried tried to open negotiations with Anselmi by cable, but the latter was not available. He is said to be an accomplished pianist and violinist, as well as distinguished singer.

More money is spent in costuming plays today than ever before. Many musical productions cost the management from $50,000 to $60,000 before the rise of the curtain, and at least one-third of this vast amount is spent in clothes. Anna Held sings a song in "The Parisian Model" which requires a new gown for each verse, and the women in the audience are dazzled by their beauty as well as by those worn by the show girls. The costumes in Grace George's play, "Clothes," cost a small fortune. The whole action of the play centers around a gorgeous gold gown worn by Grace George in the third act. Others in the same play who wear costly gowns are Anne Sutherland, who wears a handsome black lace and chiffon dress, and Dorothy Revelle, who appears in one act in a beautiful spangled frock and in another act wears an empire gown of white lace which cost no less than $1000. Margaret Illington wears a pink evening gown in "The House of Order" that cost close to $900. Edna Wallace Hopper has spent several thousands of dollars on the dresses she wears in "About Town." The most expensive one is the "diamond dress," made of white chiffon and embroidered in diamonds and pearls. She also has a batiste embroidered in roses that is exquisite. Eva Dennison's gown in "The Chorus Lady" cost $600. It is a blue chiffon garment, spangled in silver and made empire style. Lillian Russell always pays particular regard to her clothes. Her most famous costume was the Queen of Holland gown she wore in vaudeville. Adele Ritchie is billed as "the best dressed woman in vaudeville," and society anxiously awaits her appearance to see the promised costumes. Sara Bernhardt always plans her own costumes, first drawing them and then coloring the designs. Ethel Barrymore is another actress who designs her own costumes. She says she wears nothing more conspicuous on the stage than she would wear on the street. She always patronizes a fashionable dressmaker, and her clothes cost considerable money. Julia Marlowe is careful in selecting her costumes. The most beautiful costume she wears is in the part of Portia, because she says "Portia is the richest woman I play." At the four hundredth performance of "the Lion and the Mouse" in New York each actress in the play invested in a new set of gowns to celebrate the event.

Women's Souvenirs.

One of the funny things about women traveling abroad is the sort of things they bring back with them as souvenirs. One young woman who went abroad intent on seeing Europe as cheaply as possible, and to her credit it may be said that she stayed three months, and it cost her exactly $300, insisted on lugging three jardinieres all over the continent and back to this country, to find that she could have bought precisely the same thing at a Twenty-second-street china shop.

She took very little luggage with her, only a steamer trunk, which touched the big cities and a suit case that was her constant companion. It thus became necessary for her to carry the jardinieres, one of which was bought in Brussels and the other two in Antwerp and London, by hand. And the predicaments for which the china was responsible would fill a book. Suffice it to say that the owner returned home after her jaunt to Europe with nervous prostration and expects to spend the winter in a sanatorium recovering.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

Active rehearsals of the musical societies throughout the Southwest have been generally taken up, and during the rest of the year a variety of productions is promised.

Among these is an ambitious Arizona presentation of "The Messiah" in the spring.

The local clubs are earnestly at work, and the concert results of the present grinding may be looked for before many weeks.

The Apollo Club plans several things, and in all probability will make at least three public appearances before another summer.

In outside towns, there will be at least half a dozen late autumn or early winter offerings of "The Messiah," and the services of a large number of local soloists will be called into requisition.

The interest of these outside towns in good music is one of the best signs of artistic prosperity. The celebrated artists who visit the Coast are coming to know, each year, a wider and more profitable field for their endeavors. And as the number of paying "stands" increases, by so much more will the big city profit; for the great pianist and the great violinist and the great soprano, like the vaudeville actress and the humble minstrel man, move only upon financial bearings.

The Spinet Club of Redlands, one of the foremost out-of-town organizations in this part of the country, will entertain several distinguished visitors.

Metropolitan Opera.

According to a further announcement of Heinrich Conried's plans for the coming season at the Metropolitan Operahouse, several of his most popular artists will be heard in roles in which they have not yet appeared in New York.

Geraldine Farrar, on the authority of Musical America, will sing Mignon in a revival of Ambroise Thomas's opera of that name in Italian, a role in which she has pleased Berlin audiences, and will probably appear as Marguerite in Boito's "Mefistofele," with Chaliapine in the title part and Lina Cavalieri as Hélène. Chaliapine will also sing Basilio in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" and possibly Leporello in "Don Giovanni," besides a forming with Plancon and Jourpet a trio of available Mephistos for Berlioz's "La Damnation de Faust" and Gounod's "Faust."

Enrico Caruso will be heard for the first time here in Verdi's "Otello," Mascagni's "Iris," "Trovatore," Cilea's "Adrienne Lecouvreur," and possibly in Giordano's "Andrea Chenier." Emma Eames, besides singing Iris, will add Donna Anna in "Don Giovanni" to her repertoire. Alessandro Bonci will sing in "Tosca," in addition to the older Italian operas. In Beethoven's "Fidelio," the title part will be taken by either Berta Morena or Olive Fremstad. Mme. Fremstad will have an opportunity to essay "Isolde" this season. Johanna Gadski will be the "Donna Elvira" in "Don Giovanni" and will also appear as Leonora in "Il Trovatore," in addition to her Wagnerian roles.

Martha Leffler-Burckard, the new German dramatic soprano, joins the company during the latter part of the season. Heinrich Knote returns for the first two months and will then be followed by Carl Burrian, while Alois Burgstaller makes his rentreé at the end of December. Pol Plancon's engagement is for the last three months of the season. A new contralto will be Frida Langdendorff, of the Prague Opera.

Musical Manuscript.

We were remarking the other day, says the New York Times, on what seemed the financial curiosity hunting of the German who paid $10,000 for the glory of possessing the manuscript score of Beethoven's last violin sonata. The price seemed fantastical in view of the fact that the manuscript has no value but that of curiosity.

Another hunter in this field died in England the other day, Miss Harriet Chichele Plowden, and left to the British Museum the manuscript of the first of Beethoven's sonatas for piano and violin, and of Mozart's "ten celebrated quartets," the same, we believe, selected by the judicious Peters, and at the disposition of anybody, in clear print, for a dollar or two. They include the six quartets dedicated to Haydn, and most properly so dedicated, for it is the opinion of the critics that in them Mozart showed that Haydn had taught him to write for string quartet. As a musical "find" they are doubtless of greater interest than the Op. 6 of Beethoven.

The history of these manuscripts is curious and calculated to confuse those who inquire:

For what is worth in anything
But so much money as 'twill bring?

Mozart's widow sold all his manuscripts in 1799 to a music publisher for $2500. One Stumpf of London acquired the ten quartets, and after his death they were sold by auction in London, seven of them going to "Mr. Plowden," apparently an ancestor of this late testatrix, for about $45, and the remaining three for about $25 to a "Mr. Hamilton," whom the covetous Plowden, anxious to complete his set, seems subsequently to have induced to part with them on private terms.

These things will not move the amiable German collector so much as the announcement of the acquisition by the British Museum of Beethoven's "Op. 12, No. 1." It is true that it has by no means the musical merit or fame of Op. 96, which he already possesses. But what has musical merit to do with the case? To this particular variety of bric-a-brac hunter, the thought of owning both, of having Alpha and Omega to show, must be tantalizing to the verge of infuriation.

Ester Ferrabini,

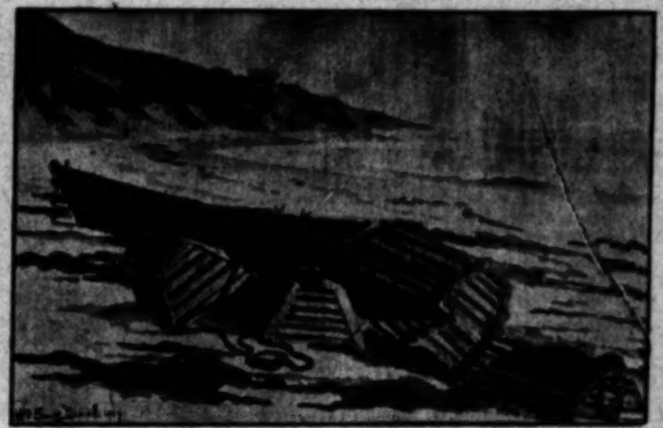
lyric soprano of Lambardi's new operatic organization, which will be in Los Angeles next month. Mlle. Ferrabini was soprana for Ruggiero Leoncavallo, when that composer made his last year's orchestral visit to New York. She is said to be the possessor of an unusually beautiful and well-used voice. In rank she is third in this company, being preceded by Mme. Padovani, first prima-donna, and Mme. Gonzales, dramatic soprano.

Art and Artists.

BY ANTONY E. ANDERSON.

Mr. Daniell's Recent Water Colors.

At last the busy painters are beginning to return from their summer exodus to seashores and mountains, and at last the anxiously waiting critics may begin to polish their rusting pens and prepare for action. Once more, and how pleasant it seems, an exhibition of pictures is going to open for our discussion.



Lobster Traps, by William Swift Daniell.

The important event is a one-man show, and it takes place this very afternoon at Blanchard Hall. The exhibitor is William Swift Daniell, who has gallantly come to the rescue with no less than seventy water colors and a dozen oils. Mr. Daniell, it would seem, has not spent many idle moments during the past few months, for all the pictures are new. He would not have exhibited so early, perhaps, if it were not for the fact that he expects to sail with his family for Europe in October, to be gone for two years of further hard study.

It is Mr. Daniell's expressed intention to visit Holland, England, Spain and Italy, and to make frequent and long visits to the galleries that contain the great masterpieces of the water-color painters. Mr. Daniell's growth in the technique of the aquarelle has been both rapid and steady, but his goal is far beyond his present performance. He means to develop as far as in him lies. Judging from the pictures he now offers to the public, his ambition is really a high one.

The present exhibition of water colors may be divided into three groups—those painted at Long Beach and Terminal Island, those done at Capistrano Mission, and those that have received their inspiration from Laguna Beach and vicinity. This last group is by far the most numerous, for the rock-strewn shore of Laguna seems to have held out peculiar attractions for the painter.

These pictures show conclusively that Mr. Daniell's sense for color is growing keener and more subtle, and that he is gaining steadily in dexterity of hand. Some of them are technically most excellent, especially in the rendering of water and of sand. To be sure, Mr. Daniell has always painted the beach sand with facile felicity, but never quite so well as today.

Of his mission subjects, the most noteworthy, it seems to me, are these three: "Capistrano Cloisters," in the rich yellow-brown tints of Southern California's warm summer; it shows the red roofs and columns of the mission against a greenish sky. "An Old Door," a panel shaped picture, the old door, painted green, being very good in quality; bits of the crumbling adobe wall are to be seen at each side of the door. "The Ivy Walk," another panel whose gracefully curved columns offer us glimpses of sun-smitten hills and sky. All these pictures have the "tone of time," that belongs with peculiar force to Capistrano.

"The Bathing Rope, Long Beach," gives us a well painted sea that is full of quiet movement and whose horizon is far away. Gray post and sagging rope are both well drawn. The sky is a pleasant and restful gray. There is a certain quiet charm about this picture; the absence of hard edges indicates that Mr. Daniell has given it atmosphere, yet it is not in the least woolly in texture.

"The Condemned Smuggler," painted at Terminal Island, gives us the ripple and flow of light green water. The ship, which is the center of interest, lies submerged on its side, scuttled by the authorities because it used to smuggle Chinamen from Mexico. This interesting ship is painted against a background of buildings in reds, dull greens and light browns. "Back of Terminal" is mostly sand that is painted with great skill. It is full of outdoor light, and is very quiet in effect. Huge clumps of eucalypts to the right balance a building that is a trifle nearer the center of the picture.

"Lobster Traps," a Laguna picture, shows a stretch of sand covered with the pinkish brown of drying kelp. The traps are in the foreground, and the Laguna hills rise to the left. There is a sea of pale blue, lazy of movement, to the right. The interest of this picture is not literary, though it tells us much of the toilers of the sea. "Laguna Cliffs" is a fine rendition of these high embankments. The sand that lies below the cliffs is carpeted with seaweed. The picture is very simple and effective.

"Early Morning" has a foreground which is a riot of midsummer color, with a distant cool gray sea that frets itself into white foam on the dark rocks. The sky is a warm gray, filling out a scheme of color that is unusually good in tone. "Laguna Coast" shows a curve of beach whose sweep adds much to the grace of the composition. The beating surf has left a long expanse of foam. The foreground rocks are solid and heavy, and good in color. The contours of the hills are well rendered.

"San Juan Point" is full of a dreamy quiet. The somnolent sea is a charming grayish green, and the sky is also greenish in color. The foreground shows a road which seems to lead toward far-off enchantments. The whole effect, indeed, is one of dreamful harmony. Another pleasing picture, technically one of the best in the collection, is "Green Bay," showing a sea in brilliant greens and blues with impressive cliffs to the left. It is excellent in color and drawing, simple and satisfying. "A Wind-swept Tree" glows with a play of color. The tree is graceful, yet strangely bent, as if it had been fighting with bitter winds from the sea all its life. The foliage at the top is well massed.

"A Rocky Shore" gives us a far horizon, with the sea chafing against the rocks some distance from shore. There is a fine transparency in the water. "Fisherman's Cove" has a certain suave brightness and liveliness of color in both sea and shore. "Breaking Waves" is done with much skill and ease, and may be estimated as one of the best pictures that Mr. Daniell has yet painted. It shows the usual high bank to the left, with rocks in a troubled and uneasy sea. The color scheme is good.

"Road to the Cañon" is very restful. The trees and hills are well modeled. Near the road stands a house against tall eucalypts. "A Somber Day" is painted in a lavender tone that is exquisite. The gray sea is full of mystery and loneliness.

Mr. Daniell's exhibition will remain open to the public, free of charge, for eight days. Many of the pictures are more than worth while, and they who go to see them will not be disappointed.

ART NOTES.

Steckel's is showing a number of pictures by different painters this week. Among the contributors are Fernand Lungren, with five canvases; Jules Pages, with five; Charles Grant, with six; John Donovan, with three; and Granville Redmond with one. This excellent little exhibition will be noted in more detail next week.

The next publication of the California State Library at Sacramento will give attention to art in California. The work of the Painters' Club of Los Angeles will be written of at some length.

Leonard Lester left for San Diego on Saturday of last week. He will be gone for a month or two, and expects to paint on or near Point Loma and along that part of the Pacific Coast. He has given up his Sichel-street studio. He has some thought of going East later in the year, though his plans are yet not definite. He will of course return to Los Angeles and Southern California.

Steckel's gallery will be the pleasant scene of many exhibitions during the coming months. On October 15, Joseph Greenbaum will show landscapes and portraits for two weeks. On November 15, C. A. Friese of San Diego will open with landscapes. On February 1, Martin J. Jackson will show landscapes. And there are others.

Emily H. White, the miniaturist and water-color painter, starts for Peoria on Tuesday. She will exhibit her recent work in Chicago and Peoria. The date of her return has not yet been fixed, but she will probably remain in the East over the winter.

OUT-OF-TOWN SOCIETY

Pasadena.

ANTE-NUPTIAL functions have been among the most conspicuous social gaieties of the past week, several very pretty parties having been given for Miss Marguerite Austin, whose marriage with Clarence Austin is the leading social event of importance for the month. Wednesday afternoon Miss Emily Shields and Miss Laura Shields of South Los Robles avenue gave a charming bridge party for Miss Austin, where the decorations were effectively carried out in white marguerites, the flower name of the guest of honor. Tables were arranged for twenty players. Miss Constance McClintock entertained for Miss Austin, Friday, with a small card party, and Wednesday Miss Daisy Dake will entertain in her honor.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cupples Pierce, who returned recently from their summer outing at Santa Barbara, celebrated the fifth anniversary of their wedding at the Country Club Sunday with an elaborately appointed supper, where covers were laid for twelve. The table was beautifully ornamented with baskets of white carnations and ferns. In the center the larger basket was placed and at each plate was a smaller one in the same design, each being tied with bows of white satin ribbon which produced a pretty effect. Those at table were Mr. and Mrs. Harrison I. Drummond, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Crans Perkins, Dr. and Mrs. Orbison, Mrs. Plummer, Messrs. E. S. Pierce and E. W. Hitchings.

Miss Lewis of San Francisco was the guest of honor at a delightful thimble party arranged for her by her hostesses, Miss Laura and Florence Kendall of Summit avenue, Wednesday afternoon. Garden flowers were used in profusion in decoration and a dainty collation was served. Those present were Mmes. Frank J. Wilson, Guy Holderman, Walton, Winchell, Harry D. Rutan, Vesper, Davenport, Porter, Charles Fuller, Misses Lucy Stone and Anna Bannister.

One of the interesting functions of the week was a dinner given at the home of Judge and Mrs. C. J. Willet on North Los Robles avenue, Sunday, which was in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Wheeler, of Iola, Kan., who are guests at the Willet home. Mrs. Willet was maid of honor at the wedding a score of years ago and the reunion of several old friends made the occasion particularly enjoyable. Roses and ferns were used in ornamentation of the table and the place cards were decorated with scenes depicting the transition from Kansas to Pasadena. Covers were laid for fourteen, including the daughter and son of the guests of honor.

Among larger functions was the party which was arranged by Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Creller of West California street, in celebration of the eleventh anniversary of their wedding day. The game for entertainment was "military peanuts," carried out as is military euchre. A number of forts were provided and the Eastern Star and Garvanza captured the most flags. The four defenders at each of these forts were awarded handsome prizes. Other games followed and a collation was served. The guests were Mr. and Mrs. A. Donaldson, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Holderman, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Batterson, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Buchanan, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Fuller, Mr. and Mrs. Jay Winters, Mr. and Mrs. C. Caplin, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Hovey, Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Slater, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Dickson, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Bliss, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Creller, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Casler, Mr. and Mrs. J. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Charland, Misses Kirk, Bannister, Fuller and Creller, Messrs. Nightingale and Benton.

Mrs. J. V. Bannister of South Marengo avenue entertained Thursday afternoon with a literary tea and the feature of the afternoon was a delightful description of life in Japan given by Miss Frances Whitlock, who has recently returned from the Flowery Kingdom. Miss Roberta Albert gave a recitation and there was a musical programme. Mrs. Bannister was assisted by her daughters in entertaining and refreshments were served.

Mrs. Lawrence Hurlburt of South Orange Grove avenue entertained the West End Bridge Club this week at its regular Monday afternoon meeting.

Mrs. F. W. Kellogg and family have returned from their summer travel in the East and are at their Altadena home.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Stimson and family have arrived in New York and will soon be in Pasadena after a three months' tour of Europe.

New Fall Showing of Women's Tailored Suits
Our showing is now practically complete. We will not attempt description—but rather invite you to visit our Women's Department and judge for yourself, whether we have surpassed former seasons.
The Matheson & Berner standard in women's wear is raised each season, as our experience grows, we raise this standard another notch.
The new suits demonstrate this. Every model shown is exclusive—some of them imported, some of them from Eastern style centers, others worked out after our own ideas and designs.
The result is an assortment of smartly tailored suits, every one of which exemplifies our standard—in good taste, exquisite finish, and genuine smartness and workmanship.
It is a genuine satisfaction to us just to show these suits. Feel free to come in and look them over. We would suggest this—as all models shown are exclusive with us and not duplicated—selections should be made early.

Expansion Sale

Not One-Tenth of the Expansion Sale Offerings Can Get Newspaper Mention

Persian Ribbons 10c

Ten cents a yard, or ninety cents for a ten-yard bolt of 1-2 to 1-inch Persian Ribbon of the class commonly sold at $2 to $3.50 a bolt.

That sounds preposterous, but it's true, just the same. (Ribbon Dept., Left of Entrance)

22-inch allover embroidery on fine Swiss and Nainsook—goods of the character commonly sold at $2.00 to $3.00 a yard—buyable in this sale at a dollar-fifty.

Full pound of our famous "Elysee" linen writing paper, with fifty envelopes to match—uncommonly fine stock put up to our order by the Geo. B. Hurd mills—40c a pkg., white, blue, gray.

Robe Patterns Third Off

In the neighborhood of fifty robe patterns of heavy and handkerchief linens, beautifully embroidered by hand, go on sale tomorrow at a straight third off—

$15 Robes at $10; $20 Robes at $13.35; $30 Robes at $20, and so on up to the $50 grades at $33.35.

Black Silk Jackets at Half

About twenty Eton jackets of rich black taffeta, lined with white taffeta and tastefully trimmed with white lace and braid, reduced to half—$20 Jackets at $10; $25 Jackets at $12.50; $35 Jackets at $17.50; $40 Jackets at $20.

Oriental Rugs

Cost Less Here.

Buying Oriental Rugs—if you buy them right—is true economy, not an extravagance.

While they cost more, at the start, than the domestic makes, their marvelous wearing qualities make them truly economical.

Our buyer goes direct to Turkey for them—gets a thousand or more at a time, saving a big discount on the purchase as well as the importer's profits, all of which brings our customers a saving of a third to a half from the prices most rug stores obtain.

Domestic Rugs Decisively Reduced

Domestic Rugs of well-known merit away under the prices prevailing elsewhere.

9x12 ft. Bigelow Wilton rugs of the best quality; in many new oriental and all over designs that came in last week; at $35. Sold nearly everywhere at $4[illegible].50.

Same as above only 8¼x10½ ft. size at $32.50 instead of $37.50.

6x9 ft. East Indian coco fibre rugs; strong and very durable; widely used for halls, porches and beach cottages; reduced from $10 to $7.50. Same kind in 9x12 ft. size $12.50 instead of $15. Same in 4x9 ft. size at $5 instead of $7.50.

36x63-inch Bigelow Wilton rugs of the best quality in soft, rich colorings and fringed all around cut from $8.50 to $6.50. Same kind in 27x54-inch size at $3.75 instead of $4.50.

(Third Floor.)

Carving Sets 1-3 Off

Our entire collection of Henkel's carving sets—uncommonly fine pearl and stag handled goods—are in this expansion sale at a full third under regular.

$4.35 to $23.35 for $6.50 to $35.00 sets.

(Jewelry Dept., facing Main Entrance)

altar by Miss Anna McGrath, the bridesmaid, who wore a lavender messaline elaborately trimmed in Irish point and Valenciennes, carrying a bouquet of Shasta daisies and maidenhair ferns. Then followed the ring-bearer, little Helen Austin, clothed in white organdie trimmed in blue ribbons and Valenciennes. The maid of honor, Miss Maud Heffee of Upland, wore a pale blue messaline exquisitely trimmed in Venice lace. She was followed by the flower girl, Eleanor Leonard, a niece of the groom, dressed in white net and ribbons.

Then came the bride leaning on the arm of her brother, Joseph Laubacher. The bride's gown was Brussels net over Peau de Cygne, elaborately trimmed with Mechlin lace and French Valenciennes. Her veil was tulle and the wreath of real orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white begonias and maidenhair ferns. Her only ornament was a sunburst of diamonds and pearls, the gift of the groom. The groom was attended by Messrs. T. Francis McGrath and John Friedman. Messrs. Hugo McGrath, Charles Donlan ad Juan Camarillo acted as ushers.

The groom is a member of the family of Dominick McGrath, whose home is in the rich Colonia district.

Mrs. McGrath has made her home in Oxnard for a number of years with her brothers, Father J. S. Laubacher and J. H. Laubacher. Her sweet character has been an inspiration to all who have known her.

The bridal pair slipped away from the friends of the family who had gathered at the train to see them off on the train for the East, and went to Santa Barbara in an automobile.

Idyllwild.

ONE of the merriest picnics of the week was that to Fern Cañon Wednesday, Mrs. W. M. Friesner and Mrs. Flora Goodall Bland chaperoning a party. Some rode on horseback, some went in the "patrol wagon" of camp and some walked to the place of rendezvous. Pillows and rugs made a cosy resting place among the ferns by the creek and a fire was kindled over which bacon was broiled and fragrant coffee made. Luncheon was served on a mammoth table rock on a cloth of ferns. After the repast some of the company played bridge, others fished for trout and a few lazy ones indulged in siestas. The party included Mrs. Sharp, Mrs. Case of Los Angeles; Mrs. Rust of Anaheim, Mrs. Charles Green of Pasadena, Miss Case and Miss Olga Atherton of Los Angeles; Miss Gland, Miss Serena Bland and Miss Tower of Pasadena; Miss May Hotterell of Hemet, Mrs. Ivy Gaylord of Riverside, Fred B. Barlow, of Boston, Heine Hilverkus of Riverside and James Friesner and Paul Radir of Los Angeles.

Wednesday afternoon a small party enjoyed the trip "around the world," those going including Mrs. Emilie Ducommun, Miss Ducommun, Miss Woollacott, A. H. Woollacott, Miss Lena Potter, Miss Louise Potter, Miss Alice Crawford, Miss M. McNeill and Mrs. Boehner.

In the evening Mrs. Woollacott entertained a few friends with a camp fire party, the toasting of marshmallows and the carving of red-hearted watermelons furnishing amusement. Those enjoying Mrs. Woollacott's hospitality were Mrs. Emilie Ducommun, Miss Ducommun, F. B. Barlow, Heine Hilverkus, A. H. Woollacott and Miss Margaret Woollacott.

Thursday a party enjoyed an all day trip to Hemet Dam, some going in a wagonette and some on horseback. After luncheon the party returned to Keen's camp where outdoor sports and horse races were enjoyed. Among those in the party were Mrs. Walter Burns, Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. Woolacott, Miss Woollacott, A. H. Woollacott, Miss Ducommun, Mrs. Emilie Ducommun, Mrs. Boehner, Miss Stetson, Mrs. Wilber O. Dow, Miss Lena Potter, Miss Alice Crawford, Miss Louise Potter, Miss McNeill.

Mrs. W. M. Friesner entertained informally Tuesday evening with fudge and corn popping party around a blazing camp fire in honor of Miss Grace Tower of Pasadena. Miss Case of Los Angeles acted as mistress of the fudge kettle, while Miss Bland presided over the cornpopper. The guests included Mrs. Bland, Miss Serena Bland and Mrs. Charles Green of Pasadena; Mrs. Case, Miss Case, Mrs. Sharp, Miss Atherton and James Friesner of Los Angeles and Mrs. Rust of Anaheim.

Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Llewellyn and Miss Abbie G. Smith of Los Angeles are recent arrivals at Idyllwild.

Mrs. F. K. Bottsford and children, Miss Estelle Grannis and Mrs. Grove of Los Angeles, who have been here for several weeks, left Thursday for their homes.

Mrs. Irene De Lester Stetson-Jones of Los Angeles, who spent a few days here, left Thursday to visit San Bernardino and Arrowhead Springs.

Glendale.

A Baby party was given on Thursday, with tiny Mary Elizabeth Anderson in the role of hostess, beneath the spreading branches of a giant acacia tree. Pink satin streamers floated from the branches, each strand thickly sown with little bells that merrily chimed above the daintily-laden table, where pink and white blossoms mingled with white cake and pink ice cream. Those old enough to play pinned pink tails to a white donkey, Edward Newcomb winning the prize of a donkey book. Among the pink and white babies present were several tiny relatives of the baby hostess, John and George Fraley, Edward and Mabell Newcomb. Invitations to the affair were written in rhyme.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar W. Pack, recently returned from the north, entertained on Thursday with a course dinner in their home, "The Priory," Gaston Ganahl, who has spent some time visiting Matilija Springs, being the honor guest.

On Thursday was held the first meeting of St. Mark's Guild since the summer vacation, at the home of Mrs. Dr. D. W. Hunt, Third street. Many plans for the winter's work were adopted, and the attendance was exceptionally good.

Last Wednesday the teachers and pupils of the Sabbath-school of St. Mark's Episcopal Church thoroughly enjoyed a jolly picnic to Echo Park.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church had a busy meeting Thursday, at the home of Mrs. D. F. Hendershott. The year's work was practically settled and a neat sum turned in, this being the last meeting before election of officers, which takes place in October.

A pleasant and complete surprise Monday evening was that given to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Byrkit in their handsome new home on B street, by the members of Chapter L., P.E.O. The invaders met at the Methodist Church and went in a body to the home of the unsuspecting victims. After several jolly games, followed the feast.

A charming little affair was the birthday party, given in the home of Mrs. H. Shaw, to little Alicia Kelley, on her eleventh birthday. Her Sunday-school teacher, Miss Bertha Patterson, and twelve classmates being the happy guests.

Mr. anr Mrs. George Kirkby of Lomita Park, are enjoying an outing at "The Terrace," La Crescenta. They left on Wednesday, and expect to be gone about two weeks.

Guests at the home of Mrs. Mary Ogden Ryan this past week were Mrs. Jessie Page Helms and her son, Gilbert, of Pasadena, and Miss Bertha M. Brooks of Los Angeles.

Guests at a dainty luncheon given Wednesday by Mrs. Mary V. Colburn of G street, were Mrs. B. Lawrence

Showing the New Suits

None as Good, as Cheap, or as Pretty Elsewhere

The season has opened and we have full lines of all the popular priced garments to meet every want, and furthermore, our guarantee for quality is back of every purchase. Our local buyer has just returned from the east and our New York buying organization are daily sending us the very latest productions of the best makers of women's wearables in the east. Our showing of new suits this week could almost be called a semi-formal fall opening, for we are satisfied that for size of assortment from which to make selection no three local stores can make as good a showing. Fashion's trend this season is for the tailored suits and gowns. We are going to feature the following four lines this week:

Jaunty Tailored Suits at $15.00
Large assortment of swagger gowns of all wool materials in the new shades; plaids, stripes and plain; fitted or Prince Chap coat styles; satin lined; and the skirts are in the new pleated effects.

Tailored Broadcloth Gowns $29.00
Of fancy or plain broadcloth and particularly strong in shades of pecan brown, medium and dark browns, as also blue and black; the coats are 30, 36 and 42 inch lengths; every garment as perfect in fit as if made to your individual measure.

All Wool Tailored Suits $35.00
All the wanted materials; broadcloths, fancy cheviots and plain serges in the latest coat styles; prettily shaped skirts, trimmed in the most fashionable manner, made with the highest degree of intelligence in the dressmaker's art and are in all shades.

Tailored and Trimmed Suits $49.00
A particularly large showing of these medium priced semi-dress styles in tailored and trimmed suits of plain broadcloth in all the newest shades; very strongly represented in the purples and browns; we are satisfied that similar suits elsewhere would cost from $55.00 to $60.00.

$1.50 "Royal Regent" Corsets—Newest Models
A make of corsets confined exclusively to this store and absolutely the best on the market today; of fine coutil or batiste with complete supporter attachment and trimmed with lace and ribbons; every pair fitted by an expert corsetiere; one of these new model corsets absolutely necessary to make a proper fit to the new tailor suits.

EDITORIAL ROUND TABLE.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Blue Spots and Mongol Blood.

Newborn Japanese and Chinese children bear on certain parts of their bodies curious bluish spots varying in size from that of a small coin to that of the human hand. These spots, which disappear entirely after a few years, have been regarded by some writers as suggesting an infusion of negro blood, and most authorities have considered their presence as a proof of Mongolian connection. Recent investigation, however, indicates that they constitute a human rather than a racial peculiarity, the special cells causing the spots being also present in white races, but so far beneath the surface that they do not show. They are also found on negro children, and the Medical Record concludes that they must not be considered as an exclusive race characteristic, but are to be accorded the same value as other racial traits—color, hair, etc. Their presence or absence in given cases leads to highly probable, but not positive, determination as to race or to degree of admixture.

Training the Senses.

Too little attention has been paid to the hygiene and education of the senses, says A. Peris in Cosmos, but all of our attention is given to the development of physical strength and vigor. The senses operate in two ways, either passively, when the organ, solely from the fact that it is situated on the surface of the body, and independently of the will, is acted upon by exterior bodies; or actively, when the organ, directed and excited by the will, goes, so to speak, in advance of the body to receive the impression. Passively, we see, hear, touch, smell; actively we observe, listen, feel, sniff. By the effect of the attention and by arranging our organs in certain ways our impressions become more intense. After numerous trials, well graded and often repeated, the organ accommodates itself to the function, the property of reinforcement of excitation by the nerves is developed, facility and skill are approached and finally attained.

The senses must be cultivated in early life, because it is in that period that the organs adapt themselves and lend themselves best to the functions for which they are made, and because in children the senses have a considerable preponderance in their activities. The child is curious, touches everything, observes, listens, and handles with ardor and eagerness, so that exercises for educating the senses are to him as easy and pleasant as amusements.

Love at Sight.

Sir James Crichton-Browne, during an address on the mind, brain and education of children, essayed, in cold, unemotional phraseology, an explanation of "love at first sight." He attributed this "first love" practically to two scientific causes—although he considered it "too problematical and out of date, in these days, to merit serious physiological consideration." The two causes of the tender passion were, in his opinion: (1) a species of cerebral comotion; (2) the stirring of some hitherto dormant association centers by an appropriate affinitive impression. He also described a curious experiment which had been made with 845 tiny children, to test their individual mind impulses. A variety of dolls were offered to them, and their choice carefully studied. In the result 161 preferred wax dolls, 163 paper dolls, 153 china dolls, 14 rag dolls, 166 bisque dolls, and sixty-nine rubber dolls. Sir James delivered a notable passage upon what he called "the commerce of the brain." "In every brain," he said, "there are broad, well beaten highways of association that can never be abandoned or interfered with; but in every brain there are also crossways and byways that can be converted into highways or blocked up altogether, and in every brain there are territories that have not been fully opened up to traffic, but that may be penetrated and brought into the trade circuit."

No More Earthquakes.

Dr. F. Omari, professor of seismology in the Imperial University of Tokio, says the present era of strong earthquake activity has been completed, and that for many years to come there will be no strong seismic disturbances. His investigations have demonstrated the existence of an earthquake zone that follows the borders of the Pacific Ocean for the principal part of its scope. Extending from the southern part of the American continent on the Pacific it extends to Alaska, and follows the Aleutian Islands and Kuriles to North Japan. From the latitude of the vicinity of Formosa, or slightly farther south, it follows the steep side or convex side of the arc made by the Himalayan mountains, to the Caucasus, and thence along the northern coast of the Mediterranean. Observations have shown that the southern side of the Himalayas is steep, like the great depths of the ocean on the convex sides of the arcs made by the Aleutian and Japanese islands, while the Thibetan side is sloping and flat in comparison. It is these flat countries, such as Canada or Siberia, for instance, that are seemingly more immune.

The Wireless Telephone.

Prof. J. A. Fleming, the English scientist, utters a word of caution regarding the wireless telephone. Something more is needed than to set up two stations and talk across, although a good beginning has been made. The Poulson arc is very difficult to manage. It requires great skill, and the energy expenditure is considerable. Much must be done before telephony without wires is of commercial use. A system to be successful must be capable of being worked for hours together without any serious difficulties. Wireless telephony stands in very much the same position that wireless telegraphy with electric waves held, in say, the year 1895. It is quite within the bounds of possibility that we may soon be able to speak across the English Channel without a wire. It is not scientifically impossible that the sounds of the human voice may some day be transmitted from the shores of England or the United States to an Atlantic liner in mid-ocean.

IN THE BIG INDUSTRIES.

Japan Places Large Contract.

The Carnegie Steel Company has closed an order with Japan for $1,800,000 worth of steel rails and bridge work for the main line of the Imperial Railroad of Japan and its subsidiary concerns. The government is also dickering for $3,000,000 worth of locomotives, steel cars, etc.

Wood Pipe Manufacture.

The manufacture of wood pipe to be used in place of iron pipe has become a regular eastern industry. The pipes are assembled in eight-foot lengths ready for shipment and laying, just as is done with iron pipe. The wood used is the best quality of white pine. The winding machine used for banding the wood staves together is so arranged that the band can be wound at any desired tension, according to the set of the machine, which is regulated for each class of pipe, according to diameter and pressures specified. The tension can be made great enough to crush the wood in large size pipes. During the manufacture of one standard a uniform tension and spacing is absolutely assured. The chambers and tenons are necessarily cut uniformly by a machine so that every joint between two pipes must fit, as the knives and heads are set alike for each size pipe.

Wire Line Poles.

The census office shows that in 1902 there were in operation approximately 700,000 miles of pole and wire lines, and at the present time it is estimated that the number has been increased to 800,000 miles. What this means to the timber and to the line interests of the country can be seen from the fact that the average line includes forty poles to the mile, so that the total number of poles now in use is about $2,000,000. Assuming that the average life of a pole is twelve years, it follows that the maintenance of the lines in present operation requires each year 2,650,000 poles. Recognizing this extensive consumption for merely renewals, the government and American Telephone Company have been co-operating in the study of preservatives for extending the lives of the poles.

PROMINENT PERSONS.

Prof. E. C. Pickering, Harvard's leading astronomer and scientist, has startled the world of astronomy and astropsysics by declaring that "Mars teases" him and that he has "abandoned any further investigation" of that much-mooted planet.

Dr. Meade, formerly State Engineer of Wyoming, has accepted the position of chief of irrigation investigations for Austria at a salary of $15,000 per annum.

Gov. Warfield of Maryland has decided to enter the contest for the United States Senate. This makes seven candidates for the seat so long filled by the late Senator Gorman.

Charles M. Schwab has announced his intention of making a million-dollar gift to the industrial department of the Pensylvania State College.

The present Lord Bute is one of the wealthiest members of the British peerage, in that he owns the greater part of the city of Cardiff and all the docks of that prosperous and important seaport, that he is the only member of the House of Lords who is a master of both Gaelic and Welsh, that he is a Roman Catholic and, finally, that he is the son and successor of that peer who was portrayed by the late Lord Beaconsfield as "Lothair" in the novel of that name.

Dr. L. W. Stephenson has been appointed assistant geologist on the United States Geological Survey, and will be engaged for the next two years in the investigation of the geology and water resources of Virginia and the Carolinas.

Thomas F. Walsh, the wealthy Coloradian, and owner of Wolhurst, near Denver, has made the following announcement in his home papers: "We request our sporting friends not to shoot doves or any other birds on Wolhurst estate. They bring up their young on the grounds proper. They are almost domestic in their tameness, and are very near and dear friends of ours. So we appeal to every local sportsman to spare them."

STREAKS OF HUMOR.

Then He Dodged.

Smithson: We had a case of kidnaping in our house lately.

Wilson: Really! How did it happen?

Smithson: The baby slept the whole night.

She Was Too Quick.

"How did you come to propose to me?" asked the widow, coyly. "I didn't come to propose to you," replied her visitor, dazedly; "I came to spend the evening!"

Original Sin.

Visitor to Sunday-school: Now, boys, what are sins of omission?

Mother's Darling (with a smirk of conceit:) Sins we ought to have committed and have forgotten.

He Envied Them.

Mrs. Hastymatch: I had a dozen proposals before yours. All from smarter men than you, too!

Mr. Hastymatch: They must have been. How did they manage to crawl out of it?

EMANCIPATED FEMININITY.

WOMEN DO ALL KINDS OF WORK.

ONLY TWO OCCUPATIONS ARE RESERVED FOR MEN.

There Are no Female Soldiers or Telegraph Linemen, but of the Three Hundred Other Vocations Women Are Securing a Large Share of the Opportunities.

Women are now engaged in all but two of the 303 gainful occupations of the men of this country. There are no female soldiers or telegraph linemen. The government will not enlist her, and she is physically disqualified for climbing a pole. In all the other vocations, however, she is well represented, and it is a remarkable fact that the number of women employed as breadwinners is increasing at a more rapid rate than the army of men.

The percentage of women breadwinners in the United States has increased four and one-tenth, while the percentage of men has increased only one and three-tenths. In Pennsylvania, they have increased their percentage four and five-tenths, while the men have increased only three and one-tenth. In Ohio, the feminine increase is nearly 6 per cent., while in Massachusetts the percentage of women workers has increased four and nine-tenths.

An investigation into the cause of this remarkable increase is not possible here, nor is it possible to assign a reason that will cover the situation as a whole. Every branch of industry must be looked into separately, but the following list, which shows the number of women engaged in the various occupations formerly exclusively masculine, will furnish food for thought:

Physicians and surgeons, 8119; messengers, 6663; barbers, 5574; preachers, 3373; potters, 2000; saloonkeepers, 2086; raisers of live stock, 1932; house and sign painters, 1759; employés of steam railroads, 1668; architects and designers, 1041; lawyers, 1010; quarrymen, 989; commercial travelers, 946; teamsters, 904; night watchmen, firemen and policemen, 879; dentists, 807; merchants, 571; carpenters and builders, 545; tile workers, 478; bartenders, 440; electricians, 409; butchers, 378; undertakers, 323; bankers and brokers, 293; brewers, 275; decorators and paper hangers, 241; blacksmiths, 193; keepers of livery stables, 190; millers, 188; stationary engineers and firemen, 177; masons and bricklayers, 167; sailors (not in United States navy,) 153; bookcase and cupboard makers, 143; plumbers, 126; coopers, 113; lumber dealers, 100; civil engineers and surveyors, 84; cabinet makers, 67; employés of street railroads, 46; plasterers, 45; installers of furnaces, 43; distillers, 30; wheelwrights, 10; boilermakers, 8; roofers and slaters, 2; river pilots, 1.

In the occupations where it is less unusual to find women the figures are as follows:

School and music teachers, 327,614; saleswomen, 150,000; stenographers and typewriters, 86,118; clerks, 85,246; artists and art teachers, 11,031; agents and solicitors, 10,556; actresses and chorus girls, 6857; journalists, 2193.

THE GIRL IN THE KHAKI SUIT.

There's a girl of today, who has come here to stay—
The girl in the khaki suit,
She goes with a will, and she goes all the way,
Does the girl in the khaki suit.
She has cheeks like a rose and a voice like a song,
And she's tall and she's broad, and she's brave and she's strong.
And you won't get along
If you talk ping-pong
With the girl in the khaki suit.

Chorus (forte:)
Oh, the girl in the khaki suit;
She can fence, she can ride, she can shoot;
And her feet never fail,
As she strides up the trail—
The girl in the khaki suit.
She's a broad, frank forehead and clear, steady eyes—
The girl in the khaki suit—
And she doesn't talk scandal and doesn't tell lies—
The girl in the khaki suit.
Her waist by a corset has never been girt,
And she wears a short skirt, to keep out of the dirt,
And your pride will be hurt
If you offer to flirt
With the girl in the khaki suit.

Chorus (still more forte:)
Oh, the girl in the khaki suit,
With her foot in a foot-form boot,
She can run like a doe,
She can swim, she can row—
Can the girl in the khaki suit.

But she isn't a mimic of brutal mankind—
The girl in the khaki suit—
For she's gentle of heart and she's modest of mind—
The girl in the khaki suit.
She doesn't go forth, in a costume absurd,
To torture the beast and to slaughter the bird;
But she's kind in her act and her thought and her word—
Is the girl in the khaki suit.

Chorus (fortissimo:)
O the girl in the khaki suit,
She is queen of the man and the brute;
She can ride a wild horse
Round a steeplechase course—
Can the girl in the khaki suit.

Chorus (repeated:)
O the girl in the khaki suit,
With a form like the ripened fruit,
She is worth all the rest;
She's the sanest and best;
She is HEALTH—in a khaki suit.
—[Bertrand Shadwell.

*"The girl in the khaki suit" is essentially a California girl.

Delaware Incorporating Chinese.

One of the most interesting developments of this era of incorporations of industrial and business undertakings is the recognition by the Chinese of the benefits of such a basis of management and the fact that they seek incorporation in this country. This is brought out in a letter to the Manufacturer's Record from G. B. Lewis, secretary of the Delaware Charter Guarantee & Trust Co., of Wilmington, Del. Referring to the liberal provision of the corporation laws of the State of Delaware, he writes:

"It may interest you to know that aside from the many people located in the different portions of the United States who take advantage of our law, its advantages are recognized and are made use of in foreign countries, as we have incorporated companies for a number of Chinese business men who are now doing business in China under the corporate laws of Delaware, and the same thing has been done for residents of Russia and a very large number of residents of Cuba."

Miss Myrtle Gonzalez.

[illegible] I am not. [illegible] that? I wish [illegible] tell such [illegible] to be engaged. [illegible] to think of [illegible]

[illegible] by Miss Myr- [illegible] as the most [illegible] Spanish-American [illegible] over, when [illegible] she is to marry a [illegible] man is true. [illegible] she has other

[illegible] Miss Myrtle has be- [illegible] among local [illegible] type of fea- [illegible] artists have [illegible] which she [illegible] and as many [illegible] requested [illegible] to make [illegible] photographic [illegible] "but I [illegible] to sit for painters, for fear that at some future time, it might be said that she was once an artist's model."

The accompanying picture of Miss Gonzalez has been very much admired by a certain artist of note, who likened it to one of Raphael's Madonnas. It is not half as lovely as the original her admirers say. It does not show the beautiful gray eyes with their long curling black lashes, nor does it convey any idea of the pearl-like delicacy of the color of her skin, and the ripe red of her lips.

In this day, when beauty-building is such a cult among American mothers, it is interesting to know how this perfect flower has developed. She has never been athletic in any way—never rode a horse, punched a bag or played tennis; she can't swim, and never tried to learn. Never golfed and never rowed a boat. In fact the only real active exercise she has ever taken is dancing, and she has had that continuously since a little child. Dancing and singing—these are the two arts which have been her delight.

To singing she will devote her life. For three years she has been a serious student under a good teacher, and between them, with the mother's encouragement, it is the plan to make Myrtle a bright and particular star on the concert stage.

In her home circle, the quality for which Myrtle is most prized is her cleverness as a little housekeeper. All the cooking for the family of five is done by her. Her mother says she is as proud of her ability to prepare a dish of enchilladas as she is of any of her more artistic accomplishments.

PATERNALISM THAT PAYS.

OUR NATIONAL LANDLORD.

ADMINISTERS A HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SIX MILLION ACRES.

Successful Method Whereby the Grazing Lands Are Saved from Spoliation, and the Rights of Cattle Owners Are Respected as Well as Protected.

[Minneapolis Journal:] The Forestry Bureau, which now administers more acres of land than any other institution in the world, and is the landlord branch of the Federal government, has just compiled its report covering statistics of grazing on the public lands of the great West. The figures will give some idea of the scale on which Uncle Sam has gone into the land business, and are very comforting because of their very size, for, if the existing policy is unmolested, the vast areas of forest and mountain now embraced in reserves will for all time be administered in the interest of the entire people.

There are now more than 156,000,000 acres of land in the national forests. Grazing is permitted, but under strict regulations, made in order that the grass may not be destroyed by overfeeding. This, by the way, is what has caused most of the friction in the West. Owners of flocks and herds in that section of the country for years have been accustomed to grazing without restrictions of any kind. Many of them in time came to look upon the public domain as their very own, in an important sense, and they were quick to resent any effort on the part of the government to conserve either forest or grazing land. But this friction is rapidly disappearing as the western people see that without such conservation the range and forest in time will be destroyed.

HOW POLICY IS WORKING.

A glance at the regulations governing grazing on the government forests will give readers a very good idea of the government forest policy and how it is being administered. Stockmen who desire to make use of the range apply for permits, stating the kind of stock they have, the quantity of it and the location of the range they want. The forest officers then proceed to make allotments, apportioning the available pasture among the applicants on as equitable a basis as practicable.

During the year just closed the report shows that 23,662 applications for pasture were approved. Of the applicants, 21,788 paid the fees and were granted permits. That was 92 per cent. During the year before this last one, there were 18,040 applications, and 16,583 permits; also 92 per cent., which seems to show that the method of transacting the business is systematic, and that great fluctuations need not be expected. Year before last the totals were: Sheep and goats, 4,263,158; horses and cattle, 1,025,148. For last year the totals were: Sheep and goats, 6,657,083; horses and cattle, 1,200,186. The increases are explained by increases in the size of the forests.

Many stockmen living on the borders of reserves have range of their own, but to reach it with stock it is frequently necessary or convenient to drive across portions of the forests. To do this a permit is necessary, but no charge is made for it. The last year 853 such permits were granted, covering 36,807 horses and cattle and 2,051,850 sheep.

COLLECT $5576 FOR TRESPASS.

Sometimes stockmen who live near forests or have stock near them allow that stock to drift across the lines. If this is done carelessly or wilfully it is considered trespass and the offender is subject to a fine and may also be sued for damages. The number of trespass cases last year was 182, of which 163 were settled out of court. The sum collected for these trespasses aggregated $5576. These trespass cases have been another source of friction between the government and the grazers. It is difficult for the West to realize that the country now being thickly populated, it is no longer possible to maintain the old-time free range without destroying that range. The entire system of permits and fees is for the purpose of enabling the government to know that the range within the reserves is not being overfed.

Another kind of permit is issued in certain cases. Sometimes a man has land inside a government forest or partly surrounded by it and rather than fence it to keep his stock in he signs an agreement that if his stock is allowed to graze in the forest other stock may graze on his land. Last year 615 such permits were issued.

NEW FIFTH CONGRESS.

The total receipts for grazing permits during the year were $857,856.82 and for the year before they were $514,692.87.

The policy of the Burkett bill, introduced during the last session of Congress, was to apply to the 300,000,000 acres of the public range the same regulations which now apply to the 156,000,000 acres of government forests, above referred to, and it was this bill which called forth the Denver convention of June this year. Should President Roosevelt adhere to his original opinion that the Burkett bill is right and recommend it in his annual message in December the fight of last session will be renewed with increased bitterness. It is a safe statement that that bill cannot be enacted into law at this time owing to the fourteen or fifteen votes in the Senate of western Republicans who represent States which will retire any man who at this time would support the bill. In time it is believed that the bill can be made a law, but strong pressure will be brought to bear on the President by certain of his chief advisers to have him abandon that feature of his land policy for the time being.

Dyspeptic Philosophy.

If you want a man to remember you, do him an injury; if you want a man to forget you, do him a favor.

Some women are never happy unless they are feeling sorry for some other woman.

Even the fellow who feels that he has nothing to live for soon discovers that he can't live for nothing.

The millennium will be a sad day for the reformers. There will be nothing left to view with alarm.

A bit of practice in the hand is worth two theories in the bush.

Sceptics are merely people who don't share our good opinion of ourselves.

The average man never learns to play solitaire until he gets married.

The girl who wants to make a name for herself can seldom make a loaf of bread.

All the average man wants is fair play, but he also wants to act as umpire.

AND SCHOOL SUPPLIES—
Selling at Actual Cost of Publication
Sale Begins Monday, Third Floor

Cut prices the key note of this great Annual September sale of school books and supplies. The Broadway Department store is the center for the selling of the right text books and supplies. We inaugaurated this movement over ten years ago and each year the sale has become bigger and bigger until now it is just a question of being able to find space to devote to the great movement.

Last year's experience has taught us that we must provide even greater facilities, more salespeople and more bundle-wrappers in order to fill your wants quickly and with the least possible delay.

That's the point that we have been strengthening. We have taken a great portion of the third floor and arranged it in the most convenient manner to handle the great crowds that attend this event.

All the books and supplies you may need, no matter how many of them, will be on sale at just the actual cost of publication. Think what a great saving this will mean.

Have the children make out their lists and have them bring them to the Broadway.

Remember this, we were first to start this great movement. We have a great big generous assortment of just the books you need. We publish herewith a list of some of the text books you'll want, as well as some extra special leaders on some of the most needed supplies. Remember, sale starts Monday. Third floor.

FRESH LITERATURE.

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

[BY A TIMES REVIEWER.]

A Novel of San Francisco.

KENDRY'S IDEA. By Chester Bailey Publishing Company, York. (Price $1.50.)

Kendry, a rich man's son, Ethel Barr, a beautiful young of the people, in the fogs on directly after he had knocked on the head by Ethel's Arthur Poulter, and as soon recovers the few senses he has, lays before her his great a pretty good one, on the though it may be surmised that of Kendry's hide-bound never succeeded in doing anything with it.

he sat up. 'I think I have been muddling about my head a long time, and that fellow's it into shape.' 'Over there,' he waved toward the most of the people I know are to get richer. Not so much for money, but because it's the only they know—the only one they there is. They are like ants; are dreadfully busy and organized, but they haven't the least idea what it's all about; they are too to be able to evolve. For myself I want to move in more dimensions. I want to be a conscious does that sound 'wordy?' he

The girl was seated on the bough gravely shook her head from her silence. His audience pleased he resumed with gravity: 'Of course I shall go through most father's experiences in life; but in one dimension. I want to where he left off. I want to take he brought to me and carry forward and deliver it in improved to some other chap by the family name. That ought to be sport—a sort of egg and spoon he interrupted irreverently an evergreen egg. That over he waved to the city, 'strikes I think it must strike the mountain if you sat here a thousand and saw the web of time drawn you'd begin to distinguish between woof and the warp. All these ants shuttle horizontally from one edge web to the other, with a visible beginning and end—they'd be woofs; all the people with developed souls with the wish and capacity for toward infinity—they'd be Is this getting too thick for you?' he sympathetically paused. she widened; she shook her 'Well,' said Kendry, with an sigh, 'I don't think there's in being a woof; and I do it would be immense to be a this is confusion worse confounded, and so is the plot, which is as may be and has neither nor probability. The reader hazy notion that this is a novel of the San Francisco life of today, but he can't be quite sure. He is also left very much in doubt as to whether John Kendry is a "warp" or a "woof"—though, to be sure, nobody really cares a whit. Though the hero is a fool, his adventures are among the most sensational on record. Mr. Fernald has really tried, and tried hard, to write a clever book, but with most remarkable non-success. It is wearisome to the last degree.

For the Man Who Hesitates.

THE BACHELOR'S GUIDE TO MATRIMONY. By Reginald Wright Kauffman. Henry Altemus Co., Philadelphia. (Price 50 cents.)

Reginald Wright Kauffman, already known to the reading public as a writer of novels and a frequent contributor of verses and short stories to the magazines, now comes forward and makes a big bid for fame in a little book of aphorisms, some of which are really epigrams in their pointed playfulness. The paragraphs appear under four heads: "Just for Fun," "When You Really Mean It," "Orange Blossoms," and "Yoked." On the cover of the book, which is dark red, is shown a blindfolded young man in a light-blue dress suit, who is, tied to the rigging of a ship while standing on a spring-board, but who is making strenuous efforts to answer the calls of love that come from the pretty maidens' heads that bob up and down on the waves below him. The book is illustrated by drawings by Harrison Fisher, Gordon Grant and Will Grefé. The decorations consist of Cupids among roses and a spider and a fly eyeing each other across a web of no uncertain strands.

There are truth, tenderness, wit and gentle cynicism in these:

"One may smile, and smile, and be a woman.

"Walls have no ears, but be careful of the telephone.

"Love is like the measles—the older the patient, the worse the case.

"Never put off till tomorrow the love you may make tonight.

"If you plant love, you must expect to harrow feelings.

"Be careful; some men are born to be married, some achieve marriage; but more than you'd suppose have marriage thrust upon them.

"Don't go to her on your knees; go in your automobile.

"The despairing lover loves a julep, for will not a drowning man clutch at a straw?

"The successful lover always speaks twice before he thinks once.

"Beauty will inspire you; even Balaam's beast spoke when he saw an angel in the way.

"Why is it that the friends of the bride always sob, and the friends of the groom always snicker?

"Possession is nine points of the law—when you've got a bride, you've got to keep her.

"Take command immediately; the man who hesitates is bossed.

"An optimist is a married man who can forget it.

"The husband's day: Eight hours for sleep, eight hours for work, and eight hours for explanations.

"Any fool can win love, but only a hero can keep it.

"Why question her about her milliner's bill? Truth and the excuses of a woman are stranger than fiction.

"There was once a wife who never said, 'I told you so.'

"The man who tells his wife all he knows doesn't know much.

"Women's rights make children's wrongs.

"It is generally easier to get along without your ideal than with her.

"Marry for money and quarrel for love.

"Married life is a triumph of faith over suspicion.

"Two cannot live on what one can, but the living is bettre worth while."

A Book of Travel.

THROUGH PORTUGAL. By Martin Hume. McClure, Phillips & Co., New York. (Price $1.50.)

On the desk of the lover of travel, Martin Hume's narrative work, "Through Portugal," will fall as a novel delight.

In itself, Mr. Hume's work does not exhibit marked originality of style or treatment, but the subject matter is delightfully fresh. Portugal is a literary province comparatively unworked. Almost every European visitor who ever shoved a pen feels constrained to descant again upon the Bohemianism of France; that strange amalgam of spiritual antiquity and material modernity which is Italy; the tyrannies and treasons of the Russias; the masculine force of modern Germany. They have hovered again and again over the fogs of London, and have climbed the steeps of the Norwegian fjords; but Portugal they have passed practically unobserved, and for no apparent reason.

Mr. Hume's book, 300 pages of ordinary type, deals colloquially with the present-day Portugal, treats interestingly of its people and their customs, and lingers in fine historic vein over the dramatic episodes and legendary lore of the country's past.

From its sincere tone, the reviewer would judge that the various accounts are authoritative. If so, they are not only interesting reading, but are valuably instructive; for the average man and woman, though quite conversant with the greater European principalities, is well-nigh ignorant of Portuguese history.

A number of good photographs illustrate Mr. Hume's work, and in addition a strikingly dainty collection of water colors by A. S. Forrest. Of these little pictures there are thirty-one in all.

The dedication, by permission, is to the King of Portugal.

Boy Philosophy.

Ben Blow, a young officer of the revenue for the district of California, and well known in Los Angeles (indeed, he is stopping in our midst at the present moment,) contributes a humorous story of a dog and some boys to the September number of Everybody's Magazine. It is illustrated by Martin Justice. The story is entitled "Alexander," which is the name of the mongrel pup who is its hero. While the boys are sitting down to rest from their successful expedition to a melon patch, they give expression to some crude but sound philosophy:

"'Say, fellers, ain't it just nifty to be a kid?'

"'Oh, I do' know,' said Johnny Simmons. 'Goin' to school ain't no picnic, but it's got to be done. I never thought chores was much fun, neither. Fur a good time in this world kind o' seems to me I'd rather be a dog. Look at Sandy. Does he have to scrabble fur a livin'? Does he have to worry his brains over spellin'? Ain't a place to sleep give him? An' when he grows up he ain't never to have nothin' to do but snooze in the sun an' git up now 'n' then an' chase a shoat out o' the yard. D'you s'pose fur a minute it tastes bad to him when he's a-chawin' a hog's ear? Not him; he likes it, he does.'

"'Dogs can't talk, though,' said Billy Day, defending the niftiness of kidhood. 'Kind o' seems to me I'd miss that.'

"'Naw, they can't talk, but they kin wag their tails mighty knowin'. Anyway, how do you know they can't talk? My daddy says Doc Henderson told him that them big-bug men in Wash'nt'n told him that even the teeny little ants talk to each other. Now, what you got to say?'

"This inquiry was made triumphantly as if definitely settling the question, but Fatty arose in negation that was contemptuously serene.

"'Aw, g'wan,' he said. 'Kin they hear what the ants say? G'wan.'

"'Animals is got sense, though, 'n' I wouldn't be s'prised if they could talk,' interjected Whitey Wilkins. 'Our ol' Maje got bit by a cott'nmouth onct, an' pap says here's most likely where we have to raise another fool pup, but does he die? Naw, he don't die. What does he do? He hunts up a hog waller before the pizen gits to workin' good, an' buries hisself till they ain't nothin' but his nose sticks out an' he cures hisself. How'd he know mud'd cure? Has he ever been snake-bit before? Naw, 'course he ain't; so some dog friend o' hisn that had, must of told him 'bout the mud. Now is they any answer to that? Kin they talk or can't they?'

"The discussion of old Maje's snake-bite experience was conducted with much asperity, while the boys absorbed the water-melons, now lusciously chill, and Alexander, tired of bombardment with melon seeds, wandered away into the woods. Fatty Peters maintained the negative with wise logic between vast mouthfuls of sweet pulp.

"'How'd the first dog find out mud'd cure?' he demanded. 'He didn't have no time to git advice. Somethin' had to be done an' done durn quick. I tell you 'twasn't nothin' but instinc'. Some o' you fellers tell me what makes a dog put all four feet clost together an' turn round three times' fore he lays down. D'you ever see a cat do that-a-way? Maybe you did, but I say you didn't, cuz cats don't do it.'"

A Literary Mystery.

A little story is told of a rather pleasing incident which occurred as a result of the perusal of Anna Katharine Green's detective story, "The Mayor's Wife," by two young people of Chicago.

The gentleman in question having found the novel interesting, sent a copy to a clever girl friend, who is more than attractive to him. The lady enjoyed the book, and in writing her note of thanks and appreciation, trasncribed her message in the cipher used in the tale. On the envelope she wrote house and street number in plain English, but used the characters of the cipher in spelling her admirer's name. The young man lives on an avenue which crosses a business street that is largely occupied by Chinese laundries and restaurants, and the mail carrier of the district, who delivers much matter to the Celestials, jumped to the conclusion that the peculiar-appearing name on this letter must be Chinese, so he took it to one of the laundrymen to be interpreted. Hop Ling was deeply interested, but emphatically pronounced the letters absolutely unrelated to his language.

The carrier then presented the note at the proper address, saying: "Here's a letter from some heathen foreigner who has used your number by mistake. I know it isn't for any of you people."

Fortunately the lover himself was present and recognized the handwriting in the address. He claimed the missive, and then devotel three days to digging out the hidden meaning of the delightful communication.

PEOPLE AND THINGS LITERARY.

The new edition of "The Novels and Stories of Ivan Turgenieff," translated by Miss Isabel F. Hapgood and published by Charles Scribner's Sons, is now completed by the publication of six volumes of short stories. The translation is made by an American from the original Russian, not the French version, and is adequate. The print is a delight to the eye. The volumes are entitled after the first story in each, but the arrangement of the six that now appear is chronological: "The Diary of a Superfluous Man," "First Love," "Phantoms," "The Brigadier," "Spring Freshets" and "A Reckless Character."

Harold Bell Wright, whose new book, "The Shepherd of the Hills," a novel of the Ozark country of Southwestern Missouri, has just been issued from the press of the Book Supply Company, was born in Rome, N. Y., in 1872. After a short career in college, he circled about, as some birds do when they take their long flight, and finally headed for Missouri. By spiritual impulsion and some kindly cow-puncher compulsion, he began to preach the Christian gospel among those who needed it, and to some—if the reports are true—who had to take it when he had the floor, whether they wanted it or not. Regarding his literary work, Mr. Wright says that in his books, "That Printer of Udells" and "The Shepherd of the Hills," he has barely scratched the surface of what is in him to say.

A striking divorce article entitled "Why American Marriages Fail," by Mrs. Anna A. Rogess of Washington, D. C., appears in the September Atalntic. Her theory is that in nine divorces out of ten, the wife is to blame, because with her marriage is the great duty and aim in life, while of necessity with the husband, business or profession divides his niterest. Mrs. Rogers holds that American women are overfed, overdressed, and over-idle. The frantic and extensive shopping noticed in our large cities, the devotion to personal vanities, and the general extravagance of living are all signs that making a home and dwelling therein does not fill the modern woman's hours. As the writer herself is a woman, the article exhibits a peculiar sympathy; moreover, it is, in the main, optimistic. It is a wise, deliberated and clarifying treatment of a perplexed subject.

The Century Company will issue this fall a new series of books made up of sketches and stories reprinted from St. Nicholas. There will be six of these books of adventure, travel and description, the scenes laid in different sections of the United States; and the books will be called, "Western Frontier Stories," "Stories of the Great Lakes," "Island Stories," "Stories of Strange Sights," "Sea Stories," and "Stories of the South."

Business literature has taken cognizance of the fact that the business year has its regular seasons of ebb and flow, of aggressiveness and of relaxation. In recognition of the impetus given commercial and industrial activity by the approach of the busy fall season, System, the magazine of business, has issued a special edition for September, which is the largest and by far the handsomest and most valuable issue of that magazine yet published. Its new cover design is a novelty—a reproduction of a bronze plate cast from a clay mold by John Paulding. The color work is in realistic bronze tone. The issue contains 345 pages, with illustrations in two colors.

The novelette which opens the October number of the Smart Set is by a new English writer, H. Cheriton Hilgate, and is entitled "Spinners of Fate." It is a love story, most of the scenes of which are laid in a small German town where the hero, an English clergyman, has gone for a time to take charge of a parish. How he encounters the charming heroine and falls in love is told in breezy fashion by the author. Minor characters, excellently drawn, play part in this little drama.

Thirty-one new books are announced by A. C. McClurg & Co. for publication during the forthcoming autumn, of which only four are new novels and romances. These, however, include Randall Parrish's "Beth Norvell," in which contemporary life is dealt with by that popular author; Mrs. Katharine Tynan's "For Maisie," a love story of aristocratic England; Charles B. Hudson's "The Crimson Conquest," a vivid romance woven about Pizarro's overthrow of the Incas in Peru; and Miss Edith Huntington Mason's "The Real Agatha," in which a nice fellow finds a nice girl, but not until he has been bewildered by several other nice girls. In addition, four volumes of the "Prairie Classics" will be brought out late in October, new and compact editions of Dickens's "Oliver Twist" and "A Tale of Two Cities," and of Scott's "Kenilworth" and "Ivanhoe."

The latest book for young people from the pen of Olive Thorne Miller, who is now living on the Arroyo Seco in Garvanza, is "Harry's Runaway," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., and illustrated by C. F. C. Pillsbury. It follows the adventures of a boy who runs the errands and does the chores for his aunt's boarding-house. He runs away from home with some other boys. They find a cave and have even more adventures than they bargained for. On his return, each boarder gives some experience of boys who ran away from home and what became of them. It is a novel plan for a boys' book.

"The Shadow of the Czar," which was one of the popular successes of a few years ago, brought into the limelight another new author, John R. Carling. "The Shadow of the Czar," unlike many of the "big sellers" of the past, continues to be in active demand at the bookstores, and Mr. Carling has since written "The Viking's Skull" and "The Weird Picture." Mr. Carling now returns to Russia for the scene of his new book, and in "By Neva's Waters," to be published by Little, Brown & Co., this fall, he deals with an episode in the secret history of Alexander I. The wife of the Czar Alexander plays a prominent part in the love drama of the story, which is filled with adventure and diplomatic intrigue.

Arthur Stringer, who is spending the summer on his fruit farm in Canada, is poet as well as a novelist, and the best of his verse that has appeared in the leading magazines, together with entirely new poems, will be published this fall. One of Mr. Stringer's novels, "The Wire Tappers," is to be dramatized this autumn.

JUGGLING WITH FAME.

Why have Edgar Allan Poe, whom Tennyson considered "the literary glory of America," and James Fenimore Cooper, the romancer, who "declared the literary independence of the United States," failed to achieve niches in New York's Hall of Fame on University Heights? This question, which is discussed by Edmund Clarence Stedman in the North American Review, is peculiarly timely in view of the centennial celebration at Cooperstown this summer and of the plans for monuments to oPe in Richmond and in Baltimore. While the Philadelphia Press finds the answer in the theory that "Poe carried form too far to be popular, and Cooper did not carry it far enough to sustain his claim to rank as a classic," Mr. Stedman, who is one of the hundred electors to this American Pantheon, explains the situation on other grounds. He is dissatisfied with the way the elections are conducted. Two elections—the third will take place in 1910—have resulted in the choice of forty out of the possible fifty "immortals;" but Poe and Cooper, although on the voting list, have fallen short in both cases of the number of votes requisite for admission. The fact that these two have not been chosen is sufficient evidence to Mr. Stedman that something is wrong with the rules governing the voting, and he urges that this defect be remedied in the next election. While he repudiates any lack of respect for the breadth and acumen of the twenty-five "college presidents," the twenty-six "professors of history and scientists," the twenty-six "publicists, editors, and authors," and the twenty-three "chief justices" with whom he is associated on the board of electors, he has this to say in regard to the system of voting:

"I have used the word 'associates' in speaking of the hundred judges, but—and here I reach the gravamen of the complaint—we have been, after all, associated no more actively than the gargoyles of Notre Dame or the saintlier marble images of the Milan Cathedral: perhaps still less so, for it has not seemed beyond conjecture, in the fancy of our pasquinaders, that the statued sages of a supreme courthouse, or Mr Ward's allegorical impersonations within the stock-exchange pediment, may confabulate at the mystic midnight hour.

"Under our electoral system a real cause for surprise is that the enshrinement of forty immortals has been already effected and has called forth so few expressions of discontent respecting the selections actually made. Consider the limitations imposed. Once and again, a period of five years intervening, the university and college presidents, the chief justices, the professors of history and scientists, and the publishers, editors and authors have not been disobedient to the vision from the Heights. They have received the representative lists of the famous dead and have underscored the names of those whom they, each for himself, have thought most entitled to mural consecration. Possibly some of the justices have been able to confer, in full bench, before reaching their decisions, but as for the publishers, editors and authors, they have voted in cabinets as separate as those in which cardinals are immured for the election of a new Pope. Few of them have had the opportunity, after receiving in late springtime the official 'roll of names' from the chancellor, to compare views with their colleagues; still fewer have exchanged written communications. If some plan had been devised whereby a goodly number of us might have been in conference for a single day; if we could have bumped heads and grazed shoulders, like the Hundred Wise Men of the East; or, if the chancellor, in the exercise of his prerogative, had acquainted the electoral body, by means of an inclusive circular No 3, with arguments submitted to him by any judges in support of any nominees, there would have been a basis for reconsideration. If, then, a supplementary vote had been permitted in the cases of those names which had come within a half-score ballots of the needed fifty-one, it seems probable that from five to ten more names would have been added to the eleven (of all classes) successful at the more recent election."—[Literary Digest.

THE LITERARY FIELD.

Frederic Remington, the artist-author, had had about as strenuous a career as any man that ever touched pen or pencil to paper. He has spent a great deal of time among the Indians in the West. On one of his visits he ran into a story which he is fond of telling.

For some years there had been a Presbyterian mission at the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska, but there were few converts. The missionary hit on a brilliant plan. There were some bucks on the reservation who had been at the Carlisle school, where they had studied singing. He organized a quartette. The bucks liked to show off their hymns. One of them had a yellow dog that always accompanied his master to church.

At first the Indians liked the singing. Then they grew tired of it. Even the choir lost its religion. It became a trio; then a duet; finally, the solo quit. A new missionary came into the field. One day he ascended the pulpit and looked around. The only sign of life in the pews was a yellow dog. Calling to the sexton, he said: "Put that dog out!"

"Excuse me," replied the sexton mildly; "I'd rather not. The fact is, he is the only convert."

Schools for authors—in which those so inclined may become real poets or novelists—is now proposed by Walter H. Page, editor of the World's Work. In an address delivered recently at the University of Chicago, he said:

"The colleges should add to their departments, post-graduate courses in the art of writing. Make the students write 1000 words a day, and insist on the professor doing likewise. Let the students keep it up for three or four years, by which time they will have written from twelve to sixteen volumes, and then, if they are good, admit them to the profession."

Some of Mr. Page's proposals for developing authors are as follows:

"Poet students to write a sonnet a day for a term.

"Prose students to write 1000 words a day.

"Professors to exercise their imagination in similar degree.

"One professor to every six or eight students.

"Students must have an A. B. or equivalent degree.

"Professors must be practical writers and not mere students."

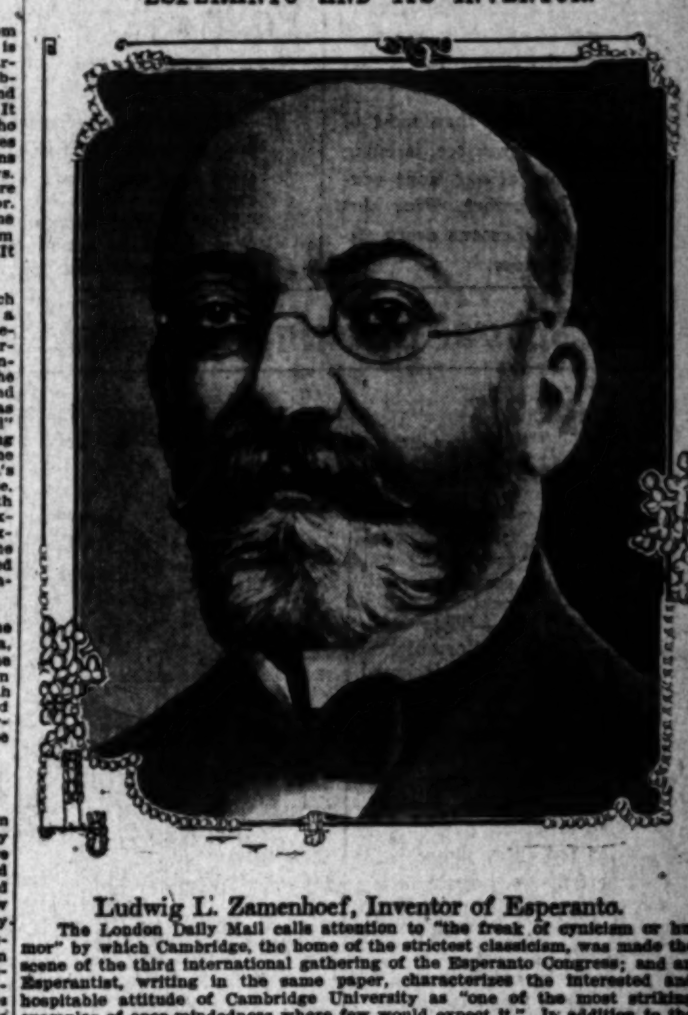
"Up to this time," continued Mr. Page, "writing has been a harum-scarum, rough and tumble business, with lyots of superstition and little training or experience. But we must follow the example of the other crafts. Let us have professional post-graduate schools to teach men and women how to write."

Horace Traubel, contributing to the Century an article entitled a "Daily Record of Conversations With Walt Whitman," writes the following recount of Whitman's remarks, which, to many, no doubt, will prove very suggestive of a certain Browning poem:

"I imagine I am most lacking in what is called definiteness, in so far as that applies to special theories of life and death. As I grow older I am more firmly than ever fixed in my belief that all things tend to good, that no bad is forever bad, that the universe has its own ends to subserve and will subserve them well. Beyond that, when it comes to launching out into mathematics—tying philosophy to the multiplication table—I am lost—lost utterly. Let them all whack away—I am satisfied; if they can explain, let them explain; if they can explain they can do more than I can do. I am an anarchist, not methodist, nor anything you can name. Yet I see why all the ists and isms and haters and dogmatists exist—can see why they must exist and why I must include all.

"I have often been accused of turning a deaf ear to that side of life—of being too unconcerned—of treating it as if it was not. Lately, as I have sat here thinking, it has come upon me that there must be some truth in the charge—that I should have studied that stratum of life more directly—seen what it signifies, what it starts from, what it means as a part of the social fabric. I have seen a lot of the rich-poor—of the people who have plenty yet have little—of the miseries of the well-to-do, who are supposed to be exempt from creature troubles. One of the painful facts in connection with this human misery—a fact insisted upon by the men who know most and who know what to do with their knowledge—is that the evil can not be remedied by any one change, one reform, or even half a dozen changes and reforms, but must be accomplished by countless forces working toward the one effect. Hygiene will help—oh, help much. But how will we get our hygiene? I am quite well aware that there are economic considerations, also, to be taken into account. It strikes me again, as it has always struck me, that the whole business finally comes back to the good body—not back to wealth, to poverty, but to the strong body—the sane, sufficient body."

ESPERANTO AND ITS INVENTOR.



Ludwig L. Zamenhoef, Inventor of Esperanto.

The London Daily Mail calls attention to "the freak of cynicism or humor" by which Cambridge, the home of the strictest classicism, was made the scene of the third international gathering of the Esperanto Congress; and an Esperantist, writing in the same paper, characterizes the interested and hospitable attitude of Cambridge University as "one of the most striking examples of open-mindedness where few would expect it." In addition to the ecclesiastical and academic courtesy extended to this twenty-year-old language, which aims to restore to mankind the easy intercourse of pre-Babel days, the congress enjoyed the municipal patronage of the town, the Mayor and Mayoress each addressing the opening meeting in unhesitating Esperanto.

CLOTH FROM WOOD.

Claim Made That Lumber Will Cut a Big Figure in the Textile Industries.

What promises to revolutionize textile industries is a new yarn now made of wood. The day is near, it is claimed, when fabrics of every description made of the new fiber will be as popular as those manufactured of cotton and woollen yarns.

The new material is made of cellulose substance cut into thin strips and spun by machinery. The product is not as elastic as that made of cotton and wool, but has the advantage of being stronger and more flexible.

Wood yarn can be turned out at much less expense than those now used and will submit to finer shades of coloring. Goods made of it can be laundered indefinitely without injuring the fabric or detracting from its appearance.

The new product costs but one-third that of the cheapest cotton yarn and can be employed in manufacturing all kinds of dress materials, suitings and carpets. Successful experiments have been made in these lines and also in making the finest laces and tapestries.

The manufacture of clothing from wood yarn is making rapid strides in Germany, and has already been introduced into this country. Those who have examined the garments report them equal in appearance and durability to cotton and woollen fabrics, also more hygienic.

The industry is yet in process of development and, in the opinion of manufacturers, promises decidedly to affect the output of other textiles.

American Girl Students in Paris.

The conditions which exist everywhere in Paris today where there are students have been fully recognized by the Anglo-Americans living there, and the necessity of helping girl students and also other compatriots struggling for existence in the French metropolis has roused their active interest. As a result, there have been established, from time to time, clubs, homes and rendezvous, where English-speaking girls are furnished accommodations which are as home-like as it is possible for them to be, and at rates which compare favorably with pension rates. To the girl who is well behaving and studiously inclined there is no longer the necessity of the studio life or the pension, unless she prefers that manner of living.

One of the oldest of these clubs, and the only one now in Paris which is strictly national, is the "American Girls' Club in Paris," which was established by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, who pays the rent of the house and also the expenses of the tearoom. It, as are also the others, is otherwise self-supporting. This home was at first intended only for the accommodation of art students, as it is in the neighborhood of the studios and art schools of the Latin quarter, but within recent years students of music and also those wishing to study French have been admitted. The requirements for entering any of these clubs are simple. One must give good references, be unmarried, and under forty. The prices range from twenty-five to thirty francs a week. Candles, fire in room and laundry are extra. Twenty-five dollars in France will go about as far as forty in America, so one need not feel that she is an object of charity in any way, but rather that she is at a small hotel where the other guests are unusually agreeable and refined. There are many comforts and an atmosphere of business and Americanism about these clubs which the girl will not find in a pension, and unless one is absolute master of the French language, or is possessed of unlimited funds, the best home and by far the most agreeable in every way for the lone girl student in Paris is one of these places which have been established for her.—[Harriet Quimby in Leslie's Weekly.

Common Sense in Home Luncheons.

When the mistress is alone for the mid-day meal the temptation to lunch on "scraps unadorned" or to content one self with bread and butter and tea is strong, and some women eat little or nothing from breakfast until the 6 o'clock dinner. This is all wrong, especially when the housekeeper is her own maid. In such case a tray takes but a few minutes to prepare, and is a real inducement to appetite when desire is lacking. For the lone eater, tripartite dishes are to be found. These are large round plates or platters, with sides an inch deep, and inner dividing partitions which separate the dish into three or more shallow compartments, each designed to hold a different portion of food. Thus a very good meal may be served on a single dish in neat fashion, and, if liked, with separate garnishings. The woman who is devoted to the chafing dish will find it a valuable accessory, especially in warm weather. The kitchen fire can be dispensed with, the table laid and all cold dishes put on, the chafing dish being relied upon for the service of one necessary hot dish. One word of caution must be added for those not thoroughly familiar with this table accessory. Should the flame die out for lack of fuel do not refill the little alcohol stove for several minutes; even then it is wisest to transfer the alcohol by means of a spoon rather than directly from the bottle.—[Cornelia C. Bedford in the September Circle.

NEW AUTO COATS; TAN AND GRAY cravenettes, and rubberized plaid silks. $15.00 to $49.00.

Commencing Monday, occurs the advance showing of exclusive autumn millinery modes—scores of distinct creations mirroring the smartest dictates of New York and Paris. Fashions from all great centers have been chosen with discriminating taste and many designs and new color effects of distinctive elegance are shown in the original conceptions of our own artistes. Prominent in the display are latest novelties in hand made silk, satin and moire hats, as well as many marvelously beautiful effects in French felt picture hats, new mushroom and popular Cavalier shapes. Wide diversity in color and trimmings—all authorized by style mandates—permits numberless charming models in the new shades of crocus, plum, violet, brown, beige, navy, green and other delightful autumn tones, richly embellished with feathers, plumes, flowers, ribbons and ornaments. In all respects these new creations exemplify that perfection in designing and making and the absolute correctness of all details in style which have so widely gained for our millinery the approval of fashionable women.

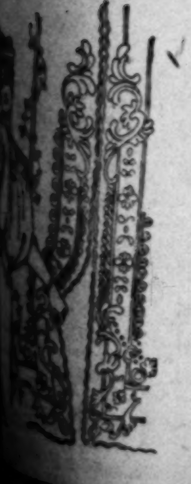
CLOSING OUT COMPLETELY

our entire stock of house furnishings, china, glass etc.



The opening of St. Vincent Place—the street connecting 6th and 7th, between Hill and Broadway—will cut off 25 feet from the rear of our building. The resultant loss of 3125 square feet of floor space on every floor is a matter so serious that most radical measures are necessary to insure the future welfare of this business. It will, of course, be impossible to devote to all departments the same amount of space they now occupy. In order to protect all other sections of this store, we have decided to close out at once our entire stocks of household and housefurnishing goods of every kind—rugs, draperies, curtains, bedding, china, crockery, glassware, lamps, kitchen utensils, etc. A closing out sale will be inaugurated Monday morning and will continue until every dollar's worth of such merchandise has been sold. It is hardly necessary to state that the opportunity for economical purchasing will be so remarkable that no woman or man can afford to pass or even delay in taking advantage of it. A few prices are quoted in this advertisement, chosen at random from hundreds, yes, thousands, of others that are equally reduced. Early purchasing is urged, for assortments will soon be broken and we advise every resident of Los Angeles and vicinity to fill every household need for years to come.

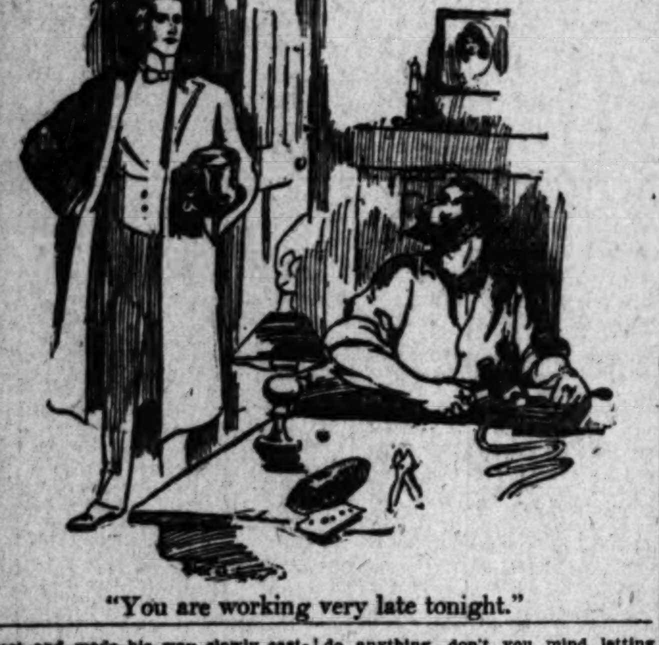
ALBAN REVISITS UNION STREET.

Alban escaped from the Sporting Club at a quarter to eleven, sick of its fetid atmosphere and wearied by its mock brutalities. He made no apologies for quitting Willy Forrest—for, truth to tell, that merry worthy was no longer capable of understanding them. Frequent calls for whisky and soda, added to a nice taste for champagne at dinner, left the captain in that maudlin condition in which a man is first cousin to all the world—at once garrulous and effusive and generally undesirable. Alban had, above all things, a contempt for a drunken man; and leaving Forrest to the care of others of his kind, he went out into the street and made his way slowly eastward.



"You are working very late tonight."

It was an odd thing to recall; but he had hardly set foot east of the Temple, he remembered, since the day when the bronze gates of Richard Gessner's house first closed upon him and the vision of wonderland burst upon his astonished eyes. The weeks had been those of unending kindness, of gifts showered abundantly, of promises for the future which might well overwhelm him by their generosity. Let him but consent to claim his rights, Gessner had said, and every ambition should be gratified. No other explanation than that of a lagging justice could he obtain—and no other had he come to desire. If he remained at Hampstead, the image of Anna Gessner, of a perfect womanhood as he imagined it, kept him to the house. He did not desire his patron's money; he began to discover how few were his wants and how small the satisfaction of their gratification could be. But the image he worshiped ever—and at its feet all other desires were forgotten.

And now reality had come with its sacrilegious hand, warring upon the vision and bidding him open his eyes and see. It was easy enough to estimate this adventurer, Willy Forrest, as his true worth, less easy to bind the wounds imagination had received and to set the image once more upon its ancient pedestal. Could he longer credit Anna with those qualities with which his veneration had endowed her? Must there not be heart searchings and rude questionings, the abandonment of the dream and the stern corrections of truth? He knew not what to think. A voice of reproach asked him if he also had not forgotten. The figure of little Lois Boriskoff stood by him in the shadows, and he feared to speak with her lest she should accuse him.

Let it be said in justice that he had written to Lois twice, and heard but lately that she had left Union street and gone, none knew whither. His determination to do his utmost for her and her father, to bid them share his prosperity and command him as they would, had been strong with him from the first and delayed only by the amazing circumstances of his inheritance. He did not understand even yet that he had the right to remain at "Five Gables," but this right had so often been insisted upon that he began at last to believe in its reality and to accept the situation as a chose jugée. And with the conviction, there came an intense longing to revisit the old scenes—who knows, it may have been but the promptings of a vanity, after all.

It was a great thing, indeed, to be walking there in the glare of the lamps and telling himself that fortune and a future awaited him, that the instrument of mighty deeds would be his inheritance, and that the years of his poverty were no more. How cringingly he had walked sometimes in the old days when want had shamed him and wealth looked down upon him with contempt. Tonight he might stare the boldest in the face, nurse fabulous desires and know that they would be gratified, peer through the barred windows of the shops and say all he saw was at his command. A sense of might and victory attended his steps. He understood what men mean when they say that money is power and that it rules the world.

He turned eastward, and walking with rapid strides made his way down the Strand and thence by Ludgate Circus to Aldgate and the mean streets he knew so well. It was nearly midnight when he arrived there, and yet he fell in with certain whom he knew and passed them by with a genial nod. His altered appearance, the black overcoat and the scarf which hid his dress clothes, called for many a "Gor blime" or "Strike me dead." Women caught his arm and wrestled with him, roughs tried to push him from the pavement and were amazed at his good humor. In Union street he first met little red-haired Chris Denham and asked of her the news. She shrank back from him as though afraid, and answered almost in a whisper.

"Lois gone—she went three weeks ago. I thought you'd hav know'd it—I thought you was sweet on her, Alban. And now you come here like that—what happened to you, whatever have you been doing of?"

He told her gaily that he had found new friends.

"But I haven't forgotten the old ones, Chris, and I'm coming down to see you all some day soon. How's your mother—what's she doing now?"

The girl shrugged her shoulders and the glance she turned upon him seemed to say that she would sooner speak on any other subject.

"What should she be doin'—what's any of us doin' but slave our bones off and break our hearts. You've come to see Lois' father, haven't you? Oh, yes, I know how much you want to talk about my mother. The old man's up there in the shop—I saw him as I came by."

Alban stood an instant irresolute. How much he would have liked to offer some assistance to this poor girl, to speak of real pecuniary help and friendship. But he knew the people too well. The utmost delicacy would be necessary.

"Well," he said, "I'm sorry things are not better, Chris. I've had a good Saturday night, you see, and if I can do anything, don't you mind letting me know. We'll talk of it when we have more time. I'm going on to see Boriskoff now, and I doubt that I'll find him out of bed."

She laughed a little wildly, still turning almost pathetic eyes upon him.

"Is it true that it's all off between you and Lois—all the court says it is. That's why she went away, they say—is it true, Alb, or are they telling lies? I can't believe it myself. You're not the sort to give a girl over—not one that's stood by you as well as Lois. Tell me it ain't true or I shall think the worse of you."

The question staggered him and he could not instantly answer it. Was it true or false? Did he really love little Lois and had he still an intention to marry her? Alban had never looked the situation straight in the face until this moment.

"I never tell secrets," he exclaimed a little lamely, and turning upon his heel, he shut his ears to the hard laugh which greeted him and went on, as a man in a dream, to old Boriskoff's garret. A lamp stood in the window there and the tap of a light hammer informed him that the indefatigable Pole was still at work. In truth, old Paul was bending copper tubing—for a firm which said that he had no equal at the task, and paid him a wage which would have been despised by a crossing sweeper.

Alban entered the garret quietly and was a little startled by the sharp exclamation which greeted him. He knew nothing, of course, of the part this crafty Pole had played or what his own change of circumstance owed to him. To Alban, Paul Boriskoff was just the same mad revolutionary as before—at once fanatic and dreamer and, before then, the father of Lois who had loved him. If the old fellow had no great welcome for the young Englishman tonight, let that be set down to his sense of neglect and, in some measure, to his daughter's absence.

"Good evening, Mr. Boriskoff; you are working very late tonight."

Alban stood irresolute at the door, watching the quick movements of the shaggy brows, and wondered what had happened to old Paul that he should be received so coolly. Had he known what was in the Pole's mind he would have as soon have jumped off London bridge as have braved the anger of one who judged him so mercilessly in that hour. For Boriskoff had heard the stories which Hampstead had to tell, and he had said: "He will ruin Lois's life and I have put the power to do so in his hands."

"The poor do not choose their hours, Alban Kennedy. Sit down, if you please, and talk to me. I have much to say to you."

He did not rise from his chair, but indicated a rude seat in the corner by the chimney and waited until his unwilling guest had taken it. Alban judged that his own altered appearance and his absence from Union street must be the cause of his displeasure. He could guess no other reason.

"Do you love my daughter, Alban Kennedy?"

"You know that I do, Paul. Have we not always been good friends? I came to tell you about a piece of great good fortune which has happened to me and to find out why Lois had not written to me. You see for yourself that there is a great change in me. One of the richest men in London considers that I have a claim to some of his money—through some distant relative, it appears—and I am living at his house almost as his own son."

"Is that why you forget your old friends so quickly?"

"I have never forgotten them. I wrote to Lois twice."

"Did you speak of marriage in your letters?"

The lad's face flushed crimson. He knew that he could not tell Paul Boriskoff the truth.

"I did not speak of marriage—why should I?" he exclaimed; "it was never your wish that we should speak of it until Lois is twenty-one. She will not be that for more than three years—why do you ask me the question tonight?"

"Because you have learned to love another woman."

A dead silence fell in the room. The old man continued to tap gently upon the coil of tube rapidly assuming a fantastic shape under the masterly touch of a trained hand. A candle flickered by him upon a crazy table where stood a crust of bread and a lump of coarse cheese. Not boastfully had he told Richard Gessner that he would accept nothing for himself. He was even poorer than he had been six weeks ago when he discovered that his old enemy was alive.

"You love another woman, Alban Kennedy, and you have wished to forget my daughter. Do not say that it is not the truth, for I read it upon your face. You should be ashamed to come here unless you can deny it. Fortune has been kind to you, but how have you rewarded those for whom she has nothing? I say that you have forgotten them—been ashamed of them as they have now the right to be ashamed of you."

He put his hammer down and looked the lad straight in the face. Upon Alban's part there was an intense desire to confess everything and to tell his old friend of all those distressing doubts and perplexities which had so harassed him since he went to Hampstead. If he could have done so, much would have been spared him in the time to come. But he found it impossible to open his heart to an alien—nor did he believe Paul Boriskoff capable of appreciating the emotions which now tortured him.

"I have never been ashamed of any of my friends," he exclaimed, hotly; "you know that it is not true, Paul Boriskoff. Where are the letters which I wrote to Lois? Why has she not answered them? If I had been ashamed, would they have been written? Cannot you understand that all which has happened to me has been very distracting? I have seen a new life—a new world, and it is not as our world. Perhaps there is no more happiness in it than in these courts and alleys where we have suffered so much. I cannot tell you truly. It is all too new to me, and naturally I feel incapable of judging it. When I came to you tonight it was to speak of our old friendship. Should I have done so if I had forgotten?"

Old Paul heard him with patience, but his anger none the less remained. The shaggy eyebrows were at rest now, but the eyes were never turned from Alban's face.

"You are in love with Anna Gessner," he said, quietly. "Why do you not tell Lois so?"

"I cannot tell her so—it would not be true. She will always be the same little Lois to me, and when she is 21 I will marry her."

"Ha—when she is 21. That seems a long time off to one who is your age. You will marry her you say—a promise to keep her quiet while you make love to this fine lady who befools you. No, Alban Kennedy, I shall not let Lois imagine any such thing, I shall tell her the truth. She will choose another husband—that is my wish and she will obey it."

"You are doing me a great injustice, Paul Boriskoff. I do not love Anna—perhaps for a moment I thought that I did, but I know now that I was deceiving myself. She is not one who is worthy of being loved. I believed her very different when first I went to Hampstead."

"Tell me no such thing. I am an old man, and I know men's hearts. What shall my daughter and her rags be to you, now that you have the fine clothes upon your back? You are as the others—you have knelt down at the shrine of money and there you worship. This woman in her fine clothes—she is your idol. All your past is forgotten immediately you see her. A great gulf is set between you and us. Think not that I do not know, for there are those who bring me the story every day. You worship Anna Gessner, but you live in a fool's paradise, for the father will forbid you to marry her. I say it and I know. Be honest and speak to my daughter as I have spoken to you tonight."

He raised his hammer as though he would resume his work, and Alban began to perceive how hopeless an argument would be with him while in such a mood. Not deficient in courage, the lad could not well defend himself from so direct an attack, and he had the honesty to admit as much.

"I shall tell Lois the truth," he said; "she will then judge and say whether you are right or wrong. I came here tonight to see if I could help you both. You know, Paul Boriskoff, how much I wish to do so. While I have money, it is yours also. Have not Lois and I always been as your children? You cannot forbid me to act as a son should, just because I have come into my inheritance. Let me find you a better home and take you away from this dismal place. Then I shall be doing right to worship money. Will you not let me do so? There is nothing in life half so good as helping those we love—I am sure of it already, and it is only five weeks since I came into my inheritance. Give me the right and let me still call you father."

Old aPul was much affected, but he would not let the lad see as much. Avoiding the question discreetly, but not unkindly, he muttered: "No, no, I need no help. I am an old man, and what happens to me does not matter." And then turning the subject swiftly, he asked: "Your patron, he has left England, has he not?"

"He has gone to Paris, I believe."

"Did he speak of the business that took him there?"

"He never speaks of business to me. He has asked me once or twice about the poor people down here and I have tried to tell him. Such a fortune as his could redeem thousands of lives, Paul. I have told him that when he spoke to me."

"Such a man will never redeem one life. All the money in the world will never buy him rest. He has eaten his harvest and the fields are bare. Did you mention my name to him?"

"I do not think that I have done so yet."

"Naturally, you would have been a little ashamed to speak of us. It is very rarely that one who becomes rich remembers those who were poor with him. His money only teaches him to judge them. Those who were formerly his friends are now spendthrifts, extravagant folk who should not be injured by assistance. The rich man makes their poverty an excuse for deserting them, and he cloaks his desertion beneath lofty moral sentiments. You are too young to do so, but the same spirit is already leading you. Beware of it, Alban Kennedy, for it will lead you to destruction."

Alban did not know how to argue with him. He resented the accusation hotly and yet could make no impression of resentment upon the imagined grievance which old Paul nursed almost affectionately. It were better, he thought, to hold his tongue and to let the old man continue.

"Your patron has gone to Paris, you say? Are you sure it is to Paris?"

"How could I be sure. I am telling you what was told to me. He is to be back in a few days' time. It is not to be expected that he would share his plans with me."

"Certainly not—he would tell you nothing. Do you know that he is a Pole, Alban?"

"A Pole? No. Indeed, he gives it out that he was born in Germany and is now a naturalized British subject."

"He would do so, but he is a Pole—and because he is a Pole he tells you that he has gone to Paris when the truth is that he is at Berlin all the time."

"But why should he wish to deceive me, Paul—what am I to him?"

"You are one necessary to his salvation—perhaps it is by you alone that he will live. I could see when I first spoke to you how much you were astonished that I knew anything about it, but remember, every Pole in London knows all about his fellow-countrymen, and so it is very natural that I know something of Richard Gessner. You who live in his house can tell me more. See what a gossip I am where my own people are concerned. You have been living in this man's house and you can tell me all about it—his tastes, his books, his friends. There would be many friends coming, of course?"

WOMAN, THEN SOVEREIGN.

QUEEN LIKES FAIRY STORIES.

Alexandra as She Is Known to Family and Friends.

Royal Lady Has Experienced Many Keen Sorrows.

Her General Characteristics. Favorite Pursuit.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 2.—"The hearth," says an ancient East Indian proverb, "is not a stone, but a woman." So Queen Alexandra, consort of King Edward VII, is lovingly described by her people as the "hearth" of the nation. Her strongest characteristics are intensely feminine—love of home, of her children, and of the homely duties which make up every good woman's life. The British and Danish boast alike that for forty-five years she has dwelt beneath the fierce light which beats upon a throne, and that not a breath of scandal has sullied her fair name nor an unworthy act ever been laid to her charge.

As Queen and Princess of Wales, she has been content to play the minor role assigned by the British constitution. She wears the crown and ermine robes most gracefully, but the desire to take a part in the great world of affairs, to become a political or intellectual force in the royal circle seems foreign to her nature, which explains, perhaps, to an alien, why Queen Alexandra is the most popular Queen Consort, since times antedating the Stuarts Yet Queen Alexandra is in every sense adequate to the demands of her exalted station. She is a beautiful woman now, when she is nearing 60, and so youthful it seems incredible that she has seen more than forty years of matrimony, and that she has almost a dozen sturdy grandchildren.

ALWAYS WELL GOWNED.

She is accounted one of the well-gowned women of the kingdom, and her hats and apparel are as anxiously studied by the inhabitants of Mayfair as are the fashion plates from Rue de la Paix. She is a fine water-color artist, and as a photographer her work is noted throughout Europe. Again and again, she has taken all the first prizes at amateur photograph contests. Her nom de plume in presenting her water colors and photographs is "Bernstorff," after her beloved Danish home, and all the Bernstorff pictures are now anxiously sought in every collection. She is a musician of the widest culture, and of fair attainments, and in the domain of letters she has essayed a part, and that with creditable success. Of her social accomplishments, her grace and tact, her sincerity and kindness of heart, combined with dignity and urbanity, all the world knows.

But the Queen, when she lays aside the trappings of state—when she moves among her intimates in Buckingham Palace or the poor at Sandringham, when she attends her flowers and walks with her dogs or goes for long horse rides along the shores of her Yorkshire home—that is the Queen whom the British care for most, and talk of most. Imagine a Queen, whose childhood was imbued with old Viking tales, who lived the free, easy life of the impecunious, though princely, in the old Copenhagen palace, and who talked with that prince of fairy tales, Hans Andersen, face to face. Of all the honors that have come to Queen Alexandra, she seems to prize most that she knew Hans Andersen, and that he came often to the nursery to read his last tale. He presented her with an especially fine edition of "The Ugly Duckling" as a reward for a clever interpretation of one of his stories. The well-thumbed edition of the fairy tales, with the author's signature, which the Queen, then known as "Alix," used all through her childhood, was used by her children, and is now resting in honorable retirement in a special cabinet in Sandringham library, and is read only on occasions to the grandchildren.

LOVES FAIRY TALES.

A Queen who loves fairy tales and still delights in Hans Andersen and holds him in higher esteem than all later claimants for honors in fairy lore cannot fail to be a most attractive person. Her private apartments at Buckingham Palace give an excellent index of her character. All the great, massive furniture was removed, together with ponderous marble and bronze historic statues, to make room for the lighter and more ornate accessories which she had used in Marlborough House since coming to England. The Queen objects to changing styles, and having a very sentimental turn to her nature, her possessions have not always the artistic virtue. A big rag doll occupies an important position in her boudoir, blackened with age and most unroyally threadbare as to garments. Some of the haughty British peeresses have sneered at this unique adornment in a conspicuous gilt chair, and have suggested that the Queen is growing childish. But the Queen is little concerned. The doll was first used by her dead son, the Duke of Clarence, and after him by the present Prince of Wales, the Duchess of Fife, the Queen of Norway, and by Princess Victoria. In the library of the Queen's suite many sentimental tokens greet the eye. Indeed, the entire suite teems with "memories too deep for tears," and of dear, departed days.

The Queen, whose face in repose is one of the saddest conceivable, a veritable Mater Dolorosa, keeps her griefs very near her. It is said her greatest crosses have come as a wife, and, as a wife, she has borne them. But surely there must have been much sweetness in the years to judge by the tender tokens one sees in her sitting-room. She first met the Prince of Wales when she was ten years old, at a little party which Queen Victoria gave the princess royal, afterward Empress of Germany, in Buckingham Palace.

HER FIRST MEETING WITH KING EDWARD.

Princess Alix was visiting Princess Mary of Cambridge, mother of her present daughter-in-law, Princess May, and the heir of England and the demure little Danish girls exchanged smiles and stood up in a dance together. Princess Alix, as she was then, adorns the walls of Queen Alix's sitting room in a solid gold frame (the gift of her husband,) and in one side the hair of the two children twined in a true lover's knot, with the date of their meeting written in ink that is almost faded. Then there is an article of furniture designed by the King for his wife during her invalid days, and which shows him of substantial talents not attributed by his contemporaries. It is a combination sofa, writing desk, and bookcase, and if Edward VII. were commercially inclined he could make a fortune of patenting the same. The sofa, very wide and soft, with excellent springs, is covered with soft mauve brocade. The bookcase is at one end and swings over the sofa so that the invalid could arrange her treasures while lying at ease. The desk also swings round from the other end, and even reclining it is possible to rest paper so as to write in comfort. In this desk and bookcases are many sacred treasures of the Queen—some of her early home in sea-washed Bernstorff—her first primer, her first prayer book, and the letter written her mother and her mother to her during her first journeying forth into the world. There are the first copy books of her children, their first Christmas and birthday letters, their first little shoes, and all those things which mothers, in all times and all countries, have cherished.

Alexandra,

England's beautiful Queen, who has known many sorrows.

TOYS OF THE DEAD DUKE.

These belonging to the Duke of Clarence are naturally the dearest. Many of his toys are placed in cabinets in the various rooms, and his first and last letters to his mother are in the sacred book, which she reads every day. In this testament also are the exquisite words used in the funeral oration, "For him, whose memory you will sacredly cherish—until you meet him again—think of him, as the young soldier, whose warfare is ended—the young racer who has reached his goal—the young heir who has entered into his inheritance, the youngest King who has gone up to his coronation." It is said by those who know the Queen that she has read these words until the balm has entered the wound and she feels some joy in life. Yet none deny that she has not been the same since her first born was taken away. She has never danced nor allowed a ball to be given in Sandringham where he died, and her participation in the court life seems a sad mechanic duty.

But apart from these sorrowful tokens, the Queen's rooms in Buckingham are sunny and cheerful. They are filled with growing things and living things. Palms, flowering shrubs, even dwarf rose bushes fill every room. She is not partial to cut flowers, so her windows are brave in growing pinks, amaryllus, and bulbous plants. She has birds, but not in cages. Doves, canaries, parrots and cockatoos, and bull finches are kept in an adjoining aviary, and are allowed to disport themselves in the royal boudoir during good behavior. The Queen's love of dogs is well known. Dogs inhabit every room. Her great wolf hound, "Alex," is more of a monarch than Edward VII, and he possesses more medals than a Bakalava hero. The reigning favorite of the Queen at the present juncture is a small Japanese spaniel, "Billie," which resmbles the famous "Manchu" that Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth has brought into the limelight. Punchy is black with white markings and has a pedigree which makes the British royal house look snobbish indeed. Another favorite lap dog is a quaint little Chinese terrier.

CARRIES TREASURES WITH HER.

A peculiarity of the Queen's is that wherever she goes, all her particular treasures must go also. The boxes containing her pictures, even those in massive frames; her toilet silver and china, her bric-a-brac and favorite books, her various cameras, and sketch-books, her artist material, even bed covering, rugs and drapings, sometimes mount to the hundreds. Even when she spends a couple of days, the week-end at a country house, she insists in having the familiar articles in her bedroom and boudoir. She is far more concerned about these things than about the boxes containing her gowns and jewels.

At Sandringham, the fine, Yorkshire estate of the King, Queen Alexandra passes her happiest days. Here much of the tedium of royalty is relaxed, and she lives the simple, homely life of her early childhood. Sandringham is especially dear to the Queen, because she is still a loyal Dane, and the point of land just off Sandringham is nearest to the old fatherland. She is still the sea king's daughter, and her love of the sea has been inherited by all her children.

The present hall was built in 1870, and it stands quite near the old mansion, which the Prince and Princess of Wales first inhabited. Over 300 acres is comprised in the park, and in the early autumn, when "their majesties" are still hunting in Scotland or making the round of state visits, strangers are permitted to roam through the park, and to inspect the Queen's dairy and stables. It is well worth a run up into Yorkshire, for the country is one of the loveliest and the park, with its great girthed elms, well-proportioned sycamores and giant oaks, is just beginnng to show a touch of gold and crimson, and the fields are purple wth heather and golden with gorse.

WILD GARDEN A JOY.

The Queen is the monarch at Sandringham, and she is determined that the cares of state shall not intrude there. She has planned every inch of the ten-acre garden, and she has herself planted many of the ornamental trees and shrubs. Her wild garden, far down in the woods, winds in secluded walks and is her special joy. Woe to the gardener who ruthlessly destroys one of these humble blossoms. Here flourish the blue bell, the pimpernel, violets, primroses, forget-me-nots, buttercups, and daisies, flowering nettle. Even flowering weeds are undisturbed.

The Queen does not care for tennis, and last year she had the court planted in roses, and it is now abloom with ten hundred varieties of that most regal of flowers. She is very fond of croquet and she plays daily with her two grand daughters, Princesses Victoria and Alexandrine, children of the Duchess of Fife, when these young girls are paying their quarterly visit. So expert is Alexandra with the mallet that the youngsters account it a red letter day when they beat "granny." Ten acres is given to a kitchen garden, and not only does it supply Sandringham, but many of the royal pensioners get luxuries on the great holidays, her birthday and the King's, Christmas and New Years. The Queen maintains a technical school for girls and the King for boys, just outside the park, and she provides everything for the pupils.

The dairy and the Queen's tearoom which adjoin each other, are little gems of luxury and utility combined. The dairy is fitted up with solid silver pans lined with pale pink porcelain, and the churns are of marble with silver trimmings. In the tearoom are some exquisite souvenirs of her travels, while all her dead horses and dogs modeled in marble, bronze, or silver, occupy conspicuous places along the dado.

STILL RIDES A GREAT DEAL.

Silver trimmings and white tile stalls are the home of the horses. The Queen no longer hunts, but she is an indefatigable rider. Her present saddle horse is a pretty brown mare, "Violet." She wears a brown riding habit of the same shade as her horse. Fluffy and Mite are two spirited brown mares which the Queen drives tandem, and Bena, Bean and Bede are perfectly matched browns which she drives in pairs in a landau. All the traps and harnesses of the Queen are of tan leather, with fire-gilt trimmings. very simple and unadorned with insignia. She is devoted to horses with long tails, and if she takes a fancy to a horse of meager hirsute adornments she supplements nature with art and has an artificial tail attached to the harness. Dozens of dogs follow luxurious lines in the Queen's kennels—in houses of carved oak with brass ornaments.

Every Sunday afternoon the Queen and her granddaughters visit all the pets, horses, dogs, chickens, doves and cattle. The doves, now numbering thousands, are the progeny of a pair presented to her on her first visit to Iceland, nearly forty years ago. At Sandringham Hall the Duke of Clarence died, and just under a window on the outer wall a brass tablet records the date of his birth and death. His room is just as he used it, and no one is allowed to enter but his mother.

A FAMILIAR FIGURE.

With her camera and sketchbook, in a walking skirt of rough tweed, and an Alpine hat, the Queen is as familiar along the York roads leading to Lynn and to the sea as the village postman. She knows all the people of her neighborhood, and shares their joys and sorrows freely and with utter disregard to the conventions which hedge a Queen. When the cottagers are sick she walks across the park with fruit, flowers or vegetables, carried by a maid, and sits with the afflicted as soon as her other engagements permit. For the past two years her health has been growing fragile. She is lamer than usual, and is now almost totally deaf. But she finds true content in her country home, and she shows an inclination to remain there longer and longer, and to allow the Prince and Princess of Wales to preside over the state levees.

Unobtrusive as she is personally, Queen Alexandra's grace, beauty and womanly virtues are recorded while the English language survives in the masterly sketches which Dickens and Thackeray wrote of her nuptials. One of the grandest odes of Alfred Tennyson was dedicated to her, and Jenny Lind composed and sang a marvelous bridal song in St. George's, Windsor, on the day of her wedding.

LILY MILK

PURER than ordinary milk—more wholesome and delicious. Perfect in food properties, retaining all the virtues of the original pure dairy milk without the danger of infection and uncleanliness.

Lily Milk costs less than ordinary milk because it never spoils, and there is never any waste. It is also more convenient—any quantity may be kept on hand for emergencies, too. To try Lily Milk once is to discard ordinary milk, with its doubtful cleanliness and purity.

A sculptor takes a block of formless stone and produces the "counterfeit presentment" of a hero or a god so noble that you expect to see him draw his sword in defense of his country, or to hurl the thunderbolt from his mighty hand.

The potter takes a lump of clay, mud in fact, and turns it on his wheel until he has a vase whose graceful shape charms the eye. He daubs some colors on it and puts it in a furnace until the rainbow is not more brilliant than the figures that decorate its sides.

A mechanic may take a piece of crude iron ore and convert it into spikes. He may take a bit of brass and form from it a rod to hang a curtain from. The artist takes these and melting them runs the molten mass into a mold and lo! when it comes out he has a figure or a group so precious that his work is handed down from generation to generation, is placed in a gallery and people cross seas to look at it.

The school teachers of America are doing work more lasting, more beautiful, more important than the artists. They see the lessons learned and the mental powers developed, but that really is only a side issue in the schools. As the painter sees the landscape or the sea in the colors on his palette, as the sculptor sees the angels or the hero in the rough mass of stone, as the potter sees the vase of symmetrical form and brilliant hues in the lump of clay, the true teacher sees the wife, the mother, the soldier, the statesman, the reformer, the patriot, in each little tot in the kindergarten, and in each young man and woman in the high school.

A knowledge of arithmetic is useful. Physiology helps a man to "know himself" and to take care of his health. By applied mathematics he may learn a means of earning his living. A severe course of study sharpens the wits, develops the mental powers and fits us better for the battle of life. A citizenship of high intelligence is one of the foundation stones on which a government of the people must rest. But the great work of the home and the school is character building. Tact is more important in life than talent. The tactful person of small mental acquirements will succeed where the genius without tact will fail. Truthfulness is a better asset in life than "smartness." What avails the highest intelligence, the most liberal education, the most varied and exact knowledge, without honesty? To the republic, what is a man worth, no matter what his erudition, "who never to himself hath said, 'This is my own, my native land?'" Alcibiades was the most brilliant man in Athens. He was selfishly ambitious and a menace to the state. The world has produced many men greater intellectually than Washington, but none who served his country more devotedly and none who stands higher after a century in the esteem of mankind.

The sculptor chips bit after bit from the block of marble until "the Moses" stands revealed. The teacher corrects one bad habit now and another tomorrow. As Michael Angelo wrought his Moses, so the teacher works out a character. How artistic the eye, how steady the hand, how nice the touches that bring forth the statue. But the rock is inanimate, and, rigid though it is, it presents fewer difficulties than the budding soul of childhood and the opening flowers of the human character. A false blow to the marble may be effaced and the symmetry restored. But, "thou cunningest pattern of excelling nature," the developing process of the human character, once mar that and no after care will ever quite restore the man or the woman to what might have been but for that one mistaken touch.

SUNSET.

Sinking down the western silence in a sea of amber down,
Flashing radiant lances upward where the gray bat night has flown;
Like a garden blushing sweetness in the soft embracing air;
Like the mellow-voiced completeness of a maiden young and fair;
Like the tone that stills the organ when a fervent prayer is said;
Like the sound of lapping waters in the lonesome ocean's bed;
Like the sweep of Sorrow's fingers o'er a harp of beaten gold;
Like a shepherd moving homeward when the sheep are in the fold.
Slowly, slowly down the silence moves the olden, golden sun,
Trekking through the trackless reaches till Hesperides is won.

T. HOWARD WILSON.

SUFFERER AND SCOFFER.

One who was sore beset cried out to God,
One who had never suffered scoffed, and said
"Cry to the air! Cry to the parchéd sod!
Cry to the man just laid among the dead!
The air, the withering grass, the corpse can hear,
As well as any God whom man doth fear."

The sufferer raised his eyes, and calmly said:
"O Pain, I greet thee, if God bids thee stay.
I thought thee terrible, a presence dread,
But he who loses Faith's last lingering ray
Wanders through Desolation's waste domain
Hand-clasped with one more terrible than Pain!"

PRACTICAL ETHICS.

THE DOMESTIC HEART.

AGAIN and again is the lie given to those who boldly and clamorously assert that women who take a larger interest in life than that bounded by their own hearth soon lose the heart of domesticity. A vast number of living, palpable examples to the contrary refute the allegation that an active, purposeful public career, whether in the greater affairs of the world, in business, science, art, or philanthropy, necessarily unfits and disinclines women to take up the further burden of home-making.

It is interesting to note that most women prominently identified with important movements for public betterment, both in this country and in many countries of Europe, in fact, the larger proportion of women who are earnestly and conscientiously engaged in a public calling, have, notwithstanding their outside, official, or professional duties, a strong domestic heart that leans tenderly and lovingly to all the dainty sweetness and unexceled joys of a real home.

How many of the lustrous stars who still grace the lyric and dramatic stage of the world today, how many women teachers, writers, lecturers and reformers, although they seem to live entirely in the public eye, and to thrive solely on public applause—how many such women, were their inner experiences plainly visible and their most secret sentiments spelled aloud, we would find carrying within them a heart most delicately tuned and exquisitely responsive to all the choice charms and refinements of the private home circle?

Indeed, it is just such women as these that do not frivolously flee from home, but who are forced out into the world by their dominant genius. It is the women most maligned for the conspicuous places which they occupy, who do not leave home so much to get as to give esthetic enjoyment, instruction, or to lend the coöperating hand of the social self to a world ever needing staunch and enthusiastic support, or talented and progress-making leaders from every field of human activity. Hence it is the women drawn away from home by a power superior to petty personal desire who have a far higher and nobler appreciation of home, with all that that much-abused term rightly entails, and who likewise show forth much greater aptitude and ability during the intervals left them for home-making, than many so-called "domestic women," whose chief claim to domesticity is often nothing more than a want of identification with any worthy or commendable social activity outside their house.

In one of William Ellery Channing's memorable addresses he says that the ground of a man's culture is not in what he does, but in the man's nature. And the same may be said of the domesticity of women. There are women, all too many of them today, without appreciable talent for anything else, who yet lack all or most of the qualifications and training essential to a sound, sensible, or ideal home-maker. They undertake the daily routine of ordinary duties without inner vision. In household service they see nothing more than a miserable treadmill of wearying drudgery, the details of which they either shirk without compunction or, where circumstances permit, relegate to others the entire domestic business with both its agreeable and its disagreeable tasks.

Yet there are certain needed personal touches and attentions productive of genial comfort and pure domestic joy which call for the intimate expression of a loving domestic heart, which expression no one can be hired to give!

It is well to remember that the best educated and most influential women of our time, with the women of liberal culture and wide public influence in the past, have always taken and are taking a serious life-interest in their share of domestic responsibility. Among the dames of the oldest aristocracy and the crowned womanly heads of Europe it is deemed essential to the perfect equipment of her ladyship's rule, and to the more energetic, practical and complete reign of the Queen of Court that they have a personal sense of domestic obligation, hence an intelligent and practical familiarity with the problems and solutions of domestic difficulty.

No, it is an old, fond delusion, to be relegated to the outworn and outgrown stock of old wives' fables, that women of high mentality, directed to public pursuits, are necessarily averse to bringing their superior powers of heart and intellect into the common affairs of everyday life, or that by reason of their broad interest in the outside world their interest in the home is diminished to the extent of divesting them of the domestic heart!

Aye, many a prima donna or "leading woman" may yet make a more devoted wife and mother despite her enforced absence from home during her season's touring, than the much-exalted woman in private life whose domestic virtues consist largely in spending her days in fashionable idleness; at cards, pink and blue teas, or at most in make-believe club performances. If, perhaps, on the whole, a fair estimate were to be made of the actual service and companionship to the members of each of the respective families, we might find in arrears, not the woman whose profession takes her periodically abroad, but the woman who is constantly "abroad," though conventionally reputed to be at home!

Let us then get rid of this ancient shibboleth that a broad outlook upon life, a rounded education and a public career unmake woman. For one with an innate love of home and home-building, with natural domestic tastes and affections, wherever she may be, or however occupied, will never lose the chief charm and treasure of her being—the domestic heart.

Education in Egypt. By Frank G. Carpenter.

NINE THOUSAND STUDENTS.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST MOHAMMEDAN UNIVERSITY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CAIRO (Egypt.)—I have just returned from a visit to the biggest university of the Mohammedan world. It has more students than any of our colleges, and twice as many as either Harvard, Yale or Cornell. It has, all told, over 9000, and its professors number 240. Its students come from every country where Mohammedans flourish. There are hundreds here from India, and some from Malaysia and Java. There is a large number from Morocco and also from Algeria, Tunisia and Tripoli. There are Nubians as black as your hat, Syrians and Turks as yellow as rich Jersey cream, and boys from Southeastern Europe with faces as fair as our own. There are long-gowned, turbaned Persians, fierce-eyed Afghanistans and brown-skinned men from the Sudan and from about Kuka, Bornu and Timbuktu. The students are of all ages from 15 to 75, and some have spent their lives in the college.

This university has been in existence for almost a thousand years. It was founded A.D. 988, and from that time to this it has been educating the followers of the Prophet. It is today perhaps the strongest force among these people in Egypt. Ninety-two per cent. of the inhabitants of the Nile Valley are Mohammedans, and the most of the native officials have been educated here. There are at least 35,000 men in the public service among its graduates, and the judges of the villages, the teachers in the mosque schools, and the Imans or priests who serve throughout Egypt, are connected with it. They hold the university in the highest regard, and an order from its professors would be as much, if not more, respected than one from the khedivial government.

The education in this university is almost altogether Mohammedan. Its curriculum is about the same as it was a thousand years ago, and the chief studies are the Koran and Koranic law, together with the sacred traditions of the religion and perhaps a little grammar, prosody and rhetoric. Within the past few years there have been attempts to extend its sphere, and it now has thirteen government professors, but their teaching is done outside the university itself. A number of the professors are also teaching in the government schools connected with the mosques of the Egyptian villages, but even there the Koran takes up half the time, and religion is far more important than science.

How the Egyptians Study Their Bible.

Indeed it is wonderful how much time these Egyptians spend on their Bible. The Koran is their primer, their first and second reader and also their college text-book. As soon as a baby is born, the call to prayer is shouted in its ear, and when it begins to speak, its father first teaches it to say the creed, which runs somewhat as follows:

"There is no God but God; Mohammed is the Apostle of God," and also, "Wherefore exalted be God, the King, the truth! There is no God but He! The Lord of the glorious Throne!"

When the boy reaches 5 or 6 he starts to the mosque school, and there squats down, cross-legged, and sways to and fro as he yells aloud the texts of the Koran. He studies the alphabet by writing with a black brush texts on a slate of wood or tin, and he pounds away from year to year committing the Koran to memory. There are now more than 200,000 pupils in the Egyptian schools, of whom a majority are under 13 years of age. By a recent census it was found that over 50,000 of these boys could recite a good part of the Mohammedan Bible, and that 4500 had memorized the whole from beginning to end. Another 4500 were able to recite one-half of it from memory, while 3800 could correctly give three-fourths of it. When it is remembered that the Koran contains 114 divisions and in the neighborhood of 80,000 words, it will be seen what this means. I venture that there are not 4000 children in the United States who can reel off the New Testament without looking at the book, and that with our vast population we have not 50,000 boys who can recite even one book of our Bible from memory and not mispronounce a word.

The Mohammedans revere their Bible quite as much as we do ours. While it is being read they will not allow it to lie upon the floor, and no one may read or touch it without first washing himself. It is written in Arabic, and its style is considered a model. They believe that it was revealed by God to Mohammed, and that it is eternal. It was not written at the first, but was entirely committed to memory, and it is in that way that it is still taught to a large extent. I understand that the present Khedive can recite the most of it. During my interview with his father, Tewfik Pasha, he told me that he could begin at the back and by memory alone recite the Koran clear to the front. The better classes of Mohammedans have beautiful copies of this book. They have some bound in gold with the texts illuminated, and the university here has a collection of fine editions which is looked upon as one of its greatest treasures.

Nine Thousand Bald Heads.

This famous Mohammedan university is situated in the heart of business Cairo. When I rode to it today on my donkey I passed through a mile or so of covered bazaars, thronged with turbaned men and veiled women and walled with shops in which long-gowned Egyptians were selling goods and plying their trades. The university is known as the Mosque of El-Azhar, which is one of the oldest mosques of Cairo. It covers several acres and the streets about it are largely taken up with industries connected with the university. One of the bazaars is devoted to bookselling and bookbinding and another to head dressing. Every Mohammedan has his head shaved several times a week, and in this college there are 9000 bald-headed students. The scholar who would appear here with our ordinary college football cut would not be admitted. The students wear turbans of white, black or green, and there [illegible] them except on the top of the crown, [illegible] may be left that the owner may [illegible] pulled into heaven.

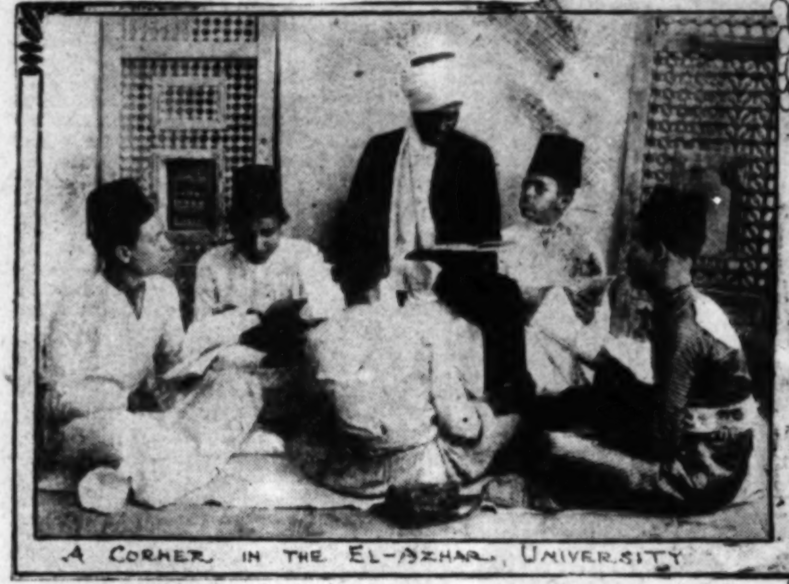
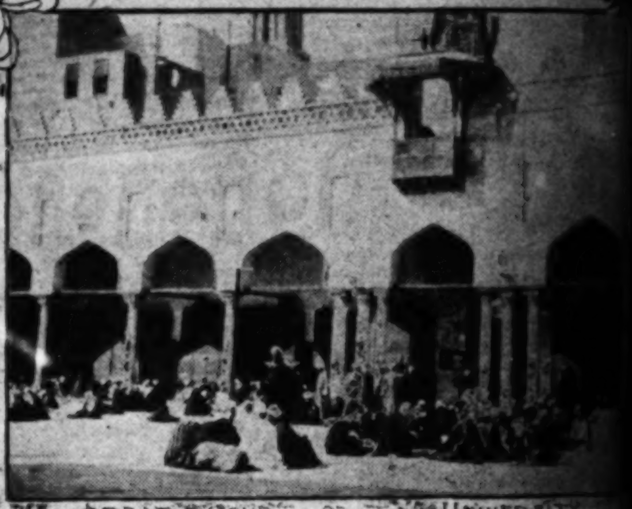
STUDENTS



A CORNER IN THE EL-AZHAR UNIVERSITY



GREAT COURT OF THE UNIVERSITY

I spent some time in this university, going from hall to hall and making notes. In one section I found a class of [illegible] boys who were learning the Koran, and I am told they are more fanatical than any of the others. In another place I saw forty Persians listening to a professor. They were sitting on the ground, and the professor himself sat flat on the floor with his bare feet curled up under him. I could see his yellow toes peeking out of his black gown. He was lecturing on theology and the students were attentive.

[illegible] near by was taking down the notes of a lesson. Each had a sheet of tin, which looked as though it might have been cut from an oil can, and he wrote upon this in ink with a reed style. The letters were in Arabic, and I could not tell what they meant.

I looked about me in vain for school furniture such as we have at home. There was not a chair nor a table in the halls; there were no maps nor diagrams and no scientific instruments. There were no libraries visible, and the books used were mostly pamphlets.

They Sleep in the School-rooms.

There is no charge for tuition, and the poor and the rich are on much the same level. Many of the undergraduates are partially supported by the university, and it is no disgrace to be without money. Some of the students and professors live in the university. They sleep in the schoolrooms, where they study or teach, lying down upon the mats and covering themselves with their blankets. They eat there, and there are peddlers who bring in food and sell it to them. Their diet is plain, consisting of bean soup and a cake of pounded grain, together with a little garlic or dates, forming the most common meal. Such food costs but little, but to those who are unable to buy. The university gives food, 900 loaves of bread being supplied without charge to needy students every day.

As I passed through the halls I saw some of the boys washing their clothes, and others spreading their wash out in the sun to dry. They did not seem ashamed of their poverty, and I saw much to admire.

The professors serve for nothing, and support themselves by teaching in private houses or by reading the Koran at the mosques. It is considered a great honor to be a professor here; and the most learned men of the Mohammedan world are glad to lecture in the El-Azhar without reward. In fact, the only man about the institution who receives a salary is the president, who gets [illegible] piasters a year. This seems much until one learns that the piaster is only 5 cents, and that it takes [illegible] of them to make $500.

[illegible] as to the government of the university, and [illegible] it had a principal and under professors. All the students are under the direct control of the university, and if they misbehave outside its walls the police hand them over to the collegiate authorities for punishment. The students are exempt from military service, and it is said that many enter the institution for that reason. There seem to be no limitations as to age nor as to the time one may spend at the college. I saw boys of 6 and 8 studying the Koran in one corner of a building, and gray-bearded men sitting around a professor in another. The most of the scholars, however, are from 16 to 22 or of about the same age as our college students at home.

[illegible] in Egypt.

The university has but little to do with the great movement of modern education which is now going on in Egypt. It is rather religious than educational, and the active educational forces outside it are two. One of these is the United Presbyterian Church and its mission school, of which I will write later, when I visit its college at Assiout, about 300 miles farther up the Nile valley, and the other is the government, directed by the British, who are collecting the taxes and administering all matters of importance in Egypt today. In addition to these there are about 1000 schools supported by the Copts, who, by the way, are the most intelligent of the native population.

Egypt was very illiterate when the British took hold of the administration, and even now not more than 6 or [illegible] of the natives can read and write. The desire for learning is increasing, however, and the system of modern schools which has been inaugurated is being developed. There are now over 10,000 schools in the country, with something like 20,000 teachers and [illegible] pupils. There are a number of private schools, several normal schools and also schools devoted to industrial training. In the last few years a system of technical education has been inaugurated, and the government now has model workshops at Boulac and [illegible]. It has a school of agriculture here at Cairo, a school of engineering and schools of law and medicine.

[illegible] Schools.

An important movement has been the introduction of modern studies into the village schools belonging to the Mohammedans. These were formerly, and are to some extent now under the University of El-Azhar. They were connected with the mosques and were taught by Mohammedan priests. They were supported by the [illegible], and also by a Mohammedan religious institution known as the Wakf, which has an enormous endowment. There are something like 10,000 of these schools here and there over the lower part of the Nile Valley, and they had an attendance of something like [illegible]. They taught little more than the Arabic language, the Koran, and reading, writing and arithmetic. Lord Cromer wanted to bring these schools under the Ministry of Public Instruction and introduce modern studies. He tried to force the teachers to [illegible], but they refused. He then offered to give every mosque school that would come in an appropriation of [illegible] for every boy and 75 cents for every girl, and this has apparently solved the problem. The [illegible] are rapidly adopting modern methods. [illegible] of them are subject to the government, and within a short time they will all be under the immediate direction of its educational department. At present it is necessary to handle them carefully and to make the religious studies among the most important. Now the half of each school day is set apart for the study of the Koran and the precepts of Islam, and I am told that such of the Mohammedan scholars as do well are more likely to get appointments under the government than if they were Christians or Copts

Female Education.

The girls of Egypt are beginning to go to school. For a long time it was hard to persuade their parents to send them either to the government schools or private schools, but of late some of the native educated women have been given places as teachers, and many girls are now preparing themselves for school work. Other parents are sending their daughters to school to give them a good general education, as the educated boys want educated women for wives. There are at present something like 2000 schools, with an attendance of over 13,000 girl pupils. A movement is now going on to establish village schools for girls, and the time will come when there will be girls' schools all over Egypt and the Mohammedan women may become educated.

Benevolent Egyptians.

We are apt to think that the only kind of charity is Christian charity. I find that there is Mohammedan charity as well, and that many of the richer Moslems give money toward education and other such things. I have spoken of the endowment of the El-Azhar University, which is almost entirely of this nature. Some of the village schools are aided by native charity, as are also some high schools. In 1903 Mahmoud Suleiman constructed, at his own cost, and endowed liberally, at Abou-Tig an industrial school in which are taught weaving, carpentry, blacksmithing and turning. That school has now ninety-two pupils, all of whom are receiving their training free of charge. The Khedive has an industrial school with 200 pupils on his private estates, and there is a Mohammedan benevolent society at Alexandria which has raised $50,000 for an industrial school there. That school will accommodate over 500 pupils, and it has now an endowment of about $4000 per year. One of the princes of the Khedive's family is starting a similar school in the Behera provinces, and the towns of Fayoum and Beni-Suef are raising money for industrial schools. There is also talk of a national university along modern lines, to be supported by the government. This is favored by many of the leading Egyptians, and Lord Cromer has advocated it in his report of this year. It is stated that this university will be absolutely scientific and literary, and that its doors will be wide open to all desirous of learning, irrespective of their origin or religion.

Snow In August.

MUSINGS OF A MOUNTAIN-CLIMBER IN SWITZERLAND.

From London Daily Mail.

"BY Jove, it's snowing!"

The curtains are drawn aside. The perspiration of the warm room is wiped off the window panes, but it has made no perceptible difference; for our eyes blink from the dazzling whiteness that holds the outside world. It seems impossible that a few hours of sleep should have changed the balmy summer heat into bitter frost, should have hidden the majestic rocks, the velvety meadows, the emerald patches of Alpine rose bushes in a monotonous shroud.

Such absence of color is unimaginable. In a white fog, however dense it may be, the objects near at hand tell us, if only by faint suggestion, of their distinguishing colors. But here, in the clear air, the dazzling glacier field void now of visible crevasses, fades imperceptibly into a sky of rival whiteness; and the giant peaks that enclose the icy bed now form an invisible part of the limitless white desert. The thin telephone wire that stretches across the window is transformed into a thick rope of white silk. The tables and chairs on the terrace under the window seem to break under the weight of the snow; and only the dark patches of the sheltered bits of ground under these tables and under the projecting rocks close at hand afford evidence of the bodily existence of this hidden world. The very snowflakes, the size of small loose snowballs, are invisible for want of a contrasting background.

Three days ago we were sweltering in the almost unbearable heat-haze that hung over Innsbruck, waiting for a kindly breeze to carry it away and bring relief to the limp mountaineers here preparing for their expeditions. Then came the slow uphill railway journey through the luscious flowering meadows of the picturesque Filler Valley to peaceful Mayrhofen; with its pretty villas and rustic inns. Then a long day's tramp uphill and uphill, scorching sunlight alternating with the delicious relief of shady pinewoods; up through wild ravines and along rushing, tumbling, roaring mountain streams; up the winding path through deserted meadow land—a continuous fight for an hour or two with swarms of horseflies and other winged enemies; up to the higher region that rings with the sweet sound of the cowbells; higher and higher to where the singeing heat gives way to balmy warmth and cool breezes, to where the last straggling pines cease to grow, as though aware of their uselessness as dispensers of refreshing shade; further up still, along the stony terror of the widening bed of the now furious Zemm to the very foot of the glacier.

And here at the "Berliner Hut," nearly 7000 feet above the sea and eight hours' uphill tramp from the nearest village, in this modestly-named "shelter house," one finds the comfort of a good hotel. Mountain ponies alone serve to establish the connection with the world, but they do their work unceasingly and with such success that physical comfort finds nothing lacking. Last night the hum and buzz of life, the talk on many topics, kept up the illusion that we were at some great international hotel; and though the plans for the morrow, for breaking the sleep at unearthly hours to cross the glaciers betimes, occupied more than their due share of the talk, the greater questions of individual and national life and culture were discussed with equal zest.

But today the white veil that has narrowed our field of vision has had a similar effect upon our outlook on life. Today our world lies within the four walls that seem in danger of disappearing in the rapidly-rising snow—this morning two inches of snow were lying on the tables on the terrace; midday there were six inches, and now the depth has increased to nine. And the talk is of naught but snow and the weather prospect. Will it be possible to cross the Schwarzenstein tomorrow? Is the glass rising? Is it snowing less now? What is it like at Breitlahner further down the valley? If it ceases snowing, will the snow be hard enough for walking? As soon as a guide ventures out of his hut he is stormed with questions. He has answered the same questions a hundred times to a hundred inquirers, and he wearily retreats to his little hut.

Two diversions break the monotony of the snowy day and the snowy talk. A keen eye has discovered a weasel quickly gliding over the snow. In a moment everybody has rushed to the window; everybody is eagerly watching and reporting the movements of the dainty little animal with raucous German voices. The second diversion is the arrival of the two pack horses with provisions from the valley—relief brought to a starved garrison could not excite greater stir and more eager questioning. And then the talk resumes its normal snowy course—yet with a difference, for hope has now given way to resignation. Earlier in the day there was much reconnoitering and hopeful gazing out of windows, and there were many bold plans for the morrow. Now the air in the guest room is full of the sound of scratching pens—it is a harvest day for the vender of picture postcards—and from two corners of the room comes the regular boom! boom! of fists banging the tables at regular intervals—the apparently indispensable punctuation of German card players. The losers utter well-seasoned but good-natured monosyllabic exclamations; the winners whistle the "Merry Widow" waltz.

And still the flakes descend. Now a group has gathered around a large table, and over their wine and beer and coffee the heroes from Berlin and Dresden discuss the quaint antics of British Alpinists. A Berliner, with truly imperial mustaches, tells of an English lady whom he has seen "doing" an easy ascent in the Dolomites, accompanied by no fewer than five guides and carriers.

"Now, that is strange," puts in another climber from the Athens on the Spree, "when I came up yesteday I met an English lady going down quite by herself on this easy path, and she was in such a state of fright that she was clinging on to the rocks with one hand and holding up her umbrella on the other side so as to shut out the view of the slope."

"Did you see the three English youths who arrived last night with their mother?" chimes in a Saxon voice. "They were dressed in flannels, brown boots without nails, and Panama hats?"

At this moment the door opens to admit a wanderer, whom the first glance betrays to be English, and moreover, an English country parson. He bears the traces of exposure; his boots are still covered with snow, his hands are dirty and torn, his face is almost raw, and the skin is peeling off his nose. While the brave Berlin mountaineers have been sitting in the cosy guest room to wait for the passing of the snow, he has crossed the glacier alone, without a guide, in a blinding snowstorm! He was the only Englishman we met in this glorious Alpine region, preferable though it be for grandeur of nature and comfort of shelter to any part of Switzerland.

He entered the room, and after a nervous look round approached our table. "Did I hear English sounds?" came from his lips, with the intonation of the pulpit. A flow of language followed our assent. He had not heard his mother tongue for a fortnight. He did not know a word of the native tongue. He had been climbing the most difficult peaks without a guide. He had arrived one night at a closed shelter hut, into which he followed two other mountaineers, whose guide requested him to leave with them early next morning. He was too tired, and refused. Two hours later the guide returned with a gendarme to demand some money, which eventually turned out to be his fee for returning to lock the hut. He was going to cross another glacier next morning, snow or no snow. He was craving for some jam. He did not smoke; he drank nothing but water; but, oh, that craving for jam! To dig a spoon into a pot of jam would indeed be bliss! But they have no jam in these mountains.

At last his droning voice has ceased. The Berlin and Dresden mountaineers, too, have ceased long since to jeer at British mountaineers—indeed, there was something of envy and admiration in the glances they shot at the English country parson. The sun has set. From the lighted room the snow without assumes a hue of purplish blue. We take our hats and cloaks and go out to see what hope there is for tomorrow. The snow is still falling in heavy flakes, and all around is still the white nothingness. What will it be tomorrow?

P. G. KONODY.

IT TASTES JUST THE SAME.

"You say you were in the bar at the time of the assault referred to in the complaint?" asked the lawyer.

"I was, sir."

"Did you take cognizance of the barman at the time?"

"I don't know what he called it, but I took what the rest did."—[Tit-Bits.

Shots That Tell.

HOW THE GUNS THAT MAKE PEACE ARE SUPPLIED WITH SHELLS.

By a Special Contributor.

MARKSMANSHIP, all authorities agree, is the beginning, middle and end of all naval endeavor. If the delivery from the great guns of the American fleet is not clean into the heart of the target the expenditure, enormous and increasing, for fleets, naval stations, training ships, academies and schools, great guns, proving grounds, apparatus and institutions for the testing of lines of keels, is all as futile as it is costly. Therein lies the reason why at the gun factory at the Washington Navy Yard, at Indian Head, at Annapolis, at every station and shipbuilding yard in the country and at target practice the problem is ever one of mechanical and microscopic accuracy in sending home a projectile.

The man behind the gun is always the spectacular hero in the report of a successful engagement and there can be no question that the ability to manage the great thundering peacemakers, to use a telescopic sight and send a ton of metal hurtling through twelve miles of space to plunge with unerring certainty into the vulnerable spot of the enemy is deserving of all possible praise. But there is frequently a tendency to forget in the direct and immediate work of the gunner the skill which has made gunner prowess possible. The man who built the gun, the man of the gunshop rather than the gun turret, indirectly and remotely is certainly an equal sharer in the pride of American workmanship.

There have been few opportunities since the origin, twenty years ago, of the new navy, to test in engagements the skill of the naval gunners, but under the conditions of target practice there have been made records which redound to the honor of both gunners and gunmaker.

And there is need of skill, for there is 13,000 miles of coast line with more than twenty centers of population adjacent to it, not to speak of the Pacific possessions which have to be defended by the navy from the possible aggressions of the foreign enemy.

At all times in the history of the United States the gunnery of the sailors has gained them a tremendous reputation. The marksmanship which destroyed the Guerriere, Java and Hornet, made the naval experts of the world sit up and begin to think and then to work. During the Spanish-American War, when at Manila and Santiago the marksmanship of the sailors seemed to please the American people there was no doubt in the minds of Spanish admirals and captains that our guns made hits. And yet in naval circles the mortifying fact is well known that at Santiago only 4 per cent. of the shots got home. That 4 per cent., however, was sufficient to tell.

Gunner and Gunsmith.

There is a keen sympathy between the sailor man and the men at the gun factory, whether employed in the drafting-room, the gunshop, the pattern shop, the foundry, the forge, the torpedo test house, the experimental model basin, the gun carriage shop or in the cartridge case shop. The atmosphere of the navy yard, practically 200 miles from sea, is one of seamanship and it is no unusual thing for the gunmaker, expert machinist or apprentice mechanic to throw up his job and follow the lure of the ultimate intention of all his labor. The unseen reality of war is made so potent by the daily and nightly building up of cannon and the shaping of cartridge cases that the mechanic feels that he must go out and see what has become of all his work.

Quite apart from guns and gun carriages, his work during the year of the Spanish War included the 81,920 cartridge bags, 35,448 ammunition boxes, 10,272 four-inch shell caps, 2156 thirteen-inch-shell caps, 9010 ammunition chests, 42,825 base fuses, 286,500 wads of all calibers. There was shipped during the year over 40,000 packages weighing over 4,000,000 pounds. Admiral Mason shows that in the year 1906 there were 1798 shipments of boxed and crated ordnance material, and of uncrated material 69,978 packages, of a total weight of over five times the amount shipped during that year of war. It is conservatively estimated that during the fiscal year just closed the shipments have increased at least 50 per cent.

In the Cartridge Shell House.

In all the activity after the gunshops themselves there is probably no more inspiring activity in the yard than that of the cartridge-case shop.

It occupies but a small group of buildings east of the gunshop and north of the experimental model basin, which in its own way is most prophetic of the action of a great scientifically-constructed battleship than anything else in the yard. The main building of the cartridge-case shop occupies about 306 by 65 feet.

There are in connection with it a brass foundry, a boiler-house and a house for the hydraulic-pressure pumps. While the cartridge cases made in this shop are not used for a main battery of a great battleship, all guns from one-pounders to six-inch guns are supplied from this factory, with the cases of the shells that make the secondary batteries terrible.

Some idea of the amount of material which goes into these cases can be obtained from the fact that last year a double-chamber melting furna[illegible] melting up the small scrap bras[illegible] During seven weeks after it was [illegible] sion 181,000 pounds of brass were [illegible] 800 tons a year. All of this [illegible] ing castings in the foundry.

Scrap material from other shops [illegible] highest bidder, and at the present [illegible] retary of the Navy Newberry is [illegible] attempts to rob the government by [illegible] weighing of scrap brass and copper. [illegible] alone the government receives at [illegible] ally.

How the Case Is Made.

Long and arduous is the process [illegible] peatedly-tested cartridge case is made.

From the brass foundry come the [illegible] of brass, which are cast there and [illegible] brous and so discolored that no [illegible] the shining metal underneath the [illegible] of rolling and annealing at once [illegible] tapering out and becoming thinner.

When annealed, the slabs are placed [illegible]

not unlike that of the turning of the [illegible] lathes, with the exception, of course, [illegible] a flat bed is used and the steel tooth [illegible] rolls off great brass shingles that [illegible] surface. After the shining brass is [illegible] ther rolling and annealing is given [illegible] thickness for the particular cases is [illegible]

The second stage is reached when [illegible] cut into blanks, that is, circular [illegible] pressed into the cases. These great [illegible] ammunition shop are thoroughly [illegible] to a bath of foaming suds and put [illegible] the larger of which are hydraulic, [illegible] driven by electric motors, until they [illegible] by successive operations to the general [illegible] The stages by which the flat blanks [illegible] shallow cups and then into longer [illegible] ders are attended with constant [illegible]

When finally the desired size is [illegible] cut off to length and subjected to [illegible] of being headed, turned, ganged and [illegible] a very gradual increase in the dim[illegible] that are intended to supply one-[illegible] guns with fixed ammunition.

Need no Test.

Three hundred and twenty [illegible] val gun factory manufacture were [illegible] proving grounds at Indian Head, [illegible] miles below Washington, on the [illegible]

[illegible] and the failures were so rare as to warrant [illegible] of these tests.

[illegible] the interests of perfection do not permit a satis[illegible] with things as they are. In the physical and [illegible] laboratory connected with the gun factory, be[illegible] the general tests of all material which goes into [illegible] cartridge cases metal, experimental work was con[illegible] with a view to obtaining the best composition, as [illegible] as to the best method of casting in order to produce [illegible] for cartridge-case metal free from blowholes and [illegible] defects.

[illegible] the cases are given a last inspection and pol[illegible] they are placed in boxes colored according to the [illegible] of the cases and shipped to the various naval mag[illegible].

The marksmanship of the American gunner would not [illegible], however much the training and nerve of [illegible], the facility with which the captain in his con[illegible] tower is able electrically to manage his vessel and [illegible] guns, the exquisite and delicate adjustment of [illegible] the guns themselves provided by the gun factory or the [illegible] shaping and making of the projectiles, if the [illegible] of the powder to be used is not also estimated. Last year at Indian Head alone, a proving ground [illegible] was originally planned for the testing of guns, [illegible] plate and powder, but which has been extended [illegible] a smokeless powder plant, over a million [illegible] of powder was the output. At the present time [illegible] manufacturing facilities are much improved.

[illegible] Investigation.

[illegible] all guns of all calibers were proved here, the [illegible] according to Admiral Mason the purification [illegible] of the powder product is constantly tending to remove [illegible] of deterioration with time, is almost more [illegible] point. Methods of production have so improved [illegible] practically uniform the finished product. [illegible] two points have been accomplished abso[illegible] there will be a different emotion in handling the [illegible] charges as they come up to the turrets of the big [illegible].

[illegible] English still use cordite, which is a smokeless [illegible] powder, but the heat engendered by that [illegible] that while it is 40 per cent lighter than In[illegible] smokeless, the serious erosion it causes, in [illegible] of Americans, makes it undesirable.

[illegible] the time of Admiral Dahlgren there had been no [illegible] in powder since the days of the early [illegible] inventors. Finally the Germans invented a [illegible] cocoa powder, the charcoal of which was made [illegible] torrefied straw. The secret was jealously [illegible] but finally an American turned out an article [illegible] in all respects to the German. That was made [illegible] grains about an inch and a half in diame[illegible] an inch thick, pierced with a longitudinal hole. [illegible] of long guns demanded a powder of in[illegible] power, and the "cocoa" brand served for a [illegible], however, made a dense smoke cloud, and al[illegible] increased velocities from 1500 feet per second, [illegible] powder rate, to 2000 and 2200, the demand for [illegible] velocity still made its time of usefulness short. [illegible] powder is simply gun cotton dissolved in a [illegible] of alcohol and ether. It is made and prepared [illegible] in the shape of short perforated cylinders. [illegible]-inch gun it has produced velocities as high [illegible] feet per second, and there is no telling what, [illegible] made, may be done by way of improvement.

[illegible] Progress.

[illegible] corps of workmen in the shaping of guns [illegible] powder and shell for the gunner that is [illegible] the telling shot, is on the qui vive; experiments [illegible] under way pertaining to improvements in igni[illegible] cartridge cases. A special board is at work on [illegible] fuse to be used with high explosive shells [illegible] is much certainty of its development. So [illegible] been the developments in the last few years [illegible] manufacture of steel that among the new alloys [illegible] confidently hoped that there would appear some [illegible] for gun tubes which would give less erosion [illegible] with the plain carbon or nickel steels. As [illegible] strength of material the new alloys have in[illegible] promise of phenomenal results. With this [illegible] for tubes or linings of tubes two experimen[illegible] are now under construction which are expected [illegible] strength in resisting erosion which may make [illegible] English cordite a gentle powder on the gun.

[illegible] the great majority of people who first see a [illegible] and its projectiles and its bags of powder the [illegible] is, How far will it shoot?

[illegible] been said, the great imperial 16-inch gun can [illegible] a ton of steel twelve miles with perfect accuracy. [illegible] naval purposes the 12-inch gun is now the stand[illegible]. With 385 pounds of smokeless powder a 40-caliber [illegible] gun will send an 850-pound armor-piercing shell [illegible] through nineteen and five-tenths inches of [illegible] nickel steel armor at a distance of 300 yards. [illegible] hulls of the two recently-ordered battleships, the [illegible] and its unnamed sister, will be protected by a [illegible] water line of a maximum thickness of eleven [illegible]. The belt will be eight feet wide. Reinforcing [illegible] of the ships will be armor seven and three-[illegible] feet in width and running from ten to seven [illegible] in thickness. Were the ten 12-inch guns of one [illegible] ship trained upon the other the test of the [illegible] development in protective armor against the latest [illegible] of attack might be given. As it is, it is believed [illegible] that with the massing of even most of the [illegible] strength of the naval guns in a great Pacific fleet [illegible] is no reason to believe any nation will be zealous [illegible] the assemblage. "The two-ocean standard" [illegible] appears to be the present policy of the navy. [illegible] to the Atlantic six powerful battleships, more [illegible] needed to close the war with Spain. Since [illegible] both ordnance and guns have been completely [illegible]. Even without the new type of the Dela[illegible] in early February there will be assembled somewhere in the Pacific; at Olongapo, in the Philippines, or Honolulu, or San Francisco, at least twenty-four first-class battleships, with 192 guns from the naval gun factory at Washington. There will also be with the fleet ten armored cruisers, with not less than thirty-two heavy guns. These 224 guns are capable of piercing Krupp armor of practically any available thickness.

Notwithstanding the conjecture made by the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance that in the design of many vessels of the fleet the space assigned to ammunition has been so restricted that under certain conditions of battle all the ammunition on board would be expended in less than an hour, the criticism is not considered of moment. By the end of the hour, with the present marksmanship of the men, it is not believed that any ammunition would be needed.

SOME CURIOUS CUSTOMS RELATING TO NEW-BORN BABES.

By a Special Contributor.

WHEN the stork, playing at Santa Claus all the year round, drops the gift baby into the little mother's stocking, the commonplace old earth swings in sudden touch with fairyland, and the wide world everywhere brims over in magic and mystery. And whatever the race or the climè, to the woman-hearted, no ceremonies and superstitions can have a keener interest than those encircling babyland in a halo of living solicitude.

Among the Fellahin of Egypt, mystic land of pyramid and mummy, no man—not even Philip-my-king's own daddy—may look upon the new little arrival until the seventh day. Upon that morning, the baby is placed in a sieve and carried through the house in a procession twingling with smiles and lighted tapers, the wicked spirits whose curiosity may have been excited by his lordship's advent pushed into the background of life by discreet graft of grain and salt scattered along the triumphant route. Twice the procession pauses in solemn purpose; first to shake the sieve, thus insuring—with lusty wails no doubt—that the wee rider shall prove a fearless man; second, to hold the blinking cherub up to the sun to sharpen his eyes. After this he makes his first bow to the paternal presence.

He is christened by the cadi sucking a stick of sugar candy and allowing the drawn-out sweetness to trickle from his mouth into the open sesame of the surprised youngster, after which the cadi pronounces the given name.

The small fry of the Nilotic negroes—what more cunning than a "nigger baby!"—is ruthlessly awakened from the dreams that crowd upon an infant's sleepy arrival from the "everywhere into the here" by the loud beating of a drum, a medicine man at once called in to frighten away all evil spirits. Four days after the birth of a girl, six after that of a boy, the mother steals from the village and drops the infant upon the roadside. The child lies there until picked up and brought home by another woman who becomes the godmother, but as the mother heart throbs the same all the world over, we suspect that the negress looks to it that the other woman is already waiting very near her bulrushes.

Among the Parsees when a child is born a priest takes the place of the medicine man, carefully noting down all details of birth, and "calculating its nativity" to a nicety. Having graciously consulted the parents, he announces the child's name. Baptism by water and by fire follows, the infant being first dipped in a tub and afterward taken to church to be held over a flame.

In Persia the baby is laid on the floor while five names on five different slips of paper are either tucked under the edge of the carpet or hidden in the Koran. The first chapter of this holy book is then read and a slip drawn at random. The chosen name is confided to the baby's ear, but lest he should forget, his wee memory is tagged by fastening the paper to his clothing.

The Hebrew has the sacred habit of consecrating his first-born to God. The thirtieth day after his birth the priest comes to the house and makes pretense of carrying off the child who is at once ransomed by the father according to his means. However, should the misfortune befall the young mother of losing her husband within those thirty days, the ransom need not be paid until the baby becomes of age, a tiny silver plate with inscription being hung around the child's neck by way of reminder.

When a Japanese baby boy is 100 days old, he is carried to the priest house in the Shinto temple and given a name compounded from the family name and that of his guardian, the same written down by the priest for the little one to keep in his prayer bag. After prayers have been said, the child is placed on the floor, and for the first time permitted to creep—"toward whichever cardinal point he first turns so will his future be influenced." Two fans are his christening gifts, promissory notes of the two swords for which they will later be exchanged.

In China the naming of the baby is accompanied by shaving the wee pate, a rather ticklish operation in the nervous judgment of our civilized ignorance. The so-called milk name then bestowed gives place to a new one when the boy begins his studies, but the girl keeps hers until she enters the harder school of matrimony.

The Turkish nursery's chief solicitude is warding off the omnipresent danger of the evil eye. But accidents happen in the best regulated families, and sometimes in spite of every care the bursting of clover thrown into the brazier warns the terrified household that the dreaded influence is already at work and can be frustrated only by cutting off some hair from the heads of mother and child and burning the mingled strands while both thoroughly fumigate themselves in the noxious smelling smoke.

The baby welcomed to the heart of a Greek peasant home is washed in lukewarm wine and myrtle leaves, then its cunning little body carefully covered with a layer of salt.

A pretty custom prevails on the Isle of Rhodes, for there, on the eighth day from birth, the infant, after a final bath of wine and myrtle, is tenderly laid in a cradle surrounded by lighted tapers while a child approaches, touches its lips with honey, and says: "Be thou as sweet as this honey."

In Cypress, at the important date of the first tooth's appearing, friends gather, singing songs, while the child is bathed in water and boiled wheat. Afterward, thirty-two of the boiled grains are strung on a thread and stitched to the baby's cap, which of course promptly produces the safe cutting of the other teeth.

Among the poorer classes of Athens necessity has mothered the pretty invention of covering a new-born boy with a dress made from an old shirt belonging to his father, while under the baby's tiny pillow were smuggled a black-handled knife, a gold coin and a copy of the gospel—sign and symbol of the courage, wealth and piety that the hopes of fond hearts treasured for the little son and heir.

In many an old Dutch town the stork leaves its card conspicuously—a pink placard for a girl; a blue one for a boy.

To the Scottish ear that hears, the sighing of the wind is the plaintive wail of a child who, having died unbaptized, wanders through forest and solitude. But not always was it deemed safe to trust a baby's soul to baptism alone. The bairn home from church was often put in a clean basket carefully spread with a cloth upon which had been placed bread and cheese, and then passed three times round the crook that held pots over the fire, while a thrice-given incantation repeated the magic words: "Let the flame consume thee now or never."

Many villages in England cherished the old custom of the midwife presenting bread and cheese, or cheese and fruit cake, to the first person met on the way to the christening, the favored one in return bestowing three gifts and a special blessing upon the child.

At one time in England christening gifts reached such extravagant proportions that one shameless mother had her baby thrice baptized solely for the perquisites thus acquired. A reaction naturally set in, and for a brief while a modest christening shirt was the only offering. The cup and spoon, however, soon regained lost favor, particularly the apostle spoon with the figure of an apostle on the handle, a lucky little sinner sometimes receiving the whole sacred twelve.

During the bleak colonial days of our own country the little new-born stranger shared the hardships of the stern New England creed and climate. The waiting, seldom empty, cradle, was always heavenly hooded to shelter the wee sleeper from an ever-present draught. When the stork brought a baby tucked under each wing a twin cradle with hoods at both ends was instantly produced. But a few brief days after the arrival, no matter how cold the weather, how icy the water, the infant was carried to the meeting-house for baptism.

A belief in astrology clings tenaciously to the credulity of man, and the Christian Bible chronicled the exact minute of birth, our New England forbears studying the stars for sign and promise of the little one's future as faithfully as Parsee priest.

Scarlet was laid upon the new little monarch's head to guard him from harm, and the first time that he was moved he was carried upstairs with silver and gold pressed in his disdainful hand—"to bring him wealth and cause him always to rise in the world."

Even in those early days of the simple life baby flesh was heir to baby ills. Varied elixirs sprang up to answer the varied need of that pitiful little cry in the night, but for the most part the mothers in Israel concentrated their attention upon the great teething problem.

The discoverer of a concoction to make the teeth come through without pain was worthy to be the progenitor of the interior of painless dentistry.

"Take the head of a Hare boyled a walm or two, or roached; and with the brain thereof mingle Honey and butter and therewith anoynt the Childes gums as often as you please."

Others preferred the more heroic device of scratching the infant's gums with an osprey bone. But the favorite remedy for excellence was undoubtedly the anodyne necklace—great, great grandmamma of the later-day medicated belt—which, for the modest sum of 20 shillings, brought children back from the brink of the grave when they had fits, fevers and convulsions from teething."

THE SULTAN'S KITCHEN.

The imperial kitchen of the Sultan of Turkey is more like a fortress than a place to cook his meals, for it has an armor-plated door and is fitted with locks which can be opened only by one man. As each course is prepared, it is placed on a silver dish, which is sealed with red wax by the official responsible for his sovereign's food, and then a black velvet cover is placed over the dish to keep it warm.

A procession of people follows the meal into the imperial chamber, the seals being broken in the Sultan's presence, and often the kelardjhi is requested to taste some particular dish. The cost of the Sultan's food does not exceed $5000 a year, for it is mostly entrées and boiled eggs; but to feed the numerous members of his household and pay all domestic expenses lessens his annual income of $10,000,000 by $75,000 a week.—[Home Chat.

When the cases are given a last inspection and polished they are placed in boxes colored according to the size of the cases and shipped to the various naval magazines.

The marksmanship of the American gunner would not be explained, however much the training and nerve of the man, the facility with which the captain in his conning tower is able electrically to manage his vessel and the gun force, the exquisite and delicate adjustment of the guns themselves provided by the gun factory or the scientific shaping and making of the projectiles, if the nature of the powder to be used is not also estimated. The thirtieth day after his birth the priest comes to the house and makes pretense of carrying off the child who is at once ransomed by the father according to his means. However, should the misfortune befall the young mother of losing her husband within those thirty days, the ransom need not be paid until the baby becomes of age, a tiny silver plate with inscription being hung around the child's neck by way of reminder.

When a Japanese baby boy is 100 days old, he is carried to the priest house in the Shinto temple and given a name compounded from the family name and that of his guardian, the same written down by the priest for the little one to keep in his prayer bag. After prayers have been said, the child is placed on the floor, and for the first time permitted to creep—"toward whichever cardinal point he first turns so will his future be influenced." Two fans are his christening gifts, promissory notes of the two swords for which they will later be exchanged.

In China the naming of the baby is accompanied by shaving the wee pate, a rather ticklish operation in the nervous judgment of our civilized ignorance. The so-called milk name then bestowed gives place to a new one when the boy begins his studies, but the girl keeps hers until she enters the harder school of matrimony.

The Turkish nursery's chief solicitude is warding off the omnipresent danger of the evil eye. But accidents happen in the best regulated families, and sometimes in spite of every care the bursting of clover thrown into the brazier warns the terrified household that the dreaded influence is already at work and can be frustrated only by cutting off some hair from the heads of mother and child and burning the mingled strands while both thoroughly fumigate themselves in the noxious smelling smoke.

The baby welcomed to the heart of a Greek peasant home is washed in lukewarm wine and myrtle leaves, then its cunning little body carefully covered with a layer of salt.

A pretty custom prevails on the Isle of Rhodes, for there, on the eighth day from birth, the infant, after a final bath of wine and myrtle, is tenderly laid in a cradle surrounded by lighted tapers while a child approaches, touches its lips with honey, and says: "Be thou as sweet as this honey."

In Cypress, at the important date of the first tooth's appearing, friends gather, singing songs, while the child is bathed in water and boiled wheat. Afterward, thirty-two of the boiled grains are strung on a thread and stitched to the baby's cap, which of course promptly produces the safe cutting of the other teeth.

Among the poorer classes of Athens necessity has mothered the pretty invention of covering a new-born boy with a dress made from an old shirt belonging to his father, while under the baby's tiny pillow were smuggled a black-handled knife, a gold coin and a copy of the gospel—sign and symbol of the courage, wealth and piety that the hopes of fond hearts treasured for the little son and heir.

In many an old Dutch town the stork leaves its card conspicuously—a pink placard for a girl; a blue one for a boy.

To the Scottish ear that hears, the sighing of the wind is the plaintive wail of a child who, having died unbaptized, wanders through forest and solitude. But not always was it deemed safe to trust a baby's soul to baptism alone. The bairn home from church was often put in a clean basket carefully spread with a cloth upon which had been placed bread and cheese, and then passed three times round the crook that held pots over the fire, while a thrice-given incantation repeated the magic words: "Let the flame consume thee now or never."

Many villages in England cherished the old custom of the midwife presenting bread and cheese, or cheese and fruit cake, to the first person met on the way to the christening, the favored one in return bestowing three gifts and a special blessing upon the child.

At one time in England christening gifts reached such extravagant proportions that one shameless mother had her baby thrice baptized solely for the perquisites thus acquired. A reaction naturally set in, and for a brief while a modest christening shirt was the only offering. The cup and spoon, however, soon regained lost favor, particularly the apostle spoon with the figure of an apostle on the handle, a lucky little sinner sometimes receiving the whole sacred twelve.

During the bleak colonial days of our own country the little new-born stranger shared the hardships of the stern New England creed and climate. The waiting, seldom empty, cradle, was always heavenly hooded to shelter the wee sleeper from an ever-present draught. When the stork brought a baby tucked under each wing a twin cradle with hoods at both ends was instantly produced. But a few brief days after the arrival, no matter how cold the weather, how icy the water, the infant was carried to the meeting-house for baptism.

A belief in astrology clings tenaciously to the credulity of man, and the Christian Bible chronicled the exact minute of birth, our New England forbears studying the stars for sign and promise of the little one's future as faithfully as Parsee priest.

Scarlet was laid upon the new little monarch's head to guard him from harm, and the first time that he was moved he was carried upstairs with silver and gold pressed in his disdainful hand—"to bring him wealth and cause him always to rise in the world."

Even in those early days of the simple life baby flesh was heir to baby ills. Varied elixirs sprang up to answer the varied need of that pitiful little cry in the night, but for the most part the mothers in Israel concentrated their attention upon the great teething problem.

The discoverer of a concoction to make the teeth come through without pain was worthy to be the progenitor of the interior of painless dentistry.

"Take the head of a Hare boyled a walm or two, or roached; and with the brain thereof mingle Honey and butter and therewith anoynt the Childes gums as often as you please."

Others preferred the more heroic device of scratching the infant's gums with an osprey bone. But the favorite remedy for excellence was undoubtedly the anodyne necklace—great, great grandmamma of the later-day medicated belt—which, for the modest sum of 20 shillings, brought children back from the brink of the grave when they had fits, fevers and convulsions from teething."

THE SULTAN'S KITCHEN.

The imperial kitchen of the Sultan of Turkey is more like a fortress than a place to cook his meals, for it has an armor-plated door and is fitted with locks which can be opened only by one man. As each course is prepared, it is placed on a silver dish, which is sealed with red wax by the official responsible for his sovereign's food, and then a black velvet cover is placed over the dish to keep it warm.

A procession of people follows the meal into the imperial chamber, the seals being broken in the Sultan's presence, and often the kelardjhi is requested to taste some particular dish. The cost of the Sultan's food does not exceed $5000 a year, for it is mostly entrées and boiled eggs; but to feed the numerous members of his household and pay all domestic expenses lessens his annual income of $10,000,000 by $75,000 a week.—[Home Chat.

Gay Carlsbad.

GLIMPSES OF LIFE IN THIS LOVELY HEALTH RESORT.

By a Special Contributor.

CARLSBAD is at the zenith of her season of spa life, and the little town nestled in the narrow wooded Tepl Valley, in Bohemia, is in all its glory. About 45,000 people from every country of the world have arrived so far this summer to take the waters of these famous springs, and they are still arriving at the rate of about 1000 a day. Nowhere else in the world, perhaps, can such a cosmopolitan throng be seen. A large proportion are from the very wealthy class of all nations, including royalty and members of the nobility, and there are many military officers here, gorgeous in their gold lace, short-waisted military coats, immaculate pearl-gray broadcloth trousers, high caps and long flowing military capes. But there are representatives from every other class of people, and as many different types of dress, of intellect, of beauty, of language and of manners.

It is fascinating to watch these crowds, since to man the study of mankind is always entertaining. It is at the springs during the drinking hours in the early morning that the throng can be seen to the best advantage, for then high and low, rich and poor, the lord and the peasant, mingle and touch elbows in the long lines that surge past the springs under the long colonnades. The first impression is rather overwhelming and confusing, and the ear is astounded at the sounds of so many languages—German, French, English, Spanish, Italian, Swedish, Norwegian, Russian, Roumanian, Servian, Bohemian, and goodness knows what other tongues—the whole seeming like a veritable Tower of Babel. Many queer-looking Jews from Galicia are seen, wearing broad rolling-brimmed black beaver hats, long gaberdines that almost touch the ground, and as a distinctive mark a curl of hair falling in front of each ear. There are portly priests in long black robes and crimson sashes, who have no doubt sampled too much of the fine wines in their monastery cellars and have come to have the bad effects removed at Carlsbad, while in the throng are beautiful, elegantly-attired women, prosperous-looking business men from every country, pretty girls, dandies in pale gray suits twirling mustaches and canes; fat women, peasant women in picturesque dress and short skirts, and globe trotters who have donned for effect the dark green felt hats of the Tyrolean Mountains, looking very jaunty with the little tuft of feathers, the edelweiss blossoms or the bit of fur in the band of the hat, and mingled with all these remarkably well-looking people are those that at a glance can be noted as invalids.

But on the whole the population of "cure guests," as they are called, look like anything but invalids. The women especially are remarkable for their beauty and embonpoint, and the magnificence of their costumes. The costly and beautiful dresses they wear form a study alone, for from her hat, the highest art of the milliner, to the tip of her dainty suede slipper, my lady is a poem in the art of perfect dressing. Such laces and jewels, such gauzes and shimmering silks, such ermines and sables, such evening cloaks and beautiful hats have I seen nowhere else, and it is safe to say no city, no drawing-room, not even a royal court, can boast of such an assembly of beautiful women so handsomely gowned.

These coffee gardens of Carlsbad! To my mind they are quite the most delightful institution about this noted resort place, and rival the famous springs in interest.

The autocrat of Carlsbad, in whose hands rests the destiny for weal or woe of the majority of the thousands who visit this resort, is Dr. Grunberger, the famous physician who has been decorated with eighteen jeweled orders and medals by the various emperors, kings, queens and empresses whom he has treated. He has been the medical advisor of most of the crowned heads of Europe, to say nothing of the host of princes, members of the nobility and great personages famous in every walk of life who have been his patients. He is extremely affable and cordial, and a fine linguist, although if it serves his purpose he can feign an ignorance of English synonyms and then make up for his seeming bluntness by an excess of cordiality, asking in the meantime a thousand pardons. He is famed all over the world for his skill in his profession, and has received from some of his royal patrons the title of "Imperial Councillor."

The celebrated physician greets his patients most cordially in the effusive German manner, and it is rather amusing to hear him say: "Now, my dearest Madam, I have a proposition to make to you," when possibly his patient has objected to the strictness of the diet or health régime he has outlined. The accompanying photograph of the doctor is excellent, and shows the various medals and orders which have been bestowed upon him by his numerous royal patients.

After the cure guests have consulted their physicians and found out the kind of water they are to take, they rise early the next morning and join the throngs of people at the various springs. For two or three hours in the early morning the streets and colonnades are filled with a moving mass of humanity, all bent on partaking of the cure-all waters. Large and imposing colonnades or kiosks are built over all the springs, and no charge is made for the waters, the city paying the young frauleins who fill the glasses and hand them to the endless lines of people. Near all the springs are small stands where drinking glasses or porcelain cups are sold, and on the morning after our arrival we joined the throng and made our way toward one of these small stalls, where we purchased glasses—for this is the first thing every one does. Nearly all of the glasses have handles, and the word "Karlsbad" is etched in the glass. There are also porcelain cups of nearly every color, white, dark blue, red and yellow, with gold decorations. Many people also purchase a strap, a napkin and a glass tube, for the water from some of the springs is very hot, and the chemical substances are injurious to the teeth, so that many people prefer to take the water through a glass tube. The napkin is wrapped about the hot tumbler, and the strap is used to sling the tumbler at the side, as one would a field glass. It is a characteristic sight to see thousands of people going to and from the springs in the morning with tumblers thus slung at their sides.

After purchasing our glasses, we fell into the line, which by this time numbered thousands and reached twice the length of the long colonnade and for at least half a block down the street. There were [illegible] long lines of people at the Muhlbrunnen Colonnade, [illegible] entering the building, and four leaving it, [illegible] marching two by two. Arriving at the [illegible] where one is to drink, his glass is taken by a [illegible] maid who hands it to another one standing [illegible] her, and she to another one until in this way [illegible] through the hands of about five little fraulein[illegible] reaches the girl at the bottom of the steps, who [illegible] the spring and passes it on to another line of [illegible] on the steps at the opposite side. The marching [illegible] of people do not stop, but when one reaches the [illegible] attendant his glass is ready and is handed to him.

The Sprudel is the spring that made Carlsbad [illegible] It is a fountain of mineral water and is almost [illegible] hot. The attendants wear white rubber caps and [illegible] and catch the water in cups at the end of long poles. [illegible] beautiful kiosk is built over this spring, and in the [illegible] glass-enclosed colonnade are masses of palms and [illegible]ers, while both here and at the popular Muhlbrunnen Spring bands discourse bright music every morning during the drinking hours.

After one has taken in sufficient water ballast at the spring to feel that his ship of state will have a fair [illegible] sailing, the proper thing to do is to join the army of people on the Posthof Promenade and walk out to one of the charming coffee gardens that lie a mile or [illegible] from the center of town in the beautiful little valley of the Tepl, and there enjoy breakfast under the trees, surrounded by bright-hued flowers and twittering birds. This is the most delightful custom at Carlsbad, [illegible] from about 8 to 10 o'clock there is a throng of [illegible] dressed people marching in a happy-go-lucky, [illegible] please way down the broad tree-lined walks [illegible] pretty little river out to the Posthof, the [illegible] Saal, the Kaiser Park or the Schoenbrunn [illegible] Among a certain class of wealthy Americans the [illegible] Park is preferred, and many drive out in carriages.

It is a gay sight on a sunshiny morning to [illegible] fashionable crowd here and watch the beautiful [illegible] and fine-looking men as they alight from their [illegible] and enter the garden, greet their friends and [illegible] at the little tables under the trees, or on the [illegible] races by the flower gardens. Fairer than the [illegible] themselves are some of the women, and the [illegible] in exquisite taste and in the height of the mode. [illegible] morning toilettes are usually dresses of [illegible] linen or rajah silk, in white, lilac, pale blue, [illegible] or lavender. The hats harmonize, and are [illegible] the drooping-brimmed mushroom shape and [illegible] of flowers.

We are especially fond of the Posthof, a [illegible] garden about a mile from town, where the [illegible] in Carlsbad is served. Near the entrance to the [illegible] stand the waitresses, comely-looking Fraulein[illegible] greet us with a cheerful "Morgen," "Guten [illegible]" Our own particular little waitress beams on us, [illegible]ries ahead of us to find a table in just the [illegible] thinks we will like, then brings each member of [illegible] party a "plaid"—a nice warm woolen [illegible] about us and sit on as one does a steamer rug, [illegible] has been no summer in Europe this year, and the [illegible]ing air is quite chilly. The remark was [illegible] days ago that any one who shall hereafter [illegible] "summer" of 1907 will be considered the [illegible] humorists. However, in spite of the cool [illegible] abundance of rain, Carlsbad is crowded, for as the gorgeous gold-laced porter at our hotel said the other day: "The people have to come here. We have had the biggest season this year that we have ever had." The fame of these waters has indeed spread to the four corners of the earth, and each year sees an increasing tide of visitors.

But at the gardens they all laugh and chat gaily, and from appearances none of them seem to be alarmingly ill. The favorite breakfast consists of soft-boiled eggs, Carlsbad ham, rolls, butter and coffee. The ham of Carlsbad is famous, and the doctors prescribe it in the diet of nearly every one, and eggs are consumed here by the millions. It is the custom for every one to stop at the good-looking bakeries near the springs and select the kind of rolls or bread that one likes and bring it to the coffee garden with him. It is rather amusing to see ladies of wealth, whose footmen attend them at home and carry every article for them, walking out to the Posthof carrying their little pink paper bags of bread!

It is somewhat doubtful who first discovered these famous thermal springs, but tradition ascribes it to the powerful Emperor Karl IV, who in the year 1370 came upon them suddenly while out stag hunting. The story goes that the hunters of the royal party heard a pitiful howling of their hounds, and, pushing forward to ascertain the cause, found them in a gorge in the midst of hot spouting springs of water. The news of the remarkable wonder spread, and the Emperor gave his name to the spot, and from that day these boiling springs have been noted, and each year have become more famed for their healing qualities until now people flock to them from every country in the world.

During the Middle Ages monarchs frequently came to try the curative waters, and often brought their entire courts with them and held court here, and the little town enjoyed the special interest and protection of the kings. Eminent generals and great men of all countries have frequented the place. Goethe made repeated visits here from 1785 to 1823, while during the last century nearly all the monarchs of Europe have visited Carlsbad.

The town has an excellent municipal government, which provides admirably for the comfort and wellbeing of the host of summer visitors. The water supply is ample, and is of the purest. Drinking water is supplied from forty-two springs on the mountainsides about Carlsbad, and is conducted to the city in ten large conduits, while water for domestic purposes is brought from the Eger River and is filtered twice before reaching the city. The waters at the mineral springs are free to every one, and the city pays the attendants. But every visitor to Carlsbad who stays longer than a week has to pay a tax according to his rank or occupation, and this tax is used to maintain the expenses of the city and keep up the fine walks. No one is exempt except the very poor, and newspaper correspondents! No doubt the authorities think they are one and the same, and it is not necessary for a newspaper correspondent to prove that he is not rich, for that goes without saying, and is too well known even to need proving! That may be the reason I was let off so easily. I happen to be staying at the Grand Hotel Pupp, the largest hotel in Carlsbad, and it seems that every one who is a guest at this expensive hotel is considered to be able to pay the highest tax—$6—and is rated accordingly. The tax is collected at the hotel, so the next day in company with a friend who speaks German, I went down to the Rathaus, or City Hall, to see about it, and spent an interesting hour there.

It was quite worth the trouble just to see how the things were managed and how well systematized everything was. On entering the room a secretary took the name and handed the applicant a card bearing a number. The people presented their requests in turn and were obliged to wait until their especial number was called by a pompous portly man who guarded the door of the Herr Secretary's office. On this door was a placard: "City Secretary, Baron von S——." We were curious to see how a real live Baron Secretary would look, and hoped he was not a "robber baron." We spent the minutes until our turn came studying the sea of faces—every conceivable kind, a rich field for the artist or caricaturist. Presently our number was called, and we entered the sanctum sanctorium to find the Baron not like one of the bluff old robber barons of olden days, but a very courteous, smiling young man, a thorough gentleman and modern business man. He rose when we entered, asked us to be seated, and when we found out our errand, his eyes twinkled with fun. "So you are writing up Carlsbad! Just so she says nice things of Carlsbad it is 'all right!'" "Well," said my friend, "she has said many nice things about Carlsbad, but she is drinking the waters, and she doesn't say very kind things about them in her letters!" And then how the Baron and his assistant threw back their heads and laughed! They evidently knew how the waters tasted."

One of the delightful features of Carlsbad is the music, for bands and orchestras render choice programmes in the parks, coffee gardens and cafés afternoons and evenings. Besides this there are operas and concerts given by celebrated singers at the Kurhaus nearly every evening. The hours for the opera are from half-past 6 to 9 o'clock in the evening! Think of going to the opera at half-past 6 o'clock! The reason for this is that every one has to rise at a very early hour, they have to retire early, for this is a part of the "cure" régime, and nearly every one in Carlsbad is taking the cure.

The walks and drives about Carlsbad are another delight. The town at enormous expense has laid out and keeps in perfect order beautiful wide paths that climb the mountainsides in all directions, affording charming places for a stroll. At intervals all along these shady paths are comfortable settees, some of stone and some of wood, and many inscribed with the name of the donor. Wayside shrines and chapels are also often seen, and the rocks bear many tablets and inscriptions from grateful visitors who have been benefited by the waters. The walls of the wayside chapels are in like manner covered with bronze and porcelain tablets erected by those who have been cured by a sojourn here. A favorite inscription is: "Mary has helped. Mary will still help," with the initials of the one who erected the tablet, and the date.

A favorite conveyance in Carlsbad especially adopted by wealthy women and by children, is the trim little donkey carriages. Every morning these may be seen standing in front of the fashionable hotels waiting for some one, and it is said that several of the donkeys are such favorites that they are engaged months ahead. The donkeys are sleek and well-kept, and the carriages very comfortable, and many invalids use them in going to and from the palatial bath houses and in riding over the picturesque roads outside of town.

In their walks or drives the visitors are likely to see the Bohemian women on the roads coming in to town with big burden baskets or packs on their backs, filled with articles which they wish to sell in town. Some are bringing in great bundles containing the exquisite Cluny laces which the peasants, both men and women, make during the winter months to sell to the tourists in the summer. Others bring in milk or vegetables, either on their backs or in small wheeled carts.

The shops of Carlsbad offer an enticing array of costly and beautiful goods, for many of the leading firms of Vienna and Munich have branch establishments here. There are fine Cluny and Duchess laces, all sorts of garnet jewelry, for Bohemia is noted for her garnets; gowns and wraps from the fashion centers of Europe, and much of the finest embroidery, for the peasants of this country do all kinds of very fine needle work.

Altogether Carlsbad is a charming place, not only for those who come here for the waters, but for healthy, happy people who may here spend a delightful month or two during the summer season.

MATTIE LAURA JODON.

Stage-Coach Days.

REMINISCENCES OF AN OLD-TIMER IN MISSOURI.

From Kansas City Star.

THE halcyon days of the hitherto—the era of steamboat travel and overland journeys on public highways in the Middle West—seem to be returning.

The suggestion of a graded public roadway extending from Kansas City to St. Louis, brings to memory the old stage road of early days, the busy thoroughfare where no grass grew beneath the feet of the sturdy steers or stanch teams of horses or mules which hauled thousands of tons of freight and many passengers over its picturesque course.

It was said that Daniel Boone, that prince of pioneers, blazed the trail of this old route. When a youth of 18 years he made the journey from Hamilton, O., to St. Louis in thirty days, with no companion on the lonely, perilous journey save his surefooted pony. After a few days' rest in the village of St. Louis the brave boy resumed his westward journey, traveling, I was told by his compeers and kinsmen, very near the exact line of the main old stage highway of after years.

It was asserted that Daniel Boone was the first white person to reach the site of Independence, Mo.

We remember the project to build a national turnpike from Washington city to St. Louis at government expense. It was surveyed along that entire course, but the scheme was abandoned after the roadbed was graded and macadamized as far as Indianapolis, because the States not directly interested or benefited protested against being taxed for its construction. To compensate Missouri for its supposed loss by the abandonment of the project the government ceded to the State the sixteenth section of every township for school purposes.

The traveler of the olden time had choice of two routes in crossing the State from east to west—one on the north side of the Missouri River, the other on the south side. The south road was most traveled and most noted.

The conveyances on the stage road were various and would seem curious at this day. Sturdy oxen plodded patiently along, drawing the heavy, bulky emigrant wagons, loaded with household effects, men, women and "oodles" of children; white-topped Conestoga wagons, hauled by powerful Pennsylvania teams with leather bands strung with tinkling bells about their shoulders; broad-wheeled Virginia wagons, the more pretentious Dearborn wagons; the light Carolina cart, to which was harnessed a single ox or sturdy horse; or the big Troy coach, pulled by four mettlesome steeds.

The entrance of a stage coach into the villages along the line was an exciting event. Half a mile or more from town the driver began heralding the approach with blast after blast upon a bugle, a joyous signal. Each time the welcome sound pealed forth women and children stood in the dooryards and men rushed to the halting place. The landlord at the tavern stood ready to receive the mail pouch and the travelers. There usually was but one inn in the towns where the stage stopped for a change of horses and to allow passengers to get meals.

A peculiar custom of the old-time tavern-keeper was that he always shook hands with every traveler who alighted from the coach. He was all smiles, and hospitality beamed from his welcoming countenance. One felt, on receiving this hearty greeting that he or she had found a friend in a strange land.

"Smiles" of another nature were in store for the weary traveler within the comfortable inn, and the masculine contingent usually halted there at the ever-present "bar." The barrooms of the old taverns had a door, always open, into the unpretentious reception-room, where the guests of all ages and sexes assembled, so it is needless to say that no carousing was permitted in what was then deemed an essential feature of the public hostelry.

Many wayside inns were far removed from any town, and usually were conducted by some thrifty farmer near the highway.

Can any old-time traveler by stage ever forget his emotion when he arrived on a cold winter evening at one of these old taverns, where cheer and comfort shone from the open doorway, giving a glimpse of the big log fire blazing on the ample hearth and the tempting aroma of boiling coffee, old ham broiling on the coals, spare ribs, country sausage and other delicious "vittles" greeting his olfactories; and later the fulfillment of the presage around the plain, neat tavern table.

One popular wayside inn on that old stage road was conducted by one who was known to all travelers on its route as "the big woman." She weighed 300 pounds or thereabouts, and though she shook the very rafters of her humble hostelry when she walked across the floor and could sit in only one chair in the house, and that one made to order, she was a thorough and competent hostess, and while generous in providing for the refreshment of her guests, would tolerate no foolishness or imposition from drivers or passengers. She provided abundant and toothsome repasts for her guests and comfortable, clean beds for their repose. But all stood in awe of the "big woman."

Col. Lewis of Saline county was another notable figure among the old-time innkeepers. This gentleman presented substantial promise of the good cheer awaiting patrons of his house. He was a man of magnificent physique, rotund and rosy, jolly and warm-hearted. The colonel owned and operated the first systematized stage route in the State, and brought to Missouri the first Troy coach, that comfortable and handsome vehicle so familiar in the old days to travelers in the public highways. The first Troy coach made its initial trip in 1838 or 1839 from Col. Lewis's tavern, near the Teetsaw plains, in Saline county, to Independence, and in it on this trip rode William McCoy, a pioneer merchant of Independence, and the town's first Mayor.

Another noted tavern on the stage road was in Lafayette county, kept by Mr. C. (I "das'ent" give the full name for fear the exceedingly "upity" descendants of that host would grow indignant because I divulged the fact that this forbear of theirs once kept a wayside inn.) This worthy landlord was noted for his inordinate curiosity, and it was said of him that he showed especial favors to those of his patrons who evinced a willingness to gratify his morbid inquisitiveness. A story was told of him that on one occasion a one-armed army officer, who had spent the night at this tavern, excited the host's curiosity to fever heat. He was frantic to know how the soldier lost his arm, and ventured many hints in that direction. But the officer did not see fit to gratify him. At last, as the guest, having paid his bill, mounted his horse shook hands with the landlord and started off, the curious man could stand it no longer. He ran after the military man and, overtaking him, held toward him the money just received for the officer's board and lodging.

"Colonel," he shouted, "if you will tell me how you lost your arm you needn't pay a cent for your entertainment."

"One other condition and I'll gratify your curiosity," replied the "colonel," "and that is, after I have told you, you will not ask me another question?"

"Agreed," said the host.

"Well, it was bitten off," laconically answered the guest as he took the money and his departure.

Every overland traveler on the well-known stage road in Western Missouri remembers Hambright's tavern, about twenty miles from Independence. The inn was an old-fashioned, commodious farmhouse, set well back from the road. This old-time tavern was "many a time and oft" a veritable harem of rest to worn pilgrims and provided satisfactory solace for the inner man of the hungry stage-coach travelers.

I have been in this inn when every available spot in the house was occupied by sojourners—women and children, merchants, politicians and travelers generally.

From Hambright's tavern by easy stages through shady wood or waving prairie, the coach reached Independence, "loveliest village of the plain." The coach horses dashed to the door of the tavern apparently as lively as at the hour of starting. There hearty hospitality met the travelers. There "Uncle" Wood Noland gave a cheery greeting and hearty handshake to each guest as he clambered from the huge Troy coach.

A few years later the stages completed the overland journey at Westport, where the Harris house gave ample and unexcelled entertainment to all sojourners in the then far West.

WITH THE GLOUCESTER FISHERM

The routine life on a mackerel schooner is not strenuous. The crew consists of fourteen men, a skipper and cook. Two men constitute a watch, one aloft as a lookout, the other at the wheel, so that each man has two hours on duty, and then twelve hours off, before his turn comes around again. During this period he may be called on to shorten sail, wash the deck or to perform other work. Half of the crew have their bunks forward with the cook, who is king of the forecastle, and the rest sleep aft with the captain. We were assigned to a double bunk aft, where we were not troubled by galley smells, but had to be on our good behavior. All the rolics and revels were forward. The crew ate in two shifts, the older men with the skipper.—[Travel Magazine.

London's Hospitals.

GREATEST IN WORLD AND DEPEND WHOLLY ON CHARITY.

By a Special Contributor.

LONDON, Sept. 5.—Andrew Carnegie's recent gift of $500,000 to the hospitals of London has come as a veritable godsend to those vast but needy institutions, which are the biggest and perhaps also the most remarkable of their kind in the world. Most Americans, no doubt, are under the impression that London's great "palaces of pain" which yearly treat millions of patients and are famous among the medical fraternity the world over, are, like most similar institutions at home, either endowed by wealthy founders or in receipt of state funds. As a matter of fact, however, London's hospitals are entirely "supported by voluntary contributions," and were it not for the donations of private persons and the general public, whose pennies even are acceptable—these institutions would have to close up.

It is owing to the fact that "the people" run the great London hospitals that the latter are operated on what, from the American point of view, must be regarded as rather astonishing lines. In the first place, no one but a genuinely poor patient is supposed to have access to any hospital in the metropolis. Of course, this rule is not adhered to rigidly; but exceptions to it are comparatively rare and are made only after elaborate explanations. The hospitals, in fact, are regarded as strictly charitable institutions; and it is for this reason that they are able to boast among their attending physicians some of the greatest practitioners—medical and surgical—in the world.

Any poor man, woman or child can go into a London hospital and be attended by the King's own physicians—Sir Thomas Barlow, Sir Frederick Treves, and others—absolutely free of charge. Operations which, in private practice, would involve thousands of dollars, are performed daily in many London hospitals by physicians who never charge less than $500 as a private consultation fee. It is owing to the fact that England's finest doctors and surgeons attend these hospitals for nothing that the interests of the poor have to be safeguarded. In order to do this, most of the hospitals have adopted the system of requiring letters from every patient who seeks any treatment that is likely to involve serious consequences. Of course, those whose poverty is beyond question, find ready and immediate access to any of the hospitals, and their treatment costs nothing. The middle classes, however, and the fairly well-to-do must be recommended by some one who contributes to the hospital funds before they can receive treatment.

As a general rule, outside of every London hospital is posted a conspicuous sign announcing the fact that treatment is for the "Poor Only," and advising people who can afford to pay to be attended privately. Naturally, if some such regulation were not made, the rich would flock to the hospitals in order to obtain assistance from the famous doctors who give their services freely in the cause of charity. A man with appendicitis, for instance, who might not have overmuch confidence in his family doctor, would not object to going into the East London Hospital—in the Whitechapel district—and being treated by Sir Frederick Treves. What would, in private practice, cost him perhaps $2000 or more, could be done in a London hospital for nothing.

In order to encourage the general public to take an interest in the hospitals, various sums are mentioned on the donation lists which entitle givers to certain privileges. For instance, on payment of $15,000 to a London hospital, the giver is, as a rule, entitled to have a ward named after him; while a donation of $5000 entitles one to endow a cot. Even payment of $25 allows the donor to name three or four patients for treatment at the particular hospital to which the money has been contributed. The sum of $150 includes the privileges of being a life governor to a hospital, to attend annual meetings and to recommend twenty-four out-patients and one in-patient a year.

By this elaborate system of donation, the London hospitals are kept going from year to year. Once every year two days are set apart when the whole of London is supposed to contribute something toward the care of the sick. These days are Hospital Sunday and Hospital Saturday. All the churches on the first-named day give the major portions of their collections to the hospitals; and on Hospital Saturday collections are made in the streets. Even the pennies of the multitude are eagerly accepted. On Hospital Sunday and Saturday in London the public gives generously to the fund that goes to help the suffering poor. Upward of $250,000 has been collected in one year in this manner.

Another great source of income to the London hospitals, and which also come under the head of "voluntary contributions" are the sums raised by what is known as King Edward's Hospital Fund for London. It is to this fund that Carnegie has just given his $500,000. Last year the total income of this fund was $554,775.

This fund was founded by King Edward ten years ago, and is one of His Majesty's most creditable hobbies. Every member of the royal family is supposed to contribute something to this fund, even down to the little princes and princesses. Of royal subscribers, King Edward gives annually $525; Queen Alexandra, $125; the Prince of Wales, $1500; Princess Victoria, $25; little Prince Edward, $5.25; while little Prince Albert, Princess Victoria of Wales, Prince Henry and Prince George each give $5.25. The total royal donations amount to about $2775. Of course, it might have been a trifle more, considering that the royal family of England draws from the British people every year about $2,500,000; but as the King and the Prince of Wales give their personal services to the fund, the generosity of the subscription itself should not, perhaps, be questioned.

One of the largest sources of wealth of the London hospitals are bequests by will. Recently, Mrs. Lewis-Hill, wife of the famous London pawnbroker, died and left $1,250,000 to the fund; Alfred Beit left $100,000, while George Herring, previous to his death, had contributed $450,000 to King Edward's Fund. In his will he left to the Hospital Fund a large sum of money which he had loaned the Salvation Army and also his splendid house in Park Lane.

To be mentioned as a heavy subscriber to the King Edward fund is considered a great honor in England. The fund undergoes the personal supervision of the King and the Prince of Wales, and the names of all donors—even of persons not sending more than $1.25—are printed in handsome booklets which come under the direct eye of His Majesty. Nevertheless, despite the temptation to seek personal advertisement by appearing in these gilt-edged lists, some donors are sufficiently self-abnegating not to allow their names to be mentioned. Recently an anonymous contribution of $50,000 was sent to the King Edward fund, and the name of the donor was known to none connected with the administration of the subscriptions.

Considering the extraordinary manner in which these funds are raised, it is quite a marvel that these great institutions should be able to keep going at all. It is from this very fact that London has come to be known as the most charitable city on earth.

Living as the hospitals do on the "voluntary contributions" of the multitude, it is not surprising to see great signs plastered across the buildings, appealing for "immediate aid." Nearly all the buildings bear permanently the words: "Supported by voluntary contributions," and each hospital has an elaborate system of appealing, which is in charge of a committee of publicity. Considering that money is always "urgently needed" by each of the great London hospitals, it is a wonder that the public do not weary of subscribing to funds which are practically a perpetual drain on their pockets. Occasionally, one sees notices on the outside of certain hospitals that wards have been closed for lack of operating expenses. Appeals of this kind are quickly responded to, and wards are not allowed to be closed for any great length of time. If the [illegible] come to the rescue, some private [illegible] who, by a single check, manages to [illegible] needed ward.

It is difficult for the American [illegible] the extent of some of these great [illegible] fering. St. Bartholomew's Hospital, [illegible] almost a small village itself. It is [illegible] densest portions of London, between the [illegible] office and Smithfield Market. It was [illegible] as A.D. 1123, by Rayhere, and refounded [illegible] in 1546. Many of the great London hospitals [illegible] grants of land from early Norman, [illegible] kings. The plots on which they rest are [illegible] from all taxation; or, if they pay any [illegible] it is usually of a nominal description—[illegible] shoe nails, or three grains of corn, per [illegible] tiquity of the land grants, and the [illegible] which they are devoted, make [illegible] among London's most venerated institutions.

It may well be imagined [illegible] possible case treated by medical science may be [illegible] a student attached to a hospital that [illegible] to 100,000 cases, or more, a year. [illegible] hospitals—such as Guy's—issue weekly [illegible] journals which are read by medical men [illegible] world. All the great physicians who attend [illegible] pitals give lectures free to the students, [illegible] medical journals the "interesting cases" [illegible] der their notice.

While most London hospitals are devoted [illegible] of human beings, there are many which [illegible] mals. There is scarcely a form of animal [illegible] which is not cared for on a grand scale [illegible] There are hospitals for dogs, [illegible] cats, white mice and other pets. It is for these reasons that the [illegible] ital has justly achieved the reputation of [illegible] world's most charitable city.

It has been roughly estimated that London [illegible] require an annual fund of something like [illegible] keep them going, and that upward of [illegible] the benefit of the treatment they afford.

Mr. Carnegie is by no means the [illegible] American who has assisted London [illegible] most among the great helpers in this [illegible] is the Duchess of Marlborough—formerly [illegible] derbilt. Johnny's Brother Jim.

Nan's Hero and Johnny's Prove to Be the Same.

By a Special Contributor.

NAN bent down into Johnny's upturned, eager face, with respectful attention.

"And did he really manage to do it, all by himself?" she inquired gravely.

Johnny wriggled a bit closer, regardless of the fact that his bare feet were leaving their dusty mark upon her gown.

"You bet your life he did. Sancho bucked and kicked and fought like the dickens, but Jim busted him all right. Gee! you ought to have seen that broncho tryin' to get rid of him. But it wasn't any use buckin' against the biggest man in Shasta county, and I guess he knew it, too, before Jim got through with him."

Johnny's eyes shone at the reminiscence. Nan shuddered with gratifying appreciation. She had seen Pete's wicked little broncho and had not been impressed with it.

"And so brother Jim busted Sancho, did he?" she said. "And what else can this wonderful brother do?"

Johnny straightened up enthusiastically. "Oh, I say," he burst out, "I clean forgot to tell you, he's just a crackerjack at football. Always plays end. Weighs a hundred 'n' eighty. Didn't you know that?"

Nan started. Once she had been very much interested in football men—ends in particular.

"Gee whiz, Jim, he's great on football. You just ought to see him grab the ball away from the other fellers, so—and stick his head down so, and prance down the field, so—buttin' over every feller that comes in his way—so," and Johnny illustrated with alarming vigor. "I saw him once, and I'm going to see him again. Say, don't you wish you could, too?"

There was no reply. Nan had become provokingly inattentive. With her dimpled chin sunk deep in her hands, she was gazing abstractedly into the pool of calm water before her. A most interesting picture had been vividly painted upon its still surface by Johnny's careless words—a background of gray sky, a muddy, trampled gridiron, a madly-waving mass of red, a howling, cheering crowd, and a girl hysterically sobbing: "He'd do it; I knew he'd do it!" An exhilarating memory, but it evidently brought no pleasure to Nan. The mournful little smile lurking about her lips deepened into bitterness.

Johnny waited patiently for reply, or comment. In a few seconds an injured expression commenced to steal over his freckled face. He scowled fiercely and dug his bare toes viciously into the soft carpet of pine needles. The silence continued. Unable to restrain himself longer, Johnny nudged her with repressed vigor.

"Say, ain't you listening? Don't you like to hear about my brother Jim? You said a minute ago to tell you about him. Why don't you say something?"

Nan aroused herself with difficulty.

"What did you say, Johnny? Of course I like to hear about him. You say he's only up here in the summer. Where is he the rest of the time?"

Johnny grunted scornfully. "Well, you are a stupid," he remarked frankly. "Hasn't any one told you about him? 'Course you have only been here two days, maybe you haven't had time to see it, and I guess Jim was wearin' his—he's just got back from a three days' trip—caught whoppers, too. Well, I suppose I'll have to tell you. He wears a red sweater with a great, big white "S" on it. Now do you know where he goes?"

Johnny drew back the better to view the effect of his momentous announcement upon his listener. The effect was all that Johnny could have desired—in truth, more. Nan started, turned pale, then flushed to the roots of her hair. The hands engaged in weaving pine needles began to tremble visibly. Even Johnny noticed her agitation.

"What's the matter with you now?" he ejaculated in disgust.

Nan controlled herself quickly.

"Why, nothing, of course," laughing shakily, "but, Johnny, I bought a package of chewing gum on the way out and forgot to give it to you till this minute." She fumbled hastily in her pocket and produced a dilapidated package of pepsin.

With a whoop of delight, Johnny pounced upon it. All other interesting emotions were forgotten. For some minutes nothing broke tne silence except the noisy enjoyment of Johnny over his gum.

"Say, Nannie," contentedly kicking his heels in the air, "didn't you ever go to school at Stanford, and didn't you ever know Jim?"

Nan, who had completely recovered, studied her wreath critically.

"Johnny, you know, dear, there are hundreds of men at Stanford, and Smith is an awfully common name."

"But he ain't no common Smith," persisted Johnny. "Everybody, Dicky Doane said so. Sure, didn't you know? Dicky said he was terrible sweet on a girl down there, and she up and threw him over. Dicky says he was awful cut up about it. I heard Sis tell her chum, you know, all about it. They were in the hammock in the front yard and I was digging for worms just behind the bushes—you bet they didn't know I was around. Oh, yes, I know why he lost his girl," and Johnny gazed elfishly up into the trees overhead. "Want to hear 'bout it?"

Nan nodded guiltily. There was a lump in her throat that forbade speech.

"Well, you see, it happened when all the Stanford folks went up to 'Frisco to play football. Jim, he was goin' to take her to the show afterwards. Well, you know we didn't do a thing but wipe up the ground with old Berkeley, and Sis said most of the fellers decided to go downtown and get happy. Now comes the part about Jim and the red-haired girl—did I say before she had red hair? She did, all right. Well, you know the Palace Hotel?"

Nan nodded again. She was listening breathlessly. Pleased with her attention, Johnny continued.

"Well, after supper she primped up and waited and waited and waited, but still Jim didn't turn up. Finally she had to start for the show with some girls and the chaperony. The girls told Sis afterward that they had to walk, and that just as they got pretty near there, round the corner came Jim, arm-in-arm with Paul Randall, and Paul was——" he looked apologetically at Nan—"well, howlin'—intoxicated. Well, sir, that red-haired girl just passed him at a gallop, head up two feet, and didn't speak or look at Jim. 'Course Jim tried to explain, but it wasn't no use. She snubbed him so hard he never got a chance. 'Sides, her ma got sick or something, and she had to quit school just a little while after, so you see Jim didn't have all the chances he might of had. Hope she don't ever come back. Any girl who'd treat a dandy football player like Jim that way——" and Johnny's face plainly expressed his scorn and disgust.

Nan's breath had quickened. She cleared her throat excitedly several times, started to speak and stopped. In a second she was quiet again.

"But you know, Johnny," she said slowly, "when a lady meets a man in an intoxicated condition on the street after he has failed to keep an appointment with her, there is really no explanation necessary."

For a full minute Johnny regarded her with withering contempt, then burst out:

"There you go again! Ain't that just like a girl? If she hadn't been so tearin' mad she'd have seen that Jim was as sober as a judge. Jim, he don't do that. That pesky Paul Randall was to blame fer it all. Jim was idiot enough to promise Paul's mother he'd look after him and keep him straight, 'cause Paul's father wasn't no ways of a winner, and she was afraid Paul would take after him. bein' a freshman and not havin' much sense at any time. So Jim, he promised, and when he found out that Paul had started out to do the town with an awful tough gang, all wore out as he was from the game, he started right out to look him up, and never stopped till he found him; he was takin' him to a safe place when he met the red-haired girl. No, sir, Jim never breaks a promise."

Johnny's voice seemed to come from a far-off distance. Nan stared stupidly at him. "Jim never breaks a promise."

The silence was becoming depressing. Johnny yawned several times, shied stones alternately at a chattering blackbird and an inquisitive squirrel, then rose lazily and picked up his can of worms and his pole.

"I'm goin' down to the Rapids and fish a while from Devil's Rock. Dicky Doane says they's lots of fish in them swirls. Say, got any more gum? I've chewed all the sweet out of this. Well, so long."

Half an hour later, Nan rose slowly and started in search of Johnny. Holding her skirts daintily to avoid chance briars and destructive thorns, she picked her way along the bank of the foaming mountain stream. The faint, far-away dash of the falls, a quarter of a mile below, became gradually more audible.

"Say, Miss Nan, where are you going, anyway?"

Nan looked up. Perched on a slippery rock, almost in the center of the rushing stream, was Johnny, ostensibly fishing. Nan gasped with surprise.

"Oh, Johnny, please don't fall off. Suppose you should slip! You could never get out of that swift water."

"Huh," grunted Johnny, keenly aware of the possibilities of the situation, "who's goin' to fall off? Girls are terrible 'fraid cats. Just look here."

Johnny arose and performed an impromptu and perilous clog dance upon his doubtful footing. Nan screamed faintly. Pleased and satisfied, Johnny reseated himself.

"Say, a feller fell off this rock just last spring. Current carried him down. Couldn't swim against it. Went over the falls. Mashed to a jelly, when they found him."

He grinned cheerfully at sight of Nan's horrified face.

"Oh, Johnny, please come off of there," she pleaded.

"Naw—won't—'fraid cat," began Johnny, then started guiltily and stopped.

"Guess I will," sheepishly. "There comes Jim down the hill. He said he'd lick the stuffin's out o' me if he caught me on this rock again. Say, now, don't be a pincher and tell on me, will you?"

Nan turned hastily. A tall, athletic figure clad in corduroys, sweater and sombrero was swinging down the hill toward the river. Clearly, he had not seen the couple at the water's edge. Nan looked wildly about for a way of escape, then breathed a sigh of relief. He was turning off to the left.

A shriek from behind caused her to wheel about in dismay. Johnny, prodded by the pangs of conscience and the fear of the promised "licking," had scrambled too hastily for the first stepping stone, missed his footing, and plunged into the seething pool below. For a second Nan stood paralyzed. She could not swim! Like a flash she turned and dashed through the bushes.

"Jim, Jim," she called frantically.

The man turned so quickly that she barely escaped running into his arms.

"Why, Nan," he exclaimed, "what——"

"Johnny fell off Devil's Rock. He——"

Already he had passed her, throwing off his coat as he ran. In two bounds, it seemed to Nan's excited fancy, he reached the river. He glanced quickly around. Johnny had risen and, though fighting lustily, was being borne rapidly down stream. The man on the bank plunged in, and, half swimming, half wading, made for the little black head bobbing up and down like the float of a fishing line. Nan, on the bank, plunged recklessly through brambles and stumbled heedlessly over boulders, but kept them in sight. The sound of the falls grew nearer. Nan's heart almost stopped beating. Once Jim grasped the collar of Johnny's blue shirt. The cloth slipped through his fingers. A great sob caught at Nan's throat. If Jim should go over the falls, and she hadn't told him yet that she was sorry, that it was all her fault, that she had been the worst kind of a little fool; that she wanted him back; that——

With a mighty effort the man lunged forward and caught the struggling boy about the shoulders. Putting forth all his strength, he commenced the struggle for the bank. Nan, half crazed by the sound of the falls in her ears, ran out into the water up to her knees. It seemed ages to her before Jim emerged from the grip of the main current into the quieter waters near the bank. Almost at Nan's feet, he stumbled. She leaned forward and dragged the choking and sputtering Johnny from his unresisting arms. A minute later she was rolling and shaking him on the sand. Jim waded wearily ashore. He walked over to her and stood gazing down upon the now recovering Johnny. Nan looked up. The brambles had scratched her face, torn down her hair and ripped the soft dress to shreds. Her hat hung over one ear and her skirts clung in wet folds about her knees. She glanced hurriedly away. He did look so shamefaced and puzzled, standing there in his dripping clothes, a weed dangling from his hair over his brown face.

In a moment, all unconscious of her own plight, she must surely have laughed at his. He bent awkwardly and set the water-soaked Johnny on his feet. Nan rose slowly. The desire to laugh had suddenly left her. She raised imploring eyes to Jim's face. His own were startled and incredulous. The blood rushed hotly into his face. For one long instant he hesitated—then took an impulsive step toward her, and held out both hands. Johnny, thus abruptly deprived of his support, lurched dizzily, and lowered himself to a nearby rock. Once safely seated, he grinned knowingly up into the two eager faces above him.

"Say, Jim, didn't I tell you she was a peach?" he exclaimed triumphantly, "and she can't help it if her hair is red."

ALICE RICHARDS.

TO THE EUCALYPTUS TREES.

Ye are the crown of the summit,
  Slender and strong and tall,
While clear against the grassy earth
  Your trembling shadows fall.

Ye stand for years in your lofty strength,
  Unbent by the winds that blow,
Till some mighty gust breaks the wooden heart,
  And defeated, your pride is laid low.

Still art you kings of the forest,
  For your children in might still stand
Like a gloomy army; in somber array
  They cover the sunset land.

A lookout party is stationed here,
  And a regiment stands on the hill,
With a stately monarch your captain—
  Ye are the king's army still.

On yon crested hill like sentinels
  You guard the city below,
While through your silver-lined, rustling leaves
  Shines the lavender after-glow.

And anon, as the gentle twilight
  O'er the sea and land softly creeps,
Like taps, come the bells of the mission,
  Then silence—the army sleeps.

BEATRICE WEYMOUTH.

WHY'S HE'S CALLED UNCLE.

"Want to get your overcoat out, eh? My, but you're early," said the pawnbroker.

Then, as he unwrapped the coat from its tar-paper wrapping, he pointed to a steel hook of antique aspect that hung above a mirror.

"That is a curio," he said. "It is an old pawnbroker's hook, an article used by all our craft in the seventeenth century. Counters, to prevent theft, were very wide then, twice as wide as now; and what you extended over those wide counters the broker hooked in with this instrument.

"The hook, which was once as much our badge as the three balls, gave rise to the expression 'uncle' as connected with the pawnbroker. The Latin for hook, you know, is uncus. Uncus—uncle. See?"

KITE FIGHTS.

The Japanese and Chinese love kite fights. In a kite fight the kite strings are coated with a preparation of powdered glass that gives them, all along their length, tiny saw teeth; and the object is for one string to fall saw-like over another so as to cut it.

Great skill is displayed in these fights. Young men handle their kites wonderfully, steering them here and there in a way unheard of outside the Orient. A kite, as if alive, suddenly darts down and to the left, it crosses the track of another kite, the two strings come together with a humming sound, and in a jiffy the under kite, its cord broken, falls like a shot bird to the ground.

A Japanese or Chinese expert thinks nothing of sending up a kite so that for hours it shall fly directly above his head.

Old Santa Fe.

INTERESTING RELICS OF DAYS LONG GONE BY.

By a Special Contributor.

SANTA FE, New Mexico, the second oldest European settlement, and the oldest capital city, in the United States, is an interesting little city. It is probable, in fact, that no other city within the borders of the Union possesses so many attractions for tourists, and especially for those who find interest in architectural creations, as does this little city of the "Holy Faith." At least, abounding as it does with some of the most antiquated relics of early colonization in America, and possessing representation of each succeeding period of architectural progress up to the present day, the modern Santa Fé affords opportunities for those who love to study by contrasts and comparisons which are equalled nowhere else.

In the year 1540, Coronado, in search of the seven fabled cities of Cibola, discovered where today stands Santa Fé, an Indian pueblo—a village that, according to his estimate, possessed about 1500 persons. The city of Santa Fé today has a population of over 6000. At the time of its discovery Coronado gave it the ponderous name, "La Ciudad Real de la Santa Fé de San Francisco," meaning "The Royal City of the Holy Faith of St. Francis." It was then simply a dirty, dilapidated village of adobe huts, inhabited by Indians. Today it is a modern little city, possessing telephone systems, electric lights and waterworks, and having three railroads, each of course accompanied by its telegraph wires. It has good schools and colleges, church buildings for nearly every leading religious denomination, a public library and an ambitious historical society. It has a new capital building and a new Federal building, and its business houses are up-to-date in every respect.

But even the Santa Fé of today tells a story that is not of the modern city alone. Mingling with its present-day architecture, one finds straggling aggregations of low adobe huts and the crumbling ruins of antique forts that tell of times long past. There still stands the old house in which Coronado is said to have lodged in 1540. It is built of adobe, and, although it is entitled to be called "the oldest house in the United States," a Mexican family still calls it their home.

Then, too, there is the oldest church in America still standing just across a narrow lane south from this old house, also built of adobe. It was built shortly after Coronado's visit to this territory, by Catholic friars, and today it is still used occasionally as a house of worship. Several times it has been almost demolished by revolting Indians, but each time its walls have been repaired. Its most notable experience, however, was during the revolt of 1680, in which it suffered all but complete destruction, and from which it did not fully recover until 1710. Compared with some of our modern cathedrals, this old adobe creation, called the St. Miguel Church, is indeed a curious and interesting relic.

Even older than this "oldest church" in present appearance, however, is the Chapel Rosario, which stands on an eminence a mile west of the city. This chapel, with its unornamental adobe walls and its belfry of tin, was built about 1693 by Diego de Vargas in honor and glorification of "Our Lady of the Rosary." The city of Santa Fé, a dozen years before this, had been captured by revolting Indians under Popé, and on September 13, 1692, De Vargas began the eleven-day siege that resulted in its recovery to the Spanish. He had prayed to the Virgin Mary for assistance, and because of success in the siege he caused the erection of the chapel to stand as a monument.

Despite all of these other interesting relics of the past days, however, the "Adobe Palace," as it is called, is considered Santa Fé's principal attraction. It is a one-story adobe structure that extends an entire block along the north side of the city's famous plaza, occupying the center of the business section, in which Gen. Kearney first set up, in 1846, the Stars and Stripes over New Mexico. The "Palace" was built about 1598, and since then it has housed eighteen American and seventy-six Spanish and Mexican rulers of the Territory. It was in one of the middle rooms of this building that Gen. Lew Wallace, while Governor, from 1879 to 1880, wrote the greater part of his widely-read "Ben Hur." The "Palace" is in an almost perfect state of preservation to this day and all parts of it are in use, one end being made use of for the postoffice and the other for the headquarters of the historical society. The center rooms, during the writer's recent visit to Santa Fé, were occupied by the Governor's secretary, and the famous "Ben Hur" room was made to serve as the family's dining-room.

Other things of interest of other days in and around Santa Fé, which may be briefly mentioned, are: The Cathedral of San Francisco, erected by Gov. and Mrs. Del Valle in 1761; the old Church of "Our Lady of Light;" the old government or capital building, built of adobe, and standing just across the street from the "Adobe Palace;" the earthworks of old Fort Marcey, which marks the spot of many a bloody conflict, and the crumbling ruins of the Spanish garita, which stands a short distance north of the city—the only remains of such a fortification now in existence in the United States, and by whose western wall four leaders of the revolution of 1837 were executed by order of Gen. Armijo.

In South Santa Fé, called Analco by the Spaniards, amidst the adobe ruins of the old city, and where are located the "old house" and old St. Miguel Church, one also finds a people today that well match these surroundings—a people that is probably a true counterpart of the inhabitants of two and a half centuries ago. They know no other language than Spanish, although they, and their parents before them, have always been citizens of the United States; and in their mode of living they resemble a colony of the New Spain of years ago.

But despite all of these relics of the old, the new Santa Fé, which nestles on a broad, rich plain within the embrace of encircling mountains whose peaks tower to heights of 10,000 and 12,000 feet, is an up-to-date and business-like city—a city that holds the unique distinction of having been the capital of a Territory longer than any city of the United States has been the capital of a State. And although many persons may feel inclined to smile at the crudeness of these "old huts" of Santa Fé and other cities of the southwest, it is interesting to students of American architecture to note that adobe or sun-dried brick, today often called concrete, is being largely used for homebuilding purposes, and incidentally that many localities other than this little city of the "Holy Faith," founded historically in 1592, possess their "adobe palaces." The one of Santa Fé has stood the weathering of time so well that it is easy, too, to see wisdom in the modern architect's move.

HOUSE OF THE GOLDEN CUPIDS.

A RECENT AND INTERESTING DISCOVERY IN THE BURIED CITY OF POMPEII.

The plan of Prof. Waldstein for the excavation of Herculaneum at international expense has unfortunately failed owing to the objections of the Italian government. But it is to be remembered that not all of Pompeii has yet been uncovered and that excavations are now going on in that city from which so many treasures of antiquity have already been recovered. It is possible that any day there may be heralded the discovery of some new treasure which will either give a new sample of ancient art or a new key to ancient history and Roman life since Pompeii was thoroughly Romanized. Last year, says a writer in the Springfield Republican, a remarkably interesting discovery was made when the so-called house of the Golden Cupids was uncovered.

The House of the Golden Cupids, or the "New House," is, as the guide will tell you, the most recent excavation at Pompeii and was opened in 1906. If memory is not at fault it is located in section 16 of region [illegible] corner where the Vicolo di Mercurio [illegible] Strada Stabiane, and directly across the [illegible] unexcavated region five at the northeast [illegible] city. By studying the crumbling bank [illegible] men at this point the traveler readily [illegible] colored layers of material that spread a [illegible] Roman city beginning with and subsequent [illegible] eruption of 79. That the excavation is a [illegible] evident from the fact that Baedeker of [illegible] mention of the "New House," and a [illegible] among books and periodicals appearing [illegible] failed to bring to light any writings bearing [illegible]

The "New House" does not differ [illegible] size, perhaps, from the homes of other [illegible] ans already uncovered. A few hours in the [illegible] of only a hurried inspection, and unless the [illegible] conscious of the importance of some [illegible] tion—as he was not in this case—description [illegible] ory is apt to err. Passing in from the street [illegible] at once enters the peristyle, which has a [illegible] around its four sides, and off which open [illegible] to the living and sleeping-rooms of the house. [illegible] portion of the peristyle is enclosed with a [illegible] protect the flower garden growing there, [illegible] did 2000 years ago. Along the two sides of the [illegible] in straight lines are several marble heads [illegible] pedestals; broken statues and marbles, on the [illegible] and in the center a marble basin, probably the [illegible] of a fountain. The north loggia is reached [illegible] peristyle through the center arch by [illegible] stone steps, or by two steps from the side [illegible] it will be observed that suspended directly [illegible] is a marble or plaster medallion flanked by [illegible] Beyond this are rooms having remnants of [illegible] and wall paintings in a fair state of preservation.

The golden cupids, from which the house [illegible] name, are in a room on the right or east side of [illegible] style and are the most carefully-guarded [illegible] "New House." The chamber had evidently [illegible] as a sleeping apartment—possibly for children—[illegible] three sides of it are indentations of perhaps [illegible] the plaster, four or five inches in diameter, [illegible] a ship's porthole, and are covered with glass. [illegible] back of each is a beautiful cupid in gold [illegible] one, however—that on the left of the entrance—[illegible] perfect condition. The one opposite is without [illegible] half, and the one at the end of the room is [illegible] destroyed. With the wall paintings, traces of [illegible] still remain, these dainty results of some artist's [illegible] work must have delighted the eyes of little [illegible] as they sparkled in the brilliant sunlight [illegible] dark day so many centuries ago when the little [illegible] city was blotted out. The iron gate leading [illegible] is always locked, and only those accompanied [illegible] nized authorities on Pompeii, whose standing [illegible] entry everywhere, are permitted to enter.

CONGO WILES.

An ivory dealer uttered a cry of rage.

"Done again," he said. "Done out of [illegible]"

And he laid aside of the tusks from the [illegible] that he had been examining.

"It is ballasted with lead," he said. "That [illegible] mon Congo trick. The native, when he [illegible] big tusk of eighty pounds or so, melts up [illegible] pounds of lead, and pours it down into the [illegible] low. He fills it, so to speak, as a dentist [illegible]

"We dealers know the dodge, and every [illegible] over carefully for a lead filling. My new [illegible] is rather careless, and this is the second [illegible] has been worked off on him in the last [illegible]"

The dealer's frown vanished, and he smiled.

"Of course the trader, and not I, will have to [illegible] loss," he said.

Pinkerton's Luck.

NARROW ESCAPES OF FAMOUS DETECTIVE WHO DIED RECENTLY.

From New York Tribune.

THE sudden death of Robert A. Pinkerton the other day while on a health-seeking voyage to Europe was of particular interest in the big penitentiaries of the United States. There is no Federal prison in the country, and hardly a State prison, which does not hold one or more prisoners who owe their capture more or less directly to him. "Pinkerton is dead!" ran from tier to tier, and the big criminals heaved a sigh of relief. They hope to get out some day, and the fear of Robert A. Pinkerton was stronger in their breasts than the fear of the law. They will still have his brother, William, to reckon with, but of the two sons of Allan Pinkerton, the famous Civil War secret service man, Robert was the most feared. His knowledge of criminal faces was almost uncanny in its extent and accuracy, and his keenness in determining the work of old hands from the way the job was done was almost as if they had left their business cards behind.

The big detective jobs which Robert A. Pinkerton directed and participated in—the overthrow of the Molly Maguires and the Homestead riots, for instance—have been revived in public memory by the obituary notices recently published: "There are, however, scores of instances of "Bob's" personal daring and persistency which have never been published. Sentence of death had been passed on him times without number by criminals whose arrest he had accomplished. He had been ambushed, shot at and waylaid time and again, but never received as much as a pin scratch from criminal hands.

He had just entered Notre Dame (Ill.) University when the Civil War broke out, and he hurried to join his father in the government secret service. After the war, with his father and brother, who survives him, he took up man hunting in the middle West, where train and bank "sticking" and daring "holdups" were the amusement and source of livelihood of many wild bands which had been formed to harass the enemy's rear in the long struggle between the North and the South.

The Pinkertons first turned their attention to suppressing an epidemic of train robberies in Indiana. The Jeffersonville and Indianapolis Railroad, now a part of the Pennsylvania system, was particularly unfortunate, and the Adams Express Company the chief loser. The Pinkertons discovered that a gang headed by the Reno brothers was responsible for most of these robberies, and that their bad example caused other wild spirits to form train-robbing bands.

After the Reno Band.

"Robbery after robbery occurred," said William A. Pinkerton recently in discussing the phase of their activity, "but the powerful influence of the Renos and their intimidations made conviction next to impossible. Farmers supposed to be inimical to the band and their friends were terrorized, had their cattle poisoned and maimed, and their homes and barns burned, and practically a reign of terror existed over all Southern Indiana."

After the Reno brothers had robbed the County Treasurer's office at Gallatin, Mo., of $20,000, Robert A. Pinkerton evolved a scheme which resulted in their first capture. John Reno, leader of the band, had returned to Seymour, Ind., not fearing extradition from his stronghold. Pinkerton had a detective decoy him to the railway station by a ruse. A train came in on which were six deputies of the Missouri Sheriff. They seized on Reno and pulled him on board the train. There was no time for habeas corpus or any other legal remedy to prevent his removal. The wires were cut so no detaining dispatches could get ahead of the train and Reno was kept on the jump until he was landed in jail at Gallatin. He was sentenced to [illegible] years in the penitentiary, and served every day of the time.

One of the most dangerous bandit pursuits which Robert A. Pinkerton led in person and which will long be remembered at the Pinkerton headquarters followed the raiding expedition of the James and Younger bands.

It was on June 3, 1871, that the combined bands of outlaws visited Corydon, Wayne county, Ia., having learned that the County Treasurer had a large store of newly-collected taxes. Jesse James entered the Treasurer's office, asking for change for a $100 bill. "The Treasurer has the combination of the safe," said the man in charge, suspecting nothing, "and he's attending a meeting out in the grove. They're talking about the building of a new schoolhouse."

Jesse was going out after the county official, when the clerk remarked that a new bank had opened across the street and that he could probably get change there. Jesse led the gang across the street, and at the point of their revolvers got $15,000, half the bank's capital, which had just been deposited. As they were going out of the door they met a negro preacher coming to open an account. He had his money in his hand, and they made him drop it into their saddlebags.

In their dash out of town they passed the scene of the public meeting. They informed the school committee that the Corydon Bank had just been robbed and advised the villagers that they'd better hurry back to town and start a new bank.

The James Hunt.

The case was given to Robert A. Pinkerton, still a youth, by his father. He organized a posse and followed the trail of the outlaws through the lower Iowa counties. Just before the Missouri line was reached all the posse except an Iowa Sheriff decided they had had enough hard riding, and returned home.

The Sheriff and Pinkerton rode on together as far as Cameron Junction, a cross-road station. Then, on the excuse of getting more help, the Sheriff turned back. Pinkerton rode on alone into the heart of the bandit country. With his life in his hands he followed the band to the home of the James boys, in Clay county, determined where they had crossed the Missouri River after separating and located the Old Blue Mill, where they all came together again. Having identified the robbers, Pinkerton decided to wait for a more favorable opportunity for their capture.

Three years later Joseph Witcher, one of Pinkerton's most trusted detectives, was captured by Jesse James in the vicinity, bound with ropes and killed while bound. "Bob" Pinkerton never let up on the members of this band, and the three Younger brothers were finally surrounded in a swamp, captured and sentenced to life imprisonment at Stillwater, Minn. "Bob" Younger died in prison in 1899, and Cole and "Jim" Younger were pardoned in 1901. Cole committed suicide in St. Paul a year later. Jesse James was shot in the back by "Bob" Ford, a former member of the James gang. Ford was sentenced to death, but was pardoned by the Governor of Missouri and received the $10,000 reward which hung over Jesse James's head. Frank James gave himself up and was acquitted of the Gallatin Bank robbery. Gov. Crittendon refused to surrender him to the Minnesota authorities, and the last "Bob" Pinkerton heard of him was that he was leading an honest life in Western Missouri.

One of Robert A. Pinkerton's narrowest escapes from death followed his capture of Levy Farrington, one of a band who had held up and robbed a Mobile and Ohio express train near Farmington, Ill. Pinkerton took his man to Union City, Tenn., for trial. A "bad man" named Toler, one of the members of the gang, attempted to rescue Farrington. He shot at Pinkerton, who had the bandit in charge, but the bullet struck and killed an assistant city marshal. In an endeavor to escape Toler killed a railroad watchman before he was finally captured.

A vigilance committee was speedily formed to lynch Toler and the train robbers. Pinkerton determined to rescue the men, and did succeed in getting two of the band out of town. The vigilantes, however, shot and killed Farrington and lynched Toler.

Pinkerton was instrumental in running down the chief of the band who used dynamite on an express car on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railroad in 1891. He learned that Adelbert Sly, a former driver for the American Express Company, was living in Los Angeles under the name of Delabert Elys. Pinkerton arrested the man in the Los Angeles postoffice when he called for a letter which the detectives had addressed to him. After working on the man for several days Pinkerton secured a complete confession from Sly, who declared he had met the other members of the band while serving a sentence in the Missouri penitentiary.

Once He Was Fooled.

"Bob" Pinkerton had perhaps the largest collection of threatening letters ever addressed to one man in this country. He saved many of the interesting ones and showed them to his friends. No matter how dire a fate the letters pictured he was never disturbed. Among others who threatened his life in letters was "Pat" Crowe, who became notorious as the kidnaper of Eddie Cudahy, son of the Omaha packer, for which crime he was acquitted, through some strange miscarriage of western justice. Crowe blamed the Pinkertons for his imprisonment for robbing a Chicago, Burlington and Quincy train, near St. Joseph. He wrote from the Missouri State Prison, but like most of the writers never followed up his threats.

Possessing a keen sense of humor, "Bob" Pinkerton loved a joke, and did not hesitate to tell a story on himself. Shortly before he sailed for Europe he related this tale of a hoax played by four young men who were fellow-passengers on a train from Chicago.

"My attention was attracted to the quartette in the smoking compartment of the Pullman," said Mr. Pinkerton, "because three of them were carefully pouring the drinks which they took from a quart bottle into the cuspadore when the fourth was not looking. This fourth fellow had a great deal of valuable jewelry about his person, and was obviously very drunk. I watched their maneuvers quietly for some time.

"Finally to my surprise and indignation I saw one of them take a vial from his pocket and pour ten drops into the drink which was intended for the chap with the jewelry. It was the most brazen and daring case of 'knockout drops' I had ever encountered.

"Now, you might suppose that it was up to me right then to 'cut in,' but it wasn't. A man can't get the full punishment for 'knockout drops' until they have actually been administered. So I kept my hand out of the business until I could see the end of the play.

"The youth who had handled the vial handed the 'doped' drink to the intoxicated chap, who drank it greedily. Then he gradually sank into a stupor, yielding to the effects of the drug. His mouth hung open and he was helpless. Then the three actually began to strip their victim of the jewelry.

"I reached the door of the smoking compartment in three jumps.

" 'Pretty coarse work, sons,' I said, just showing them the gun I had in my hands, but not leveling it at them. 'I am surprised that you are so foolish as to think that you can get away with the goods in such a fashion. My name is Pinkerton, and the three of you can consider yourselves under arrest.'

"The young fellow who was being robbed slumbered on, with his mouth wide open, and the other three looked terribly alarmed. Their faces got red and they began to reproach each other.

" 'I told you he was Pinkerton,' one of them said, bitterly.

" 'Even if Pinkerton wasn't on the train we ought to have known better,' moaned the second youth.

" 'What are you going to do with us?' demanded the third.

" 'I am going to take the lot of you to jail at the next stop,' I said; 'and I can give it to you pretty straight that you are in a whole lot of trouble.'

"Then the 'unconscious victim' could hold in no longer. He jumped up and let out a roar, then he fell back in his seat and fairly shook with laughter. The other three likewise toppled into their chairs and moaned with joy.

"Well, it didn't need a rear-end collision to make me see how these four young reprobates had fooled me. They offered me a drink out of the quart bottle, which contained nothing worse than tea which the porter had secured for them in the dining car. The user of the 'knockout' drops drained the vial before my eyes, remarking, with a smile, that he had never tasted better spring water in his life. They were four college youths who recognized me from pictures which they had seen in the papers, and they fixed up the joke on me. I bit, and bit hard. I didn't say a word, but silently conducted them to the buffet car and told them it was all on me."

Efforts to Murder Him.

"Bob" Pinkerton was best known about New York from his close connection with the metropolitan race tracks. His men guard all the big tracks, from watching the behavior of jockeys after hours to turning away known crooks at the gates. "Bob" Pinkerton himself was accustomed to watch over the paddock, and nothing that was off color escaped him. He also strolled through the betting ring two or three times each day on the lookout for light-fingered pickpockets who might have escaped his sentries at the gates.

In July of last year there was an alleged attempt to assassinate Pinkerton at the Sheepshead Bay race track. He was standing at the rail near the finish line with John T. Fowles, of Buffalo, one afternoon. An enormous crowd was cheering the finish of an important race. Suddenly Fowles put his hand to his forehead, reeled and fell. A bullet had plowed along his skull, narrowly escaping penetrating his brain. No report was heard owing to the noise, and no trace of the assassin was found. The attempt was laid at the door of the pool-room interests, who were bitter at Pinkerton for having bottled up the racing news.

"Steve" L'Hommedieu, the once famous track plunger, tried to kill "Bob" Pinkerton in Lamothe's French restaurant in New Orleans in 1901, and was only prevented from settling an alleged score by the activity of the proprietor, who wrested the gun away. The big French Canadian had been threatening to harm Pinkerton for having driven him off eastern tracks for some time, when he came across his man sitting at a table in the restaurant.

"You had me ruled off down East, didn't you?" growled L'Hommedieu, preparing to draw.

Pinkerton was unarmed, but never flinched.

"Yes, I did," he replied quietly. "I chased you away because you were corrupting jockeys and owners and were caught with the goods on."

The Canadian plunger was dragged away before he had a chance to shoot, and his gun confiscated.

" 'Bob' Pinkerton luck!' was the verdict of the racing crowd, and it lasted to the end, for he died an easy and natural death, though perhaps the strain of his work brought on an earlier end.

CATS' STRANGE MISSION.

Twelve cats embarked on Saturday on board the steamship Kincraig, at Victoria Docks, London, bound for India, on the strangest mission on which cats ever went. They are going to make a fight against the plague, and to try to succeed where medical science has met with not very great success.

The cats were embarked under the care of the Salvation Army authorities, and came from a cats' home at Hammersmith. They are being sent to the army colony at Muktipa, under the special care of a Russian member of the army.

Each cat has a separate cage. Their menu on the voyage is likely to meet with their entire approval. Large tins of sardines have been taken for their exclusive use, as well as tins of herrings, fifteen large tins of condensed milk, some tinned New Zealand mutton, forty pounds of rice, and, among a variety of other delicacies, several boxes of puppy biscuits.

If the experiment is at all successful, more cats may follow. The Plague Commission in India proved last year that plague is spread by rat fleas. The cats will, it is hoped, gradually kill the rats, and thus eventually exterminate the chief medium by which the bacillus is communicated from one being to another.

But it remains to be seen whether or not in killing the infected rats the cats will themselves get the plague, and one bacteriologist has given it as his opinion that the liability in this respect is very great.—[London Mail.

HOW A MIX-UP IN MSS. PRODUCED A LOVE STORY.

By a Special Contributor.

"DWAYNE—!" Bessie paused for an instant on the threshold of her brother's library before advancing further into the room. She was a little breathless from her run up the stairs. In one hand she carried the moning's mail—a lage bundle of papers, magazines and a score or so of letters; the other hand held in solitary conspicuousness a single 4x9 white envelope. This she waved accusingly at her brother as he rapidly crossed the room to his desk.

"Dwayne—!" she began again, "the 'Age'. has returned your story—and after their asking you to write it, too! The very idea of their daring to treat you this way! If I were you I'd never write another line for them as long as I lived!" Bessie was very indignant; her blue eyes snapped and there was a sharp line between her eyebrows.

Dwayne Perry laughed. He was used to these little outbursts on the part of his only and very devoted sister.

"It's all right, Bess," he said reassuringly, reaching out for the envelope; "it's only sent back for correction. I met Duplay on the street yesterday, and he reminded me of the fact that they had asked for a Thanksgiving story, and I seemed to have overlooked that interesting point entirely."

Bessie turned and walked a few steps toward the door. "I thought it was funny," she said, "for them to treat you that way. It would have been different if you were an amateur, but a man of your position and——" She paused for the proper word; then, as another thought came into her mind, she dropped the first altogether and proceeded with the expression of the last idea. "Did either of the applicants suit? Mary said two applied this morning."

Dwayne smiled and shook his head.

"What was the trouble? Too much pompadour or too little grammar?"

Dwayne's smile broadened into a hearty laugh. "A little of both," he answered.

Again Bessie came back to the desk. "In that case I really ought to stay and help you, and I would if Mrs. D'Auber hadn't sent for me this morning for a [illegible]. Is there anything very important?"

"Oh, no," Dwayne replied carelessly; "a few business letters which can wait, and a dozen or so requests for autographs——"

"Which certainly will keep," Bessie interposed.

"Besides," her brother rejoined, "I must fix up that manuscript for Duplay. The magazine goes to press in a few days."

"I'm so glad you won't need me, then," Bessie said, tapping her brother lightly on the forehead, "because after the fitting Maud and I are going out to luncheon, and then this afternoon Madam Cerise has her millinery opening, and things are so picked over if you wait."

"No, I won't need you at all today," Dwayne replied, experiencing a feeling of relief that he would be free of Bessie's chatter for the whole of the day. "It will take me most of the time to fix up the story. Don't stay home on my account."

Ever since his last secretary had left him suddenly to be married, Dwayne Perry had been without that most important adjunct to a literary man, excepting for what little help in the way of answering letters his sister had been able to give him. The really necessary part of the work, the typing of manuscripts, the arranging of notes, etc., had been left undone until now a formidable array of matter awaited the coming of the next incumbent of that office.

Two secretaries had applied and gone away disappointed. Was he hard to suit or was the quality of the material furnished poor? He asked himself this question many times, and each time it went unanswered.

After Bessie had gone he cleared his desk with a few [illegible], and then running the cutter around the edge of the envelope proceeded to draw out the typewritten sheets of the returned manuscript. At the first touch of the paper his experienced fingers warned him something was wrong; the quality was inferior to that he invariably used. He unfolded the sheets. Instead of his own story with the title, "The House Divided," neatly typed and correctly spaced across the quarter way down, were the words, "Love's Repentance," at the very top of the page in too close proximity to the name and address in the upper left-hand corner.

An exclamation of annoyance broke from him. "How provoking!" he cried, "they've sent me some one else's manuscript!" He took the offending sheets, folded them together and threw them savagely into the farthest corner of his desk, then he sat moodily staring at the rows and rows of pigeonholes which confronted him, filled to the utmost with the tools and accessories of his profession.

His outline for the day's work had been ruined, and simply due to the stupid carelessness of some one in the "Age" office. He was restless, otherwise he would have dismissed the matter for the time being until it could be straightened out, and gone resolutely to work on something else. There was always material at hand to tax the sum of his capabilities, but this morning he was [illegible] from some unaccountable reason, and resentful at things which he somehow felt were combining to annoy him; the unsuitableness of the applicants for the position he needed filled so badly and the frothiness of his sister which prevented him from leaning upon her to any very great extent. Then, too, there was the overmastering desire to be about the writing of his next book, which he had already blocked out, but which he felt he could not go on with until the way was cleared of all detail matter, and the routine of his life once more reduced to perfect order.

Presently, swayed by an impulse of idle curiosity, he reached over and drew the offending sheets again to him. It was the undoubted work of an amateur. The very title, with its suggestiveness of yellow-backed novels, told him that; the error in judgment made in sending it to a magazine of the "Age's" high standing served to enforce this idea also. He read the opening paragraph, then skipped to the middle of the next page, then to the page following that, and from that on to the ending. It had all the four besetting sins of the novice: lack of plot, inconsistency, lack of originality, and inversion. The real beginning was in the middle of the third page.

With an air of weariness slightly tinged with superciliousness, he laid the sheets down. The world was full of such writers; the markets were glutted with their attempts. How could people expect to sell such stuff? But they did, otherwise there would not be so much of it going the rounds. With him it had been different. He had learned to write before he had ever laid even the foundation of a story, and his success had been sure from the first, not as rapid as some, but steadier, and he had climbed up and up until he stood almost alone, looking down on a world of pygmies he had left far behind.

Of course he had had his disappointments. What writer hasn't? And at the memory of them a sudden wave of pity came surging up for those others whose disappointments were necessarily so much more poignant than his. He had never been in a position when the acceptance of a manuscript meant bread, and there were many to whom it did. Perhaps even this little futile attempt that had come to him would have meant the relieving of want if only it had found a place.

Again he reached for the sheets, but this time when he scanned the pages he did so with a new purpose. To him, marvelous reader and interpreter of character, the sheets unfolded all their secrets. The name, Edith Muybridge, and the address below it, told him not only the sex of the writer and her place of habitation, but many things besides, supplemented by the lines beneath; the uneven alignment, the imperfect letters, the old ribbon. Then there was the story itself; improperly told, as he had said, and lacking in originality, but breathing of a personality as rare as the evasive perfume of the woodland violet. Poverty might be there, the street and number and the worn-out machine told him that; lack of all requirements toward the making of a successful story might also be there; but nothing could rob it of its delicate sentiment, somewhat old-fashioned for this busy, bustling world of ours.

She was young, he felt that this must be so, for her ideas of life were unformed, her emotions still unaroused. She wrote of life as she imagined it to be, not as it was. Dwayne Perry fell to picturing her as he would like her to be, and unconsciously she assumed the form and characteristics of the heroine of the book he was waiting to write. The calm regularity of her face, with its statuesque evenness of contour, the masses of her dark brown hair drawn lo- 'y back from her broad, low, white forehead, the single slight swell from waist line to shoulder, and the longer one down to her delicately-molded ankle. And her voice and eyes! those two attributes of feminine charm that meant so much to him. The first, he knew, was low and well modulated; the second, deep and clear as pools of still water.

Luncheon time came, and at his request Mary brought him a slight repast to the library; he was afraid that if he journeyed down to the great dining-room that the girlish fancy he had formed might leave him. It was a silly whim, this of imagining that he could call to life the writer of the manuscript, but one which he indulged to the utmost.

By 4 o'clock he felt that he had known her for years, better perhaps than if he had been in daily communion with her, and for the past hour she had been slowly disentangling herself from the heroine of his book; she had become a living, breathing personality. He pictured her in her surroundings, writing at her desk, copying at her machine, as she went about doing her little household tasks, and with her he shared her hopes and disappointments, and gradually, very gradually, he found himself altering the scheme of the coming book to suit her, her ways of living and her thoughts.

Five o'clock found him on his way to her. He had no very definite idea in going beyond the fact that he must see her. He told himself that it was in order to get back his own manuscript, which he must send to Duplay in the next day or two, but in his heart of hearts he knew that he really cared very little for either Duplay or the story. He was going to her, to see her as she was, to hear her voice and look into the clear depths of her eyes.

It was not until he was outside of her door—the fourth story back—and had knocked upon the panel, that he came out of his dreams and realized the ludicrousness of his position. What was his mad fancy leading him into? What right had he to expect that she was all that he had pictured her? Probably she was 40, and fat at that—her inexperience but crude ignorance. Perhaps she was a widow; maybe she had children, even, and was writing to buy them atrocious little dresses of magenta and peacock blue. At any rate, he was a fool to have come. He was what his sister had always said—a visionary!

His knees trembled, for a sense of overpowering weakness suddenly enveloped him and he leaned against the door for support. Anyway it was not too late to turn back; she probably had not heard his knock; he would go home and write for the manuscript, or have Duplay send for it.

But at this instant the door opened and the girl of his dreams appeared in the doorway. So unexpected was the materialization that he was dumbfounded. He stood there shyly looking at her, at a total loss for words. He, Dwayne Perry, successful author, writer of love tales, pastmaster in the art of depicting the greatest of human passions, stood there as shyly as a girl in her teens.

"Did you wish to see me?" The voice was low and as well modulated as he had expected, but it also had a vibrant quality which he had not hoped to find in one so young.

"There has been a mistake about the manuscripts, I think," he began blunderingly.

"Oh," she cried, won't you come in?"

He entered, and she placed a chair for him while she took one a little distance from him; unconsciously she placed it where the last 'e rays of the afternoon sun fell directly upon her, lighting up her dark hair where it fell away from the center of her brow in soft, wavy strands to be caught up again in a loose coil upon the top of her head. Her manner of wearing it made her look older, but he judged her to be little more than 20. So occupied was he in gazing at her that she was obliged to recall him to himself.

"You said something about a manuscript, I believe," she began, in a voice whose chilliness brought him quickly to his senses.

"I beg your pardon," he stammered; "I was dreaming. It's a bad fashion I have, yet I suppose all writers indulge in it more or less."

"Are you a writer?" she asked quickly, instantly warming to him.

"I try to write," he replied simply.

"So do I," she said, "but I'm not making much of a success at it. It's so hard to know what the trouble is," she added, looking up at him with an appealing frankness which somehow he felt was not personal at all. "If they would only tell what the trouble was when they send them back! If I only knew wherein they were wrong! I try so hard." There was a little wistful note in the last few words that went straight to Dwayne Perry's heart.

"Perhaps I could help you," he suggested cautiously; "I have made a little success."

"Oh, would you?" she cried, her very heart leaping into the words. Then her face fell slightly. "No," she said, letting her hands drop down on her lap, "it would be asking too much."

"It used to be my business for a while—to correct manuscripts. I should be very glad to help you if I could."

There was such a note of sincerity in his voice that she rose instantly. While she was looking over her papers, Dwayne allowed his gaze to travel leisurely around the room. It was worse than he had even supposed. She evidently lived her whole life in this one room; and yet, like her story, while the scheme was wrong, her charming, dainty personality took away from it all trace of squalor and vulgarity.

She came back to him with her hands full, smiling down on him with winsome grace. "I do not mean you to read them all," she laughed, reseating herself, "but I wanted to find the one that came back today. I worked so hard over it; I called it 'Love's Repentance,' and I had such hopes that the 'Age' might take it."

From under the pile of closely-written sheets she drew a long, white envelope. "I have not even opened it," she explained, tearing off the edge and drawing out the manuscript. For one instant she sat still, staring at the typewritten pages, then in a wave the blood mounted under her clear skin, enveloping her brow, her chin, even her small, perfectly-formed ears.

"How stupid of me!" she cried. "I did not comprehend; you are Dwayne Perry!" She slowly handed the manuscript to him. 'I should have understood," she stammered, "you said something about a mistake being made." Then she repeated the words, "How stupid of me!"

Her face was full of wonder; wonder and appreciation, and something else that was as incense to Perry's soul. All the praise and adulation that he had been receiving the past ten years were as nothing to what her voice expressed in the simple words, "You are Dwayne Perry!"

"May I not help you just the same?" he said, leaning toward her.

But she drew back and put her hands protectingly over the sheets in her lap. "No, no," she answered, with an air of finality which he knew there was no use in combatting, "You are too great, too big; I cannot let you see my feeble little efforts."

The situation was becoming strained, and to relieve it he began to talk. He told her of his home and his sister, and of his search for a secretary, and lastly about the new book he was going to write. While he spoke the idea which had been lying dormant all day suddenly forced itself to be recognized. Why not offer her the vacant position? She was not making a success of literature; probably never would; this would be along her line, and her knowledge, small as it was, would help him; at least her sympathy and oneness of thought would make her in accord with him, and that to a writer meant much.

Quickly he outlined the plan to her, dilating on its advantages and possibilities. He had risen and was walking the floor, throwing out his words in short, sharp, forceful sentences.

When he had finished she sprang to her feet, letting the sheets slip unheeded to the floor, and stood facing him, her face all light and animation.

"Do you mean, Mr. Perry, that you want me to be your secretary?"

Dwayne Perry looked at her for one instant, then he went quickly over to her. "No," he said, "I believe I have made a mistake; I want you for my wife."

Submarine Artillery.

NEW ARMY CORPS WHOSE BUSINESS IS FIGHTING UNDER WATER.

By a Special Contributor.

THE newly-created submarine artillery has most novel and picturesque functions to fulfill. It is organized to fight under water, literally speaking, and the means it employs for defending the harbors and seaport cities along our coasts are highly specialized, involving the application of three distinct sciences—optics, electricity, and the chemistry of high explosives.

Though nominally a part of the coast artillery, which mans the forts along the seaboard, the submarine artillery is to all intents and purposes a separate organization. As established by Congress, it comprises a little less than 5000 enlisted men, split up into forty-four companies of 109 men each. It is officered by four colonels, five lieutenant-colonels, thirteen majors, fifty-six captains, and 103 lieutenants.

The duty of this corps is primarily to plant and operate explosive mines, and to protect them in time of war against attack by the enemy. In order to accomplish the latter task effectively, it is necessary to cover the mine fields from the shore with rapid-fire guns, and to watch them at night with the help of huge searchlights. Whence it comes about, quite naturally, that part of the business of this arm of the service consists in managing the searchlights and manning the small guns in question.

It should be understood that our coast fortresses, wherever located, are so placed as to command the channels of entrance to harbors. No matter how formidable such defensive works may be, however, hostile warships might succeed in running by them, if care were not taken to plant mines beneath the water over which they would have to pass. It is an easy and effective precaution, a scientifically-arranged mine field being an obstacle so dangerous that not even the strongest fleet, unless under a foolhardy commander, would dare to cross it.

At the present time most of our harbors enjoy no such protection, unfortunately. But Congress has at last awakened to the importance of the matter, and half a dozen years from now the system will have been so far perfected that within forty-eight hours after warning is received of an outbreak of hostilities every one of our seaports will be defended by mine fields impassable by the most powerful foe. Meanwhile the requisite mines, electric cables, and other apparatus are being manufactured as rapidly as possible; and the personnel of the new submarine artillery, which is to have charge of the entire outfit, is receiving the rudiments of a very comprehensive technical education in the art of fighting under water.

The mines employed for the purpose are hollow spheres of galvanized iron, thirty-two inches in diameter, filled with either gun cotton or dynamite. They are anchored a few feet below the surface of the water, in a series of lines (as far apart as may be deemed judicious) across a channel; and, as a rule, they are set, in each line, seventy-five or eighty feet apart. Thus arranged, and controlled by electricity from the fort on shore, they can hardly fail to destroy any hostile warship that might attempt to pass them. If by good luck she got through one line safely, she could scarcely thread her way through another.

A water space protected in this manner is called a mine field. In establishing such a field, the first thing requisite, of course, is to make a careful survey of the water surface. Having ascertained in this way where the mines are to be placed, soundings are made to determine the depths. Then ropes are measured into lengths accordingly, and, an anchor being attached to one end of each, a mine is fastened to the other end—the design being that the infernal machine shall float just about so many feet below the surface.

This, at all events, is the method hitherto adopted. But a very ingenious contrivance in the shape of a so-called "automatic" anchor is being developed, which renders it practicable to set the mine at any depth—that is to say, to obtain for it exactly the desired submergence—without special adjustment, no matter in how many fathoms of water.

The work here described has already been carried to a high point of efficiency at the government's submarine school, at Fort Totten, N. Y., where for many years past officers and enlisted men have been undergoing instruction—the graduates being afterward sent to such fortified points along the seaboard of the Atlantic, the Gulf or the Pacific, as had most need of their skilled services. It should not be supposed that no efforts have been made by the War Department to provide means for the subaqueous defense of our harbors; but up to the present time the requisite apparatus in the shape of mines, cables, etc., has been to a great extent lacking, and men sorely needed for other duty have had to be detailed for submarine work from the already scanty personnel of the coast artillery.

It is going to be different henceforth, however. Congress, as already stated, has provided the necessary men. As for the apparatus, it will cost about $3,500,000 to supply it for all the harbors from Portland, Me., to Puget Sound, and of this sum only $575,000 has been appropriated. An additional $2,897,000 will be needed for searchlights. But all of this money will undoubtedly be furnished within the next half dozen years.

Now, another very important part of the work of the submarine artillery consists in the manning of observing stations and casemates—the latter being underground rooms lined with concrete and containing the mechanism required for controlling the mine system. All of this business is assigned to enlisted men, highly-trained and picked for intelligence. Ordinarily there are two observing stations, in each of which there is a telescope. If a ship is trying to cross the mine field, the lines of sight of the two telescopes, fixed upon her, cross; and, by the help of simple mathematics, her exact position may thereupon be "plotted" upon a chart. In one station there are two men; in the other five, three of whom attend to the plotting.

It may be that there are three casemates, in each of which are four men. Number one stands at a switchboard, with a telephone fastened on his head. His business is merely to listen for orders from the "mine commander" (who is at one of the observing stations,) and to obey them. Numbers Two, Three and Four attend to the storage battery, oil engine, and other mechanical apparatus utilized.

The mine system is so arranged that the sub-aqueous infernal machines may be exploded in any one of three ways, at will. They may be "set for contact"—that is to say, in such a way as to go off if struck by the target vessel; or they may be "set for signal"—which means that the vessel itself will give automatic notice of hitting a mine, the latter being thereupon exploded if desired. Or, again, it may be preferred to dispatch an exploding spark when the vessel is ascertained, by sighting from the observing stations, to be close to Mine No. 32, or, it may be, 47.

Thus the order from the mine commander may be: "Set for signal!" or "Set for contact!" or "Get ready to fire No. 241!" The man with the telephone headpiece is listening all the while, and, when the word comes, he acts accordingly. If directed to fire No. 241, he simply turns his switch to that number, and the mine is exploded. At a distance of seventeen feet it will destroy the stoutest battleship; at fifty feet it is likely to do great damage. Usually from 100 to [illegible] mines are controlled from each casemate.

One great advantage of a mine system of this kind is that the infernal machines are perfectly controlled from the shore. Unless an enemy happens to be in the field they are harmless, and friendly ships can pass over the field without the slightest danger. It is only when a spark is sent to the mine, through the cable by which it is connected with the shore, that it can possibly exercise its destructive powers. But from what has been said it will easily be understood how thorough a course of instruction must be, especialy in electricity and the chemistry of high explosives, in order to insure efficiency on the part of both officers and men in the operation of such war-making contrivances. Some years must necessarily elapse, therefore, before the personnel of the newly created submarine artillery can be satisfactorily educated for the duties it is required to perform.

WORK WHILE THEY SLEEP.

A psychologist was discussing the miracles of sleep.

"One can become so accustomed," he said, "to a monotonous task that one can fall asleep and still keep on working. Thus, in India, there are punkah coolies, men who turn a fan all night long in the hot weather while their English masters rest; and it is not uncommon for a punkah coolie to acquire the knack of sleeping at his task. On and on he sleeps through the hot, [illegible] hours of the Indian night, but his hand mechanically and steadily turns the punkah pulley.

"Men have composed great literary works in their sleep. Coleridge's 'Kubla Khan' is the most famous example of this, but then Coleridge was a morphinomaniac, and his sleep was scarcely natural. But R. L. Stevenson, Barrie, Corelli and Longfellow have all done good work while sleeping.

"Divers sometimes fall asleep deep down in the sea, but some unknown part of their brain keeps watch, and at the proper moment, though asleep, they give the order to be hauled up. This is a good deal like the miracle that happens to all of us—the miracle whereby, if we tell ourselves on retiring that we must, must wake at 7, we invariably do wake at that hour—how or why is impossible to say. Some part of us watches, waits, keeps awake all night, so that at 7 it may call us."

A PHRASE'S ORIGIN.

"Here," said a lawyer, taking down a calf-bound book, "is the will from which originated the famous phrase 'Cut off with a shilling.'

"It is the will of Stephen Godfrey. He died in Elizabeth in 1796. Now I'll read you the paragraph in Godfrey's will that gave the world the phrase. A nasty paragraph it is, too.

"'Whereas, it was my misfortune to be made very uneasy by Elizabeth Godfrey, my wife, for many years from our marriage, by her turbulent behavior, for she was not content with despising my admonitions, but she contrived every method to make me unhappy; she was so perverse in her nature that she would not be reclaimed, but seemed only to be born to be a plague to me. The strength of Samson, the knowledge of Homer, the prudence of Augustus, the cunning of Pyrrhus, the patience of Job, the subtlety of Hannibal, and the watchfulness of Homogenes could not have been sufficient to subdue her, for no skill or force in the world would make her good; and as we have lived separate and apart from each other eight years, and she having perverted her son to leave and totally abandon me—therefore I give her one shilling only.'"

ALWAYS EXPOSED.

"What an indefatigable talker that woman is!"

"Rather. Every time she goes to the shore her tongue gets sunburnt."

THE MAN WITH THE VOCIFEROUS MUSTACHE TELLS A STORY.

By a Special Contributor.

THE red-headed man, in the corner, was reading his newspaper. Suddenly he looked up and addressed the big fellow in the wicker chair, who faced him.

"What would you do," he asked, "if you were to meet a snake 70 feet long on a country road?"

"I reckon I'd just get down on my knees and say: 'Now, I lay me,'" replied the big passenger. "Why? I thought Munchausen was dead."

"So did I," said the red-headed man, "but here's a dispatch which says that a serpent 70 feet long—that's what it says, though it don't mention the name of the man who measured it—had been scaring the farmers up in Nebraska into conniption fits."

"Stories of that kind," interposed the traveler from Chicago, "are like the fairy tales of our childhood. They are written for the purpose of amusing without deceiving the reader. Every one knows, or is supposed to know, that there are no snakes of that size in existence anywhere on earth, and we are expected to smile at the absurdity of the fiction and pass on to news that bears the earmarks of credibility. Nevertheless, there are a lot of people who can't see a joke. I have a friend who is editor of a paper out West. In order to enliven his Sunday edition, he has two or three stories written every week so absurdly improbable that even a child would understand their purpose. One day last winter, for example, he printed what purported to be a special telegram from Winnipeg, which stated that exceptionally heavy snows had fallen in the province. In some places the 'beautiful' lay 30 feet deep on the level. Instead of bewailing this as a calamity, the dispatch went on to say, the enterprising farmers of Canada turned it into a blessing. They burrowed under the snow, and by placing supporting columns at proper intervals, provided a white roof to cover their fields, beneath which they proceeded with their spring plowing, while the snow and frigid winds above them were unfelt. This story reached the Canadian Secretary of the Interior, or whatever the office is up there, and his soul was filled with indignation. When he cooled down sufficiently he called in his stenographer and dictated a long but diplomatically courteous letter to the editor, in which he described in detail the climate of Canada, and with irrefutable logic proved that the telegram was not only untrue, but impossible. The editor has that letter framed, and it keeps him in good humor, for every time he looks at it he has to laugh."

"That's all very well," said the little man with the vociferous mustache, who sat by the window; "but things do happen sometimes that you can't explain by lookin' into a cyclopedia. There's the case of my friend Webster, for instance. Now, he had an experience that I don't reckon ever occurred to anybody on earth before."

"Why not tell us about it?" suggested the red-headed man in the corner.

"Well," replied the little passenger with the big mustache, "I don't mind tellin' you about it, but I don't reckon any of you'll believe it. I didn't at first. Webster was an ordinary dry goods clerk. Got $10 a week and spent $12.50. Never seemed to have any ambition except to keep the creases in his pants and to learn how to play on the cornet. Him and me put up at the same boardin'-house, and we was close friends. Fact is, everybody at the house liked Webster until he commenced tearin' the night air with that horn o' his. We stood it a while without sayin' anything much where he could hear us, but he got worse all the time. Got so he'd toot away until after midnight, and finally we had to appoint a committee to wait on him and ask him to restrain his wind a little bit. Well, he got mad and took to the woods. That's just what he did. He took to the woods. Said if we didn't like his music he'd go out an' commune with nature. 'I know a bank where the wild thyme grows,' he says, just like James O'Neill, and when Bailey, the star boarder, suggests that he better be careful about overdrawin' his account he gets madder than ever, and wouldn't speak to Bailey for a week.

"But every evenin' after dinner and every Saturday afternoon he'd tuck his little horn under his arm, get on a car and go out into the country. We rested pretty well after that, an' had quit thinkin' much about Webster, when all of a sudden he blossoms out in a whole suit of swell togs, got him a diamond ring that give you weak eyes, and threw coin around like he had barrels of 'em. In about a week he shook the boardin'-house, leavin' us all standin' with our mouths open, and moved into a high-toned apartment. Some time after that I met him on the street one day and he invited me up to see him. I went, for I was mighty curious to know where he got his pile, and after we had lit some two-fers I gently hinted how I felt about it.

"'I'll tell you, Tom,' says he, 'if you won't give it away to that boardin'-house gang.'

"I agreed to that, an' then he told me, an' I had to strike a match to my cigar five times while he was tellin' I was so interested.

"'Tom,' says he, 'I did it with my little cornet. You've heard o' people blowin' in their money, I reckon,' he says. 'Well, I blowed mine out.'

"Then he laid back and laughed till he was red in the face. I didn't see anything so funny about it, but I laughed, too, just to be sociable.

"'That's right, Tom,' he says, after he gets his face straightened out again, 'I blowed it out. You people didn't know you was makin' my fortune when you drove me to the woods to practice. Well, I found a nice, grassy place down by the creek where there wasn't a house in a mile, and there I went every day and tooted away as long as I pleased. I also went there on Saturday afternoons and Sundays, as you will remember. One Saturday I was playin' "The Last Rose o' Summer," with variations, an' doin' it up brown, when I heard a curious sound, and lookin' down on the ground I saw a snake, one o' these brown spotted bull snakes, about 6 feet long. It had its head up in the air, and was swayin' it from side to side, keepin' as good time as Sousa. I was a little surprised, o' course, but I kept on playin', an' didn't seem to pay any attention to the snake. I knew it wasn't the kind that did any harm, so I wasn't scared a bit. When I got into the variations it just wiggled itself all over, it was so tickled, and when I stopped it hammered its tail on the ground like it was applaudin', and then it went scootin' into the bushes.

"'Well, sir, Tom,' he went on, 'that dog-gone snake came out to hear me every Saturday and Sunday, and it didn't make any difference what I played, he liked it. Got so gentle he'd climb up and look at the music himself, and when I struck a wrong note he'd look up at me and dart his tongue out, just as if he was mad about it. It was really wonderful what a musical ear that snake seemed to have, and it shows that you fellows at the boarding'-house don't know good music when you hear it. Ain't that so, Tom?'

"As a matter o' fact, gentlemen, the noise Webster made with that little horn o' his was somethin' awful.

"'You know, Tom,' he says, 'it takes considerable figgerin' to stretch ten plunks clear across seven days, and when I'd get tired playin' on Saturday afternoons I used to get out my note-book and my pay envelope an' do some close calculatin'. That blamed snake didn't seem to take much interest in finance, but he'd loaf around, knowin' I'd toot some more before I left. One day, though, I was feelin' pretty glum. One o' these women, who never know what they want, had made a complaint to the boss, and he'd fined me $3. I couldn't figure out how I was goin' to get through on a dollar a day unless I cut out my lunches. Adam—that's what I named the snake—appeared to understand that I was in trouble, and he looked so broken up about it I had to play the "Last Rose o' Summer" to cheer him up. After I stopped he lay still for a little while, an' then something seemed to strike him all at once. He commenced shakin' his tail and wigglin' around to attract my attention, and when he saw I was interested he jerked his head back two or three times like he was beckonin', run away a few steps and turned around an' beckoned some more. I was puzzled. Adam had never done that way before. I didn't move, and he went on a little farther, stopped an' beckoned again. "He must want me to follow him," I thought, and then I started after him. That seemed to tickle Adam a whole lot, for he ran around in a circle two or three times like a kid will turn pin wheels, an' then he struck out for the creek, me on his trail.

"'Well, Tom,' he went on, after he'd opened a bottle o' champagne, 'when he got to the creek Adam went right in and started to swim across. It's about twenty feet wide there and deep, and there's no bridge in a mile. Of course I stopped. When Adam saw I wasn't comin' he turned around an' came back an' appeared to be all cut up. In a minute, though, he commenced racin' up an' down the bank an' hissin' like a mad goose, an' the first thing I knew, Tom,' he says, 'there was twenty or thirty more big snakes all around me. I didn't know whether to run or not, but I had confidence in Adam and stood still. Well, you won't believe what I tell you,' he says, 'but it's so. The biggest one of them snakes scoots up a big tree on the bank o' the creek, crawls out on a limb that hangs over the water, coils his tail around it and lets his head drop down. Then another snake followed him, coiled his tail around the first one's neck and hung his head down. Another played the same trick, until they hung down to the water, an' then Adam led the others out into the stream and they tied onto one another until they had a line clear across the creek an' pulled up to a limb on the other side. I caught onto Adam's scheme right away. I didn't like the proposition a little bit, but I couldn't go back on my pet after he'd shown such interest in me, so I shinned up the tree an' went across the creek on that snake rope hand over hand.

"Then all the other snakes disappeared and Adam beckoned me on. We went about a mile, I reckon, until we come to a great big tree that had a hole in the side. Adam crawled up, stuck his head in the hole, an' then pulled it out and beckoned to me. I couldn't go into the hole an' I come to the conclusion that he just wanted to show me where he lived. But he didn't. Seein' I was disappointed, Adam crawls down inside the tree, and before you could say Jack Robinson he comes back with a $20 gold piece in his mouth. That's straight goods, Tom,' he says, 'an' I'll prove it to you.' When I saw that money,' he went on, 'I nearly had a fit, but I didn't lose any time gettin' inside that tree. I looked up a farm house, borrowed an ax, and inside of an hour, Tom, I had cut into the hollow, an' what do you think I found, Tom?' he asks.

"'Well,' I says, 'judgin' from the sample an' the style you're puttin' on now, you must 'a' found a branch o' the 'Nited States Treasury.'

"'That's just what I did, Tom. That's just what I did. Inside that tree was a whole water bucket full o' double eagles.'

"Now, gentlemen, that's the story just like he told it to me, an' he took me out an' showed me the tree an' introduced me to Adam. Not long after that they took him up an' sent him to the pen for passin' counterfeit money, but that don't make any difference about the story, to my mind." C. S. YOST.

LONDON'S TOURIST HARVEST.

SEVEN AND A HALF MILLION DOLLARS SPENT THERE BY AMERICANS.

[London Express:] This year's American season in London has been in every way a record one, and the hotels and shopkeepers have benefited enormously by the rush of visitors from the other side of the Atlantic.

Not so very many years ago the West End tradesmen took next to nothing during the months when society went out of town. Business was practically stagnant until the mansions in the West End pulled up the blinds and opened the shutters and society returned.

Today things are different. The peaceful invasion of American pleasure-seekers has endowed London with a second season. Everybody benefits by them, from the diamond merchant in Bond street to the cabman plying for hire. London is recognized as the market place of the Americans, and London has been astute enough to cater especially for Americans during their season.

Everything is done to provide for them, as it were, a home from home. The restaurants have found out the virtue of ice water and soda fountains, and even the chemist contributes his quota to their comfort by stocking chewing gum. The result is satisfactory to all parties.

Inquiries made by an Express representative yesterday among the tourist companies, hotels, and steamship lines show that something like 60,000 Americans have visited London this year. Some remain for a brief five days, others dwell here for a longer period, but the hotels, large and small, and the boarding-houses of Bloomsbury and Bayswater have been held by the invading American since March.

Between them these 60,000 Americans have spent about £1,500,000, chiefly in London. This calculation is based on figures supplied by one of the largest hotels, which alone has housed 6600 Americans since March, and the average hotel bill of each has been £50. There are at least five hotels which can give similar figures, and if the average American spends £25 in London, we reach the total stated. Some, of course, spend next to nothing and live in boarding-houses for £2 2s. a week, but others spend hundreds, or even thousands, of pounds on jewelry and dress.

Go where you will in London at this period you will hear nothing but grateful recognition of American custom.

"Americans come to London for the specific purpose of buying," said a West End tailor yesterday. "Many of the men come with half-empty trunks, and buy a complete outfit of socks, ties, collars, shirts, suits of clothes, and hats. I have been kept busy with orders for lounge suits and frock coats at a time when business is at a standstill as far as my regular customers are concerned."

"They will have flowers," said a florist. "I might shut up shop, for all the best London customers are out of town, but the American visitors keep things going. These roses that you see here," pointing to a magnificent bunch of pink roses, "are sold to a wealthy American customer. Roses are their favorite flower."

The American visitors have staved off disaster from the river this year. The weather matters nothing to them. To come to London without seeing the river would be a wasted journey, and so, even though the visitors equip themselves with macintoshes and umbrellas for their river trip, the Thames boatmen reap the benefit.

The hotels and boarding-houses get by far the largest share of the £1,500,000 which American travelers leave behind them in London. Next come the antique dealers, for America is particularly keen on old china and Sheffield plate, and will pay almost any price for a fancied object. Then follow the tailors, the haberdashers, the hatters, the jewelers, and the miscellaneous traders.

Roughly, one may apportion the £1,500,000 which the Americans leave behind them as follows:

Hotels and boarding-houses	£500,000
Tailors	24,000
Haberdashers	15,000
Hatters	10,000
Jewelers	200,000
Antiques	350,000
Furniture	5,000
Drapers	200,000
Dressmakers	150,000
Cabmen	5,000
Brakes, motor cars, carriages, and miscellaneous expenses	11,000
Theaters	12,000
Music halls	12,000
Tobacconists	6,000
Total	£1,500,000

By STEWART EDWARD WHITE and SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS.

PART II—CHAPTER XII.

"OLD SCRUBS" COMES ASHORE.

THE inevitable happened. One noon Pulz looked up from his labor of pulling the whiskers from the evil-smelling masks.

"How many of these damn things we got?" he inquired.

"About three hunder' and fifty," Thrackles replied.

"Well, we've got enough for me. I'm sick of this job; it stinks."

They looked at each other. I could see the disgust rising in their eyes, the reek of rotten blubber expanding their nostrils. With one accord they cast aside the masks.

"It ain't such a hell of a fortune," growled Pulz, his evil little white face thrust forward. "There's other things worth all the seal trimmin' of the islands."

"Diamon's," gloomed the Nigger.

"You've hit it, Doctor," cut in Solomon.

There we were again, back to the old difficulty, only worse. Idleness descended on us again. We grew touchy on little things, as a misplaced plate, a shortage of firewood, too deep a draught at the nearly empty bucket. The noise of bickering became as constant as the noise of the surf. If we valued peace we kept our mouths shut. The way a man spat, or ate, or slept, or even breathed became a cause of irritation to every other member of the company. We stood the outrage as long as we could; then we objected in a wild and ridiculous explosion which communicated its heat to the object of our wrath. Then there was a fight. It needed only liquor to complete the deplorable state of affairs.

Gradually the smaller things came to worry us more and more. A certain harmless singer of the cricket or perhaps of the tree-toad variety used to chip his innocent note a short distance from our cabin. For all I know he had done so from the moment of our installation, but I had never noticed him before. Now I caught myself listening for his irregular recurrence with every nerve on the quiver. If he delayed by ever so little, it was an agony; yet when he did pipe up, his feeble strain struck to my heart cold and paralyzing like a dagger. And with every advancing minute of the night I became broader awake, more tense, fairly sweating with nervousness. One night—good God! was it only last week? . . . It seems ages ago, another existence . . . a state cut off from this by the wonder of a transmigration at least. . . . Last week!

I did not sleep at all. The moon had risen, had mounted the heavens, and now was sailing overhead. By the fretwork of its radiance through the chinks of our rudely-built cabin I had marked off the hours. A thunderstorm rumbled and flashed hull down over the horizon. It was many miles distant, and yet I do not doubt that its electrical influence had dried the moisture of our equanimity, leaving us rattling husks for the winds of destiny to play upon. Certainly I can remember no other time, in a rather wide experience, when I have felt myself more on edge, more choked with the restless, purposeless nervous energy that leaves a man's tongue parched and his eyes staring. And still that infernal cricket, or whatever it was, chirped.

I had thought myself alone in my vigil, but when finally I could stand it no longer, and kicked aside my covering with an oath of protest, I was surprised to hear it echoed from all about me.

"Damn that cricket!" I cried.

And the dead shadows stirred from the bunks, and the hollow-eyed victims of insomnia crept out to curse their tormentor. We organized an expedition to hunt him down. It was ridiculous enough, six strong men prowling for the life of one poor little insect. We did not find him, however, though we succeeded in silencing him. But no sooner were we back in our bunks than he began it again, and such was the turmoil of our nerves that day found us sitting wan about a fire, hugging our knees.

We were so genuinely emptied, not so much by the cricket as by the two years of fermentation, that not one of us stirred toward breakfast, in fact not one of us moved from the listless attitude in which day found him, until after 9 o'clock. Then we pulled ourselves together and cooked coffee and salt horse. As a significant fact, the nigger left the dishes unwashed, and no one cared.

Handy Solomon finally shook himself and arose.

"I'm sick of this," said he, "I'm goin' seal hunting."

They arose without a word. They were sick of it, too, sick to death. We were a silent, gloomy crew indeed as we thrust the surfboat afloat, clambered in and shipped the oars. No one spoke a word; no one had a comment to make, even when we saw the rookery slide into the water while we were still fifty yards from the beach. We pulled back slowly along the coast. Beyond the rock we made out the entrance to the dry cave.

"There's seal in there," cried Handy Solomon, "lots of 'em!"

He thrust the rudder over, and we headed for the cave. No one expressed an opinion.

As it was again high tide, we rowed in to the steep shore inside the cave's mouth and beached the boat. The place was full of seals; we could hear them bellowing.

"Two of you stand here," shouted Handy Solomon, "and take them as they go out. We'll go in and scare 'em down to you."

"They'll run over us," screamed Pulz.

"No, they won't. You can dodge up the sides when they go by."

This was indeed well possible, so we gripped our clubs and ventured into the darkness.

We advanced four abreast, for the cave was wide enough for that. As we penetrated, the bellowing and barking became more deafening. It was impossible to see anything, although we felt an indistinguishable tumbling mass receding before our footsteps. Thrackles swore violently as he stumbled over a laggard. With uncanny abruptness the black wall of darkness in front of us was alive with fiery eyeballs. The seals had reached the end of the cave and had turned toward us. We, too, stopped, a little uncertain as to how to proceed.

The first plan had been to get behind the band and and to drive it slowly toward the entrance to the cave. This was now seen to be impossible. The cavern was too narrow; its sides at this point too steep, and the animals too thickly congested. Our eyes, becoming accustomed to the twilight, now began to make out dimly the individual bodies of the seals and the general configuration of the rocks. One big boulder lay directly in our path, like an island in the shale of the cave's floor. Perdosa stepped to the top of it for a better look.

The men attempted to communicate their ideas of what was to be done, but could not make themselves heard above the uproar. I could see their faces contorting with the fury of being baffled. A big bull made a dash to get by; all the herd flippered after him. If he had won past they would have followed as obstinately as sheep, and nothing could have stopped them, but the big bull went down beneath the clubs. Thrackles hit the animal two vindictive blows after it had succumbed.

This settled the revolt, and we stood as before. Pulz and Handy Solomon tried to converse by signs, but evidently failed, for their faces showed angry in the twilight. Perdosa, on his rock, rolled and lit a cigarette. Thrackles paced to and fro, and the nigger leaned on his club, farther down the cave. They had been left at the entrance, but now in lack of results had joined their companions.

Now Thrackles approached and screamed himself black trying to impart some plan. He failed; but stooped and picked up a stone and threw it into the mass of seals. The others understood. A shower of stones followed. The animals milled like cattle, bellowed the louder, but would not face their tormentors. Finally an old cow flopped by in a panic. I thought they would have to let her go, but she died a little beyond the bull. No more followed, although the men threw stones as fast and hard as they were able. Their faces were livid with anger, like that of an evil-tempered man with an obstinate horse.

Suddenly Handy Solomon put his head down, and with a roar distinctly audible even above the din that filled the cave, charged directly into the herd. I saw the beasts cringe before him; I saw his club rising and falling indiscriminately; and then the whole back of the cave seemed to rise and come at us.

This was no chance of sport now, but a struggle for very life. We realized that once down there would be no hope, for while the seals were more anxious to escape than to fight, we knew that their jaws were powerful. There was no time to pick and choose. We hit out with all the strength and quickness we possessed. It was like a bad dream, like struggling with an elusive hydra-headed monster, knee-high, invulnerable. We hit, but without apparent effect. New heads rose, the press behind increased. We gave ground. We staggered, struggling desperately to keep our feet.

How long this lasted I cannot tell. It seemed hours. I know my arms became leaden from swinging my club; my eyes were full of sweat; my breath gasped. A sharp pain in my knee nearly doubled me to the ground, and yet I remember clamping to the thought that I must keep my feet, keep my feet at any cost. Then all at once I recalled the fact that I was armed. I jerked out the short-barrelled Colt's 45 and turned it loose in their faces.

Whether the flash and detonation frightened them; whether Perdosa, still clinging to his rock, managed to turn their attention by his flanking efforts, or whether, quite simply, the wall of dead finally turned them back I do not know, but with one accord they gave over the attempt.

I looked at once for Handy Solomon, and was surprised to see him still alive, standing upright on a ledge the other side of the herd. His clothing was literally torn to shreds, and he was covered with blood. But in this plight he was not alone, for when I turned toward my companions they, too, were tattered, torn and gory. We were a dreadful crew, standing there in the half light, our chests heaving, our rags dripping red.

For perhaps ten seconds no one moved. Then with a yell of demoniac rage my companions clambered over the rampart of dead seals and attacked the herd.

The seals were now cowed and defenseless. It was a slaughter and the most debauching and brutal I have ever known. I had hit out with the rest when it had been a question of defense, but from this I turned aside in a sick loathing. The men seemed possessed of devils, and of their unnatural energy. Perdosa cast aside the club and took to his natural weapon, the knife.

I can see him yet rolling over and over, embracing a big cow, his head jammed in an ecstasy of ferocity between the animal's front flippers, his legs clasped to hold her body, only his right arm rising and falling as he plunged his knife again and again. She struggled, turning him over and under, wept great tears, and fairly whined with terror and pain. Finally, she was still, and Perdosa staggered to his feet, only to stare about him drunkenly for a moment before throwing himself with a screech on another victim.

The Nigger alone did not jump into the turmoil. He stood just down the cave, his club ready. Occasionally a disorganized rush to escape would be made. The Nigger's lips snarled, and with a truly mad [illegible] beat the poor animals back.

I pressed against the wall horrified, fascinated, unable either to interfere or to leave. A close, [illegible] smell took possession of the air. After a little a [illegible] stream, growing each moment, began to flow past my feet. It sought its channel daintily, as streamlets do, feeling among the stones in eddies, quiet pools, miniature falls and rapids. For the moment I did not realize what it could be. Then the light caught it down where the Nigger waited, and I saw it was red.

At first the racket of the seals was overpowering. Now, gradually, it was losing volume. I began to hear the blasphemies, ferocious cries, screams of anger hurled against the cave walls by the men. The thick, [illegible] smell grew stronger; the light seemed to grow dimmer, as though it could not burn in that fetid air. A cow came and looked up at me, big tears rolling from her eyes; then she flipped aimlessly away, out of her poor wits with terror. The sight finished me. I staggered down the length of the black tunnel to the boat.

After a long interval a little three-months pup waddled down to the water's edge, caught sight of me, and with a squeal of fright dived far. Poor little devil! I would not have hurt him for worlds. As far as I know he was the only survivor of all that herd.

The men soon appeared, one by one, tired, sleepy-eyed, glutted, walking in a cat-like trance of satiety. They were blood and tatters from head to foot, and from dripping red masks peered their bloodshot eyes. Not a word said they, but tumbled into the boat, pushed off, and in a moment we were floating in the full sunshine [illegible].

We rowed home in an abstraction. For the moment Berserker rage had burned itself out. Handy Solomon continually wetted his lips, like an animal licking its chops. Thrackles stared into space through eyes drugged with killing. No one spoke.

We landed in the cove, and were surprised to find it in shadow. The afternoon was far advanced. Over the hill we dragged ourselves, and down to the spring. There the men threw themselves flat and drank in great gulps until they could drink no more. We built a fire, but the Nigger refused to cook.

"Some one else turn," he growled. "I cook aboard ship."

Perdosa, who had hewed the fuel, at once became angry.

"I cut heem de wood!" he said. "I do my share; if I cut heem de wood you mus' cook heem de grub!"

But the Nigger shook his head, and Perdosa went into an ecstasy of rage. He kicked the fire to pieces; he scattered the unburned wood up and down the beach; he even threw some of it into the sea.

"Eef you no cook heem de grub, you no [illegible] wood!" he shrieked, with enough oaths to sink his [illegible]

Finally Pulz interfered.

"Here, you damn foreigners," said he, "quit it! [illegible] up, I say! We got to eat. You let that wood alone, or you'll pick it up again!"

Perdosa sprang at him with a screech. Pulz was [illegible] but nimble, and understood rough-and-tumble fighting. He met Perdosa's rush with two swift blows—a short-arm jab and an uppercut. Then they clinched, and in a moment were rolling over and over just beyond the wash of the surf.

The row waked the Nigger from his sullen abstraction. He seemed to come to himself with a start; his eye fell surprisedly on the combatants, then lit up with an unholy joy. He drew his knife and crept down on the fighters. It was too good an opportunity to pay off the Mexican.

But Thrackles interfered sharply.

"Come off!" he commanded. "None o' that!"

"Go to hell!" growled the Nigger.

A great rage fell on them all, blind and terrible, like that leading to the slaughter of the seals. They fought indiscriminately, hitting at each other with fists and knives. It was difficult to tell who was against whom. The sound of heavy breathing, dull blows, the tear of cloth and grunts of punishment received; the swirl of the sand, the heave of struggling bodies, all [illegible] my attention so that I did not see Capt. Selover until he stood almost at my elbow.

"Stop!" he shrieked in his high, falsetto voice.

And, would you believe it, even through the blind [illegible] haze of their combat, the men heard him and [illegible]. They drew reluctantly apart, got to their feet, and [illegible] looking at him through reeking brows, half-[illegible] and half-defiant. The bullheaded Thrackles even [illegible] a half step forward, but froze to his tracks when Old Scrubs looked at him.

"I hire you men to fight when I tell you to, and [illegible] then, said the captain sternly. "What does this [illegible]

He menaced them one after another with his eyes, and one after another they quailed. All their [illegible] their threats, their dangerousness dissipated like [illegible] before the command of this one resolute man. The pirates who had seemed so dreadful to me, now [illegible] nothing more than cringing schoolboys before their master.

And then suddenly to my horror I, watching [illegible] saw the captain's eye turn blank. I am sure the men must have felt the change, though certainly they were too far away to see it, for they shifted by ever so [illegible] from the first frozen attitude. The captain's hand sought his pocket, and they froze again, but instead of the expected revolver, he produced a half-full [illegible] bottle.

The change in his eyes had crept into his [illegible]. They had turned foolishly amiable, vacant, [illegible]

"'llo boys," said he appealingly, "you [illegible] ain't you? Have a drink. 'S good stuff [illegible] bottl," he lurched, caught himself, and advanced [illegible] them, still with the empty smile.

They stared at him for ten seconds, [illegible]

Then:

"He's drunk!" Handy Solomon breathed, scarcely louder than a whisper.

There was no other signal given. They sprang as with a single impulse. One instant I saw clear against the waning daylight the bulky, foolish-swaying form of Capt. Selover; the instant it had disappeared, carried down and obliterated by the rush of attacking bodies. Knives gleamed ruddy in the sunset. There was no struggle. I heard a deep groan. Then the murderers rose slowly to their feet.

PART II—CHAPTER XIII.

I MAKE MY ESCAPE.

I had plenty of time to run away. I do not know why I did not do so; but the fact stands that I remained where I was until they had finished Capt. Selover. Then I took to my heels, but was soon cornered. I drew my revolver, remembered that I had emptied it in the seal [illegible]—and had time for no more coherent mental process. A smothering weight flung itself on me, against which I struggled as hard as I could, shrinking in anticipation from the thirsty plunge of the knives. However, though the weight increased until further struggle was impossible, I was not harmed, and in a few moments found myself, wrists and ankles tied, beside a [illegible] fire. While I collected myself I heard the grate of a boat being shoved off from the cove, and a few moments later made out lights aboard the Laughing Lass.

The looting party returned very shortly. Their plundering had gone only as far as liquor and arms. Thrackles let down from the cliff top a keg at the end of a line. Perdosa and the Nigger each carried an armful of the 30-40 rifles. The keg was rolled to the fire and broached.

The men got drunk, wildly drunk, but not helplessly so. A flame communicated itself to them through the liquor. The ordinary characteristics of their composition sprang into sharper relief. The Nigger became more sullen, Perdosa more snake-like, Pulz more [illegible] evil, Perdosa more brutal, while Handy Solomon, staggering from his seat to the open keg and back again, roaring fragments of a chanty, his red headgear contrasting with his smoky black hair and his swarthy [illegible] countenance—he needed no further touch.

Their evil passions were all awake, and the plan, so long indefinite, developed like a photographer's plate.

"That's one," said Thrackles. "One gone to hell."

"And now the diamonds," muttered Pulz.

"There's a ship upon the windward, a wreck up the lee, Down on the coast of the high Barbare-e-e."

roared Handy Solomon. "Damn it all, boys, it's the best night's work we ever did. The stuff's ours. Then it's me for a big stone house in Frisco, O!"

"Frisco?" sneered Pulz, "that's all you know. You ought to travel. Paris for me!"

"I got heem a fine cabollo, an' fine sarrle, an' fine [illegible]," breathed Perdosa sentimentally. "I ride, and the silver jingle and the señorita look——"

Thrackles was for a ship and the China trade.

"What you want, Doctor?" they demanded of the silent figure.

But the Nigger only rolled his eyes and shook his head. By and by he arose and disappeared in the dusk and was no more seen.

"Dam' fool," muttered Handy Solomon. "Well, here's a [illegible]!"

He drank a deep cup of the raw rum, and staggered back to his seat on the sands.

"'I am not a man-o'-war, nor a privateer,' said he,
'Blow high, blow low! What care we!
But I am a jolly pirate and I'm sailing for my fee,'
Down on the coast of the high Barbare-e-e," he sang. "We'll land in Valparaiso and we'll go every man his way; and we'll sink the old Laughing Lass so that the mermaids can't find her."

Thrackles piled on more wood and the fire leaped high.

"Let's get after 'em," said he.

"Tomorrow's jes' 's good," muttered Pulz. "Les' hav' another drink."

"We'll stay here 'n' see if our ol' frien' Percy don't show up," said Handy Solomon. He threw back his head and roared forth a volume of sound toward the dim sea.

"Broadside to broadside the gallant ships did lay,
Blow high, blow low! What care we?
Till the jolly mon-o'-wor shot the pirate's mast away,
Down on the coast of the high Barbare-e-e."

I saw near me a live coal dislodged from the fire when Thrackles had thrown on the armful of wood. An idea came to me. I hitched myself to the spark, and held across it the rope with which my wrists were tied. This, behind my back, was not easy to accomplish, and twice I burned my wrists before I succeeded.

Fortunately I was at the edge of illumination, and behind the group. I turned over on my side so that my back was toward the fire. Then rapidly I cast loose my ankle lashings. Thus I was free, and selecting a moment when universal attention was turned toward the rum barrel, I rolled over a sand dune, got to my hands and knees, and crept away.

Through the coarse grass I crept thus, to the very entrance of the arroyo, then rose to my feet. In the middle distance, the fire leaped red. Its glow fell intermittently on the surges rolling in. The men staggered or lay prone, either as gigantic silhouettes or as illuminations painted by the light. The keg stood solid and substantial, the hub about which reeled the orgy. At the edge of the wash I could make out something prone, dim, limp, thrown constantly in new positions of weariness as the water ebbed and flowed beneath it, now an arm thrown out, now cast back, as though Old Scrubs slept feverishly. The drunkards were getting noisy. Handy Solomon still reeled off the verses of his song. The others joined in, frightfully off the key; or punctuated the performance by wild staccato yells.

"Their coffin was their ship and their grave it was the sea,
Blow high, blow low! What care we?
And the quarter that we gave them was to sink them in the sea,
Down on the coast of the high Barbar-e-e," bellowed Handy Solomon.

I turned and plunged into the cool darkness of the cañon.

PART II—CHAPTER XIV.

AN ADVENTURE IN THE NIGHT.

Ten seconds after entering the arroyo I was stumbling along in an absolute blackness. It almost seemed to me that I could reach out my hands and touch it, as one would touch a wall. Or perhaps not exactly that, for a wall is hard, and this darkness was soft and yielding, in the manner of enveloping hangings. Directly above me was a narrow, jagged and irregular strip of sky with stars. I splashed in the brook, finding its waters strangely warm, rustled through the grasses, my head back, chin out, hands extended as one makes his way through a house at night. There were no sounds except the tinkle of the sulphurous stream; successive bends in the cañon wall had shut off even the faintest echoes of the bacchanalia on the beach.

The way seemed much longer than by daylight. Already in my calculation I had traversed many times the distance, with a jump at the heart, I made out a glow ahead, and in front of it the upright logs of the stockade.

To my surprise the gate was open. I ascended the gentle slope to the valley's level—and stumbled over a man lying prostrate, shivering violently, and moaning.

I bent over to discover whom it might be. As I did so a brilliant light seemed to fill the valley, throwing an illumination on the man at my feet. I saw it was the Nigger and perceived at the same instant that he was almost beside himself with terror. His eyes rolled, his teeth chattered, his frame contracted in a strong convulsion, and the black of his complexion had faded to a washed-out dirty gray, revolting to contemplate. He felt my touch and sprang to his feet, clutching me by the shoulder as a man clutching rescue.

"My Gawd!" he shivered. "Look! Dar it is again!"

He fell to pattering in a tongue unknown to me—charms, spells, undoubtedly, to exercise the devils that had hold of him. I followed the direction of his gaze, and myself cried out.

The doctor's laboratory stood in plain sight between the two columns of steam blown straight upward through the stillness of the evening. It seemed bursting with light. Every little crack leaked it in generous streams, while the main illumination appeared fairly to bulge the walls outward. This was in itself nothing extraordinary, and indicated only the activity of those within, but while I looked an irregular patch of incandescence suddenly splashed the cliff opposite.

For a single instant the very substance of the rock glowed white hot; then from the spot a shower of spiteful flakes shot as from a pyrotechnic, and the light was blotted out as suddenly as it came. At the same moment it appeared at another point, exhibited the same phenomena, died, flashed out at still a third place, and so was repeated here and there with bewildering rapidity until the walls of the valley crackled and spat sparks.

Abruptly the darkness fell. As abruptly it was broken again by a similar exhibition; only this time the fire was blue. Blue was followed by purple, purple by red. Then ensued the briefest possible pause, in which a figure moved across the bars of light escaping through the chinks of the laboratory, and then the whole valley blazed with patches of vari-colored fire. It was not a reflection; it was actual physical conflagration of the solid rock, in irregular areas. Some of the fire shapes were most fantastic. And with the unexpectedness of a bursting shell the surface of the ground before our feet crackled into a ghastly blue flame.

The Nigger uttered a cry in his throat and disappeared. I felt a sharp breath on my neck, an ejaculation of surprise at my very ear. It was startling enough to scare the soul out of a man, but I held fast and was just about to step forward, when my collar was twisted tight from behind. I raised both hands, felt steel and knew that I was in the grasp of Handy Solomon's claw.

The sailor had me foul. I did my best to twist around, to unbutton the collar; but in vain. I felt my wind leaving me, the ghastly blue light was shot with red. Distinctly I heard the man's sharp intaken breath as some new phenomenon met the eye and his great oath as he swore.

"It's the devil!" he cried.

Then I was jerked off my feet and the next thing I knew I was lying on my back, very wet, on the beach; the day was breaking and the men, quite sober, were talking vehemently.

It was impossible to make out what they said, but as Handy Solomon and the Nigger were the center of discussion, I could imagine the subject. I felt very stiff and sore and hazy in my mind. My neck was lame from the dragging and my tongue dry from the choking. For some time I lay in a half torpor watching the lilac of dawn change to the rose of sunrise, utterly indifferent to everything. They had thrown me down across the first rise of the little sand dunes back of the tide sands, and from it I could at once look out over the sea full of the restless shadows of dawn, and the land narrowing to the mouth of the arroyo. I remember wondering whether Capt. Selover were up yet. Then with a sharp stab at the heart I remembered.

The thought was like a dash of cold water in clearing my faculties. I raised my head. Seaward a white gull had caught the first rays of the sun beyond the cliffs. Landward—I saw with a choke in my throat—a figure emerging from the arroyo.

At the sight I made a desperate attempt to move, but with the effort discovered that I was again bound. My stirring thus called Pulz's attention. Before I could look away he had followed the direction of my gaze. The discussion instantly ceased. They waited in grim silence.

I did not know what to do. Percy Darrow, carrying some sort of large book, was walking rapidly toward us. Perdosa had disappeared. Thrackles after an instant came and sat beside me and clapped his big hand over my mouth. It was horrible.

When within a hundred paces or so, I could see that Darrow labored under some great excitement. His usual indifferent saunter had, as I have indicated, given way to a firm and decided step; his ironical eye glistened; his sallow cheek glowed.

"Boys," he shouted cheerfully, "the time's up; we've succeeded. We'll sail just as soon as the Lord'll let us get ready. Rustle the stuff aboard. The doctor'll be down in a short time, and we ought to be loaded by night."

Handy Solomon and Pulz laid hand on two of the rifles near by and began surreptitiously to fill their magazines. The Nigger shook his knife free of the scabbard and sat with it in his left hand, concealed by his body. I could feel Thrackles's muscles stiffen. Another fifty paces and it would be no longer necessary to stop my mouth.

The thought made me desperate. I had failed as a leader of these men, and I had been forced to stand by at debauching, cruel, and murderous affairs, but now it is over, I thank heaven the reproach cannot be made against me that at any time I counted the consequences to myself. Thrackles's hand lay heavy across my mouth. I bit it to the bone, and as he involuntarily snatched it away, I rolled over toward the sea.

Thus for an instant I had my mouth free.

"Rum! Rum!" I shouted. "For God's sake——"

Thrackles leaped upon me and struck me heavily upon the mouth, then sprang for a rifle. I managed to struggle back to the dune, whence I could see.

THE NIGHT MOTH.

A night moth flew in a scented garden
Over the flowers sleeping there;
He fell in love with a dreaming lily,
He worshiped, too, a daffydowndilly,
Adored a rosebud willy nilly,
Night moth, dashingly debonair.
Night moth, white moth; light moth he,
Light of love as well could be.

A night moth mused in the sleeping garden,
Hov'ring over the dreamers fair,
"A daisy's eye is a glory golden,
So it is said in a legend olden,
Then what are its petals primly folden
Beside that eye beyond compare?
Night moth, white moth, light moth, I
Must see it once or I shall die."

A night moth lurked in the waking garden,
Winging, waiting upon the air,
And over the wall the sun came slowly,
And rosebud, lily, and daisy lowly
Opened their eyes in amazement wholly
To see a night moth dying there.
Night moth, light moth, in dismay,
Died, alas! at break of day.

A NOVEL POSTOFFICE SCHEME.

In order to facilitate, and accelerate at the same time, the collection and delivery of letters and packages in Vienna, the Ministry of Commerce is engaged upon a plan for an underground electric railway which would link together the chief and various district postoffices of the city, some sixty-four in all.

According to the plans which are now under discussion, the line would be built twenty-five feet below the surface of the ground, and the tunnel would have a height of five feet and a breadth of four feet four inches. The stations would be built underneath the postoffices. The trains would run at twenty miles an hour, and would consist of a motor and three cars, each carrying as much as the ordinary post van.

It is estimated that seven years would be required for the construction of the line. While it would cost an enormous sum of money, in the long run the line could be operated for much less than the present horse and wagon service, while the mails could be handled in less than half the time now required for the purpose.—[Pall Mall Gazette.

THE KAISER'S PRESS-CUTTING AGENCY.

The German Emperor's interest in everything that goes on in the world is well known; but not every one is aware of the trouble he takes to keep in touch with current affairs. According to a Munich newspaper, the Kaiser reads at least three papers every day, changing the list several times a week in order to become fully acquainted with the ideas of all political parties in the state. But this by no means exhausts his appetite for information. Every day the Ministry for Foreign Affairs, as well as that of the Interior, has to provide newspaper cuttings, properly named and dated, and pasted on slips ready for the Emperor's perusal. These he carefully reads, making marginal notes as he goes along, and they are then scrupulously classified and put aside ready for immediatel reference. Often, too, the Emperor, whose catholicity of interest and insistence on method would prove invaluable to many a journalist, asks for cuttings relating to the particular technical subjects in which for the time he is specially interested.

THE STORY OF A UNIQUE CURE FOR TIRED NERVES.

By a Special Contributor.

HARRELL sat alone in the long, high-ceiled library of his city house. About him were books, heavy furniture, deep draperies. A narrow window or so let out upon the street, but no sound came through the shrouding and softening curtains, nor did rustle or whisper reach the ear through the silken covered doors which made toward the interior of the house. This was the sanctuary of the master. For the last three months he had been more and more in the habit of resorting to it. Here he could have silence, silence, and again silence. Of late he had seemed to crave it.

Time was when Harrell looked upon these rich surroundings with pride of ownership. They flattered him. In his twenty years of business life in the city, he had reached success—an American success. Folk pointed him out in awe, in a vast American envy. They felt a certain reverence for this august residence, tall, severe, seclusive. Harrell himself joined them in this feeling. He was proud of his own success. For twenty years, with the fierce joy of conflict, he had kept the business pace, more than kept it—had made it, forced it. Others had lagged and fallen, but not he.

Now he asked himself how it was, since these things were true, he could feel anything like weariness or fatigue, why it was that more and more often he came to this sanctuary to find solitude and silence. Yet, as to that, whose affair was it but his own?

It was Sunday afternoon. About Harrell's cushioned chair lay component parts of two Sunday newspapers. He had been trying to read them through, in the performance of one of his weekly duties. Church? He had not been inside a church for fifteen years. He remembered vaguely this afternoon that his father had been a deacon; that when he himself was a child his mother had been wont on Sunday morning to pin about his neck a broad white collar and send him out to Sunday-school. All that was a thousand years ago. They had been poor. As for himself, he had succeeded. He had had no mother for very many years. He had had the city. He had succeeded—yes, there was no doubt of that. That proof lay all about him.

As he gazed at the printed page before him, Harrell frowned; his broad jaw tightened in indignation. He had read this column head several times, and he had forgotten it. Why should he be preoccupied? He had read of the danger of too much preoccupation. Perhaps he would do better if he took up the magazines. He did so. He found himself reading the same page over and over again. He forgot the full-page picture, and turned back again. Now he began to wonder in a vague way, and as he did so he sat up listening.

What was that annoying noise? Was any one talking, whispering, disturbing him against his orders, breaking the silence which he coveted, which he needed? He frowned sternly and turned again to the page, which again began to blur. His mind was unstable, its detail not clean-cut in line, its performance like that of an unfocussed lens. It once again came to his ears, that sound. It was not whispering; it was not distant talking. It was moaning, low, distant moaning, as of some creature suffering.

Harrell sprang upright. His face had horror on it. It was his own voice that he had heard!

"God have mercy!" he murmured to himself, "I didn't know I was ill. Nonsense, nonsense!" He repeated it over and over again, looking about him. He stepped to the tall glass and gazed at the reflection which he saw. He seemed full-figured, a bit florid, apparently strong and healthy. Perhaps his gaze was a trifle tired, but then—might not a man become tired now and again? The forehead was still smooth, the eyes clear enough. A faint shade of something lay upon his face. But nothing—no, there was nothing in the face he saw which could suggest that back of it was hell!

"Am I going insane?" Harrell asked himself, seating himself and undertaking to argue the matter impartially. "Has anything gone wrong without my knowing it?" He paused, thinking. Again that sound came to his ear—the low moaning—his own voice! He shuddered, the sweat coming out upon his face.

"Nonsense!" he exclaimed again. "It is physical, purely. A brisk walk, a little exercise——" His glance fell upon a pair of dumbbells in front of the mirror. He picked them up and began going through a series of exercises. He had been an athlete in his day. It was of no use. His arms fell at his sides nerveless. A cold terror seized him. He sprang to the door, found his hat and coat in the hall, and hastened to the street.

The air and sunlight steadied him a trifle. "It is all right," he assured himself. "It might become serious, but I'll attend to it in time. I suppose I must see a doctor." He recalled that of late he had seen his wife look at him queerly, and had heard her sigh. At least she was not there to bother him today. It was three months since she had left for Old Point with her friends. He was proud of his wife. She carried off things well. And if one cared to remain home alone quietly, whose affair was it but his own? If one found it necessary to consult a doctor for a little nervousness, whose affair was that unless his own? Arnold was a specialist. He did not really require a specialist, he assured himself, but Arnold was a member of one of his clubs, and—well, he would drop in on Arnold casually.

But Dr. Arnold, the celebrated specialist, was not at home, neither was Billings, on the second block, nor Ismond, nor Joachim.

"Why don't these fellows stay at home?" protested Harrell to himself querulously. "Why one might be really ill, you know—a man obliged to go to work on Monday morning."

In a half daze Harrell found himself wandering away from the wide, clean, paved avenue with rows of mansions like his own. He found himself far to one side, upon a street he had never seen. There were apartments, flats, he supposed they called them, long rows of them, dingy, dreary, hopeless. Blurred lights began to shine as the twilight fell. Harrell had always hated November and the twilight. He looked about him now and there came upon him a sudden horror, and impulse to flee. It seemed to him that the eyes of some threatening creature were fastened upon him. The city seemed to him a great unclean beast of prey, ready to spring upon him, licking its chops now in the anticipated taste of human blood. He thought he had conquered the city, but the cynicism of the city now lay plain before him. Again there came to his ears the low moaning of some suffering creature—he did not know whether of his voice or another's. His pace quickened to a half run, and he fled down the street without purpose, seeking only escape.

When he came more to his proper senses he found himself within the doorway of a dingy apartment building, over whose entrance was a simple sign: "Dr. Wallingford." Harrell found himself pushing on up the stairs, pausing at length in front of a door with the same name upon a smaller sign. He knocked and was received by a gray-haired man of middle age, who looked inquiringly at him and asked him in.

"I would like to see the doctor—Dr. Wallingford," began Harrell.

"I am Dr. Wallingford. Walk into my office, please," replied the other.

The "office" was simply the hall bedroom of the apartment, its single window facing upon the street. Its walls showed a few books, a case or so of bottles, glasses and the like.

"Take this chair, if you please," said the doctor, motioning his visitor into a well-worn rocker near the window.

Harrell seated himself, as he did so looking keenly, almost defiantly, into the face of the other man. It was a face a trifle lined—old, if one cared so to phase it—yet the eyes were bright and steady, and the whole expression less one of professional solicitude than of genuine kindliness. There was no apology in Dr. Wallingford's attitude, nor any feeling of inadequacy apparent in his demeanor. "Might I ask your name?" he inquired.

"My name is Willard Harrell. I live over on the avenue, a block or so."

"Yes, I thought as much."

"How did you know?" The doctor smiled.

"One does not reach the station Willard Harrell has attained in life without being known, even in the city," said he; but there was no flattery in his speech. "Why did you come here, Mr. Harrell?" he continued.

"Because I needed you—that is, because I needed some doctor very much. I went out after Arnold—others whom I know. In some way I got over here—I am in a bad way, doctor."

The physician nodded silently. "You need not explain," said he gently. "That is, you need not explain your coming here. The main question is whether or not I can be of help to you."

"Oh, then, there can be help, you think? And, doctor, do you feel—that is—are you competent in a case like this?"

"I am not a specialist," said Dr. Wallingford quietly. "I am not a great man. But, without making any offhand diagnosis, I think perhaps I can be of use to you. I do not wholly need to be told, from the look of your eye, the color of your skin, your general expression, your actions, that you are in a very nervous condition. Perhaps you suffer from a touch of neurathenia—that is as good a word as any for it. You see, I have told you I am not a specialist."

Harrell sat and stared at him, but could find no immediate comment. The speech of the other was simple and free from any egotism, yet in some way it seemed to carry conviction. The agony on Harrell's face carried no less conviction in turn.

"You are probably living in hell, sir," said Wallingford, looking at him again.

"How did you know?" blurted out Harrell. "Who told you, and why should it be so? I have done nothing—besides, what do you know about it?"

Dr. Wallingford smiled. "No one can know anything about it," said he, "who has not died and walked unburied, as you do now."

"And you mean to tell me——" Harrell half sprang up from his chair.

"I mean to tell you this much. The nervous system may be hurt in many different ways for many different persons. Without introducing my own affairs, I can tell you that I understand something of your present condition. I am, unfortunately, qualified to understand it."

Harrell drew a long breath and turned his head. His eye was restless, his brow moist, yet perforce he listened.

"In your case," went on the even voice of the physician, "the cause was success. In my own case it was failure. As to that, joy and sorrow, excess and want, success and failure—each has the symptoms of its opposite."

Harrell turned back now, his chin in his hand. "One thing I can say as to yourself, doctor," he said, "and that is this, I would trade places with you now, even up, my success for your failure. You got well."

"Yes, and so shall you, Mr. Harrell, I do not doubt," replied Wallingford quietly.

A slow flush came over his visitor's face. Again he drew a deep breath. "If I could believe that!"

"Don't believe anything about yourself just yet, Mr. Harrell. If you knew that every messenger that brought you a telegram was bringing you a false one, was reporting to you false news, would you feel warranted in believing them?"

"Meaning——?"

"Your nerves are messengers, Mr. Harrell, ones, and unreliable at this time."

"But I cannot dispense with them; I cannot them——"

"No, but perhaps we can put them under a management. Let us see. Now you ask me to tell my own story? You want to hear that, do you? It may be of use to you." Harrell nodded.

"As to myself," went on Wallingford, "there was of the sensational in my case—simply that of a doctor who did not stop to rest. You see, I first in a small town. Arnold, by the way, was classmate of mine, but he came to the city at first. I came the last—came here, in short, to be forgotten, to have lived here in hell as you are living now, over on the avenue, Mr. Harrell.

"My wife and I saved a few hundred dollars out of financial ruin which meant so much to us. For a we traveled, to secure rest for me, change of milder climate. We spent most of our money and I came here, as I said, to finish my career of

"Yet I tried to rebel all I could. With all my I argued that it was wrong for me to lie awake at with torture in my breast, to wake up groaning—to up realizing that if a choice were left to me I would my face to the wall, never again to rise to go on the fight."

"I know," broke in Harrell; "I know how that

"Of course you do. The most dangerous symptom lack of interest in life. We ought all to enjoy exult in the fact that we are alive. I do enjoy today, Mr. Harrell, and so shall you some day truly hope. But let me tell you my own story it occurred.

"One day I wandered into a saloon, a cheap frequented by foreigners, laboring men, teamsters, ers and the like. I sat down at one of the little and ordered me a mug of beer, trying to be as like about me as I knew how. You smile? You never been in such a place. Your way in life has been than this. That is partly the reason why you turn face to the wall in the morning and ask God what use of it all. You have not learned that there are worlds besides your own, other people in the world sides yourself. Ah, pardon me if I make you wince, surgeon sometimes must.

"My teamsters were not, perhaps, overclean, but were healthy, hearty fellows. Some better-class ers came there once in awhile. It seemed to be a of meeting place or club. They were a normal, rious set. They did not seem so tense, so hard ruthless as you and I have been, Mr. Harrell. Five for a mug of beer, and a radish or so from the table—they would sit and laugh, and were happy. were happier than I, although I had had a university education, although I was a thinker, a student, a man of letters, after a fashion, and in business had been worker, a striver, bent upon my ambitions. They happier than you are, Mr. Harrell, although some of them were in your employment.

"Now, I shall not pretend to tell you when my began. I shall only say that without much plan I back to my little saloon with the sanded floor often this. I ate a radish and drank a pint and tried to myself as near like these others as possible. You understand what I mean by that, of course.

"So if you ask me about my cure, Mr. Harrell, I you briefly there it is, and that is what I shall prescribe for you, in one form or another."

"Odd medicine!" exclaimed Harrell.

"Yes, and discovered by chance, as are many dies. I do not ask you to do precisely as I did. your own remedy, as I did. In brief, it is to discover for yourself that the world is wide enough for all, that there is in it some one besides yourself. When can learn that, Mr. Harrell, you are cured. And might not tell you this."

"I wish I could believe it!" groaned Harrell, his hand across his face.

"It's easy to believe, or ought to be," said Dr. Wallingford. "My dear sir, living is only swimming in water, and we are all children. If we flurry we Resign ourselves—float—and we are saved. Learn float, Mr. Harrell, for, after all, you are but one many on the tide of life, and the tide is master of alike.

"Now, you call this preaching, not practicing cine, don't you? You want some specific remedy, least you must have some specific name for my Very well, you shall have it. Call it democracy, humanity. Remember, I do not preach this as phy, but as medicine. I have established no cult, have made no discovery, and offer no have nothing to proclaim, Mr. Harrell, which been in the world all the time. I am poor. I succeeded. Yet a moment ago you were so good offer to exchange places with me. Forgive me, yet care for the exchange."

His patient shifted uneasily in his chair. does not help me——" he began.

"My dear sir," reproved Wallingford, "why sist upon the A, B, C? Of course, I cannot it is you who are to help yourself. But remedy grows on a tree whose roots are in the egotism. You cannot get well if you think only self."

"By Jove!" said Harrell suddenly, "I believe right. I do, by Jove!"

"Of course I am right, as you can prove own life. Hasn't any one ever done you act, ever helped you without hope of pay?"

Harrell shook his head. "Not lately," he "but some time——"

The Bearded Ghost.

"MARK TWAIN on the Minnetonka," said a Duluth man, "talked a good deal about Christian Science, to which he seems to be very strongly opposed. I believe, in fact, that he has written a book against it.

"But the book is neither here nor there. I know nothing about that. What I want to tell you is a story Mark Twain told me on the subject of Christian Science. He said that the attempts of Christian Scientists to prove their system scientifically were about as truly scientific as the method of a widow he used to know in Hartford. This widow, at a sewing circle, announced one day that the hair grew after death. This was a positive fact. She had scientific proof of it.

"'How ghastly!' said a young girl. 'And how did you get this proof, Mrs. Jones?'

"'Well,' Mrs. Jones answered, 'I believe in Spiritualism, and last Saturday night I attended a seance.

"'The room was very dark and still. We held one another's hands. In the darkness and the stillness the medium materialized poor dear Joseph for me.

"'I recognized his dim outlines. He approached softly. He bent over and kissed me, sweetly and tenderly, on the lips. And do you know——'

"She paused to give weight to her words.

"'And do you know, whereas Joe was clean-shaven in life, he now has the softest, silkiest mustache and beard!'"

A Scotchman's Idea.

UPTON SINCLAIR was discussing in New York the Government's attacks upon predatory and lawbreaking trusts.

"It looks as if these trusts," sadi Mr. Sinclair, "will have to obey the law, or else their owners will find themselves as badly sold as the rich Bostonian who bought an estate in Scotland called Glen Accra. The Bostonian bought this estate without having seen it. He believed that he could trust the man he bought it from. And last summer he went over to have a look at the place. The drive from the nearest railway station to Glen Accra was a matter of twelve miles. The Bostonian hired a Highlander to drive him. As the cart jogged along, the Bostonian said:

"'I suppose you know the country hereabouts pretty well, friend?'

"'Aye, ilka foot o't,' the Scot answered.

"'And do you know Glen Accra?'

"'Aye, weel,' was the reply.

"'What sort of a place is it?' the American asked.

"The Scot smiled grimly.

"'Aweel,' he said, 'if ye saw the de'il tethered on it, ye'd juist say: Poor brute!'"

The Prize Fly.

POULTNEY BIGELOW, the brilliant author and journalist, said the other day of the chicken farm that he is about to set up at Malden:

"I hope we succeed with this farm. I hope our experience won't too closely resemble that of my old friend Rash Rogers. Rash Rogers lived in the suburbs. On a suburban train one morning he said to me with a wry laugh:

"'I've got something nobody else has got, Mr. Bigelow.'

"'Have you, Rash?' said I. 'What is it?'

"'Well,' said Rogers, 'I bought a $50 incubator last month, put $15 worth of eggs in it, and hatched out a bluebottle fly.'

"He frowned, then sighed.

"'Yes,' he said, 'I've got the only $65 bluebottle fly in the world.'"

Why Not?

DR. FRANK C. BOSTWICK, official dentist to the Sultan of Morocco, has been spending his vacation at Plainfield, N. J., and at a recent dinner he said, apropos of a bad child:

"It is wise to punish children, but not corporally. I knew a dentist in Gibraltar who got out a birch rod to punish his little son with one day. The boy, looking at the rod, said piteously:

"'Papa, would you mind giving me gas first?'"

One-Side Flirts.

MRS. HARRIET STANTON BLATCH has brought suit against a New York hotel-keeper who would not serve her lunch in his restaurant because she was without a male escort.

A woman illustrator said the other day:

"Mrs. Blatch is wise and kind. How many women are there who would go to such trouble for their sisters? The hotel manager said to her, as he put her out: 'We make this rule for just such ladies as you. We do it to keep out objectionable women.' But Mrs. Blatch's lip curled, and the retorted: 'I have never been bothered by objectionable women, but only by objectionable men.'

"How clever that was. And it is a fact, isn't it? It is objectionable men, not objectionable women, that make trouble. You often hear of a male flirt getting a drubbing, but did you ever hear of a female flirt being drubbed? Mrs. Blatch, talking of these objectionable males, told me a story.

"She said that a showy type of man, the type that wears a diamond button in the bosom of his colored shirt, once entered a Pullman car and seated himself opposite a very beautiful young woman. He stared with bold looks into her soft eyes, twirled his mustache, twinkled the jewel on his fat finger. But suddenly her husband leaned toward him.

"'Excuse me, sir,' the husband said, 'but have you seen this morning's Press? Very interesting Standard-Oil story on the front page.'

"And he thrust the paper into the masher's hand, and the masher, thanking him politely, was obliged to hide himself behind the broad pages.

"At the end of fifteen minutes or so the man put the paper down, and caressed the woman with his bold eyes again. Instantly the husband offered him a magazine.

"'I recommend,' he said, 'the Jacobs story. Page 74. It is immense.'

"'Thanks very much,' said the masher; and once more he had to fall to reading.

"When he finished the story, the husband proffered him a novel.

"'It is Conrad's latest. Pray look it over.'

"'You are extremely kind,' said the masher, 'but I get off at the next station.'

"'Oh,' said the other.

"'Yes,' the masher repeated. He hesitated, then resumed: 'By the way, you have been very courteous to me. Do you mind telling me what prompted you to offer so many kindnesses to an utter stranger?'

"'Not at all,' said the other man readily. 'You see, I am blessed with a pretty wife, and mashers bother her to death. For the first year or two of our marriage, I used to slug every man who annoyed her. But I found that course, what with arrests and lawsuits, both troublesome and scandalous. So now I have adopted another system, and as soon as I see any one making eyes at the dear lady, I so overload him with attentions and entertainment that he is kept too busy to annoy her.'

"The husband paused and smiled very pleasantly.

"'Had you remained with us an hour or two longer,' he concluded, 'I should have offered you another newspaper, two more magazines, a bottle of mineral water, and a puzzle.'"

Bilked.

FRITZ KIRSCHMANN, New York's sealer of weights and measures, says that the public of the State loses $20,000,000 a year in short weight.

"When the public thinks of this," said Mr. Kirschmann recently, "its blood boils. Here, though, is an incident that should cool the public's blood a little.

"I'll preface the incident with the statement that very, very few of our dealers are dishonest, and that $20,000,000 is a very small percentage of the annual expenditure of the people of this State.

"Now to resume.

"A man told me the other day how he said to his son with a groan:

"'Jerome, Bylk the grocer tells me that he has had to discharge you for swindling him. This is a terrible disgrace to bring on the family, Jerome.'

"The boy flushed.

"'It was all a mistake, father,' he said. 'I didn't mean to do it, really. Mr. Bylk gave me some beeswax to put under the scales, and I put it on the wrong side.'"

Dividing the Responsibility.

EARLY in Baron Huddleston's career at the bar he snared rooms with another barrister. Bodkin went one evening to take tea and wine with the future baron, and he particularly noticed the dirty, slovenly appearance of the clerk who waited upon them, and whom the host had for the once assumed exclusive possession.

Bodkin strongly advised Huddleston to insist on a change in the treatment of the youngster's person and appearance, and said it was scarcely decent to have a person in that dingy condition about him. "I do not much like to interfere," was the reply, "he looks upon Mr. T. as his master, and at the utmost I cannot claim more than half of him."

"Then," said Bodkin, "I would, at all events, make him wash my half of his face."—[Bench and Bar.

War's Last Use Fled.

"WAR," said the truculent old general, "is a necessity. Science teaches us that we must have war in order to keep the population properly thinned down."

"Science once taught us so," the apostle of universal peace agreed, "but you must remember, general, that that was before the advent of the automobile."

A Good Retort.

"THE late Robert Pinkerton, of the great detective agency," said a Chicago detective, "was a religious man, and he liked nothing better than to listen to a good, liberal, intelligent sermon. He was once talking to me about the change for the better that has come over American sermons in the past ten or twenty years. He said sermons were gentler than they used to be. They no longer reeked of fire and brimstone.

"Once," he said, he heard a famous evangelist preach in San Francisco. The evangelist shocked the congregation a good deal. He told them that his grandmother had been a good and moral woman, but she had never professed religion, and therefore he was confident that at that moment the aged lady was suffering eternal torment.

"A young man rose at this, and with a look of disgust started for the door. The evangelist pointed an accusing finger at him.

"'There is a young man,' he cried, 'who is also on the downward path.'

"The young man turned. His face was very red. But he smiled pleasantly, and said, in a loud, pleasant voice:

"'Is there any message I can take to your grandmother, sir?'"

He Kept His Head.

AS the Adriatic plowed her way through soft, blue summer seas, a group of tourists in the smoking-room talked of the horrors of fire on shipboard.

"Fire in a theater is a bad thing, too," said Clyde Fitch, the dramatist; "yet it sometimes has its funny side. I remember an incident that happened in Concord. The villain in a Concord melodrama, as he lighted his cigarette, set a newspaper ablaze, and a great fire scare arose. Amidst this scare, as the panic-stricken audience struggled and howled and fought, a fat man galloped up to the box office and shouted in an angry and accusing voice:

"'Theater's afire. Gimme me money back.'"

The Infallible Editor.

"LAFCADIO HEARN worked on newspapers in his youth," said a publisher, "and the ruthless way his stories were changed, cut and butchered was a great woe to his heart. In after years Hearn took a malicious joy in collecting stories about editors—editors and their superior and omniscient way with manuscript. One of his stories was of an editor to whom a subscriber said:

"'I enjoyed that poem on the three ages of man in today's paper, Mr. Sheers; I enjoyed it immensely. Do you know, though, I thought that it was originally written the seven ages of man?'

"'So it was, sir; so it was,' said Editor Sheers pompously. 'Yes, the extract was originally written the seven ages of man, but I had to cut it down for lack of space.'

"Another story concerned a weather report. A reporter, discussing the weather, wrote that winter still lingered in the lap of spring.

"The editor, as he read over the article, called the reporter up to his desk and told him that he would cut out that sentence about winter lingering in the spring's lap. He said the idea was good enough, and original, and all that sort of thing; but it would not do to publish it because the high moral tone of the paper had to be maintained in a town full of high-school girls."

No Changing the Log.

ON a certain ship the mate was too fond of the cup that cheers. The captain did his utmost to break him of this habit, and, everything else failing, told him that the next time he was drunk he would write it in the log. For a long time after this the mate stopped drinking, but one day he fell into his old habit. Thereupon the captain wrote the following entry in the log:

"August 12, 19—; 60 deg. north longitude, 70 deg. west latitude. Mate Jones is drunk today."

The mate begged him to take this off, saying that it would spoil his chances of ever being made captain of a ship. But the captain said, "It's true, isn't it?"

"Yes; but——" replied the mate.

"Well," said the captain, "the record stands."

A few days later the mate had to write the entry. On looking over the log the amazed captain saw this entry:

"August 15, 19—; 80 deg. north longitude, 67 deg. west latitude. Capt. Smith is sober today."

He sent for the mate and demanded what he meant by such an entry, ordering him to take it off.

"Well," said the mate, "it's true, isn't it?"

"Of course it's true!" roared the captain.

"Then the record stands," replied the mate.—[Judge's Library.

Class Distinctions.

"THE outward signs between first, second and third-class traveling in England are sometimes more conspicuous by their absence than otherwise," remarked Miss Mary Mannering, in Rida Johnson Young's "Glorious Betsy." "But I did run across one real distinction in Europe this summer. It was in an omnibus between two little English villages and there were three classes of seats though they looked all alike as pease. I wondered why I was first-class and thought I had been 'done' until a long steep hill appeared. The driver, halting at the foot of this, turned his head and shouted:

"'First-class passengers keep their seats. Second-class please dismount and walk. Third-class get out and 'push.'"—[Young's Magazine.

His Way Home.

A NERVOUS man on his lonely homeward way heard the echoing of footsteps behind him, and dim visions of hold-up men and garroters coursed through his brain. The faster he walked the more the man behind increased his speed, and although the nervous one took the most roundabout and devious course he could devise, still his tracker followed. At last he turned into a churchyard.

"If he follows me here," he decided, "there can be no doubt about his intentions."

The man behind did follow, and, quivering with fear and rage, the nervous one turned and confronted him.

"What do you want?" he demanded. "Why are you following me?"

"Do you always go home like this?" asked the stranger, "or are you giving yourself a treat tonight? I am going up to Mr. Brown's, and the porter at the station told me to follow you, as you lived next door. Excuse my asking, but are you going home at all tonight?"—[London Opinion.

HABITS OF TREES.

INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS MADE IN CALIFORNIA.

By Ernest Braunton.

THE Brooklyn Eagle recently published an article under the head: "Habits of Trees Fixed; United State Foresters Discover that it is Impossible to Acclimatize Them," a fact that will prove a urprise to many of our practical growers who are laboring under the delusion that they have produced hardiness in plants and fruits. The Eagle states:

"The United States foresters have discovered that trees in their habits are fixed and almost inflexible, and that it is impossible to acclimatize them. For centuries—indeed, as long as we have record—each species has kept in its beaten ways, insisting on the same average of temperature and refusing to grow where this could not be found; seeking and occupying certain kinds of soil and demanding certain amounts of moisture and avoiding situations where these were wanting.

A FORMAL TREE.

"The latest authorities go so far as to declare that trees cannot be acclimatized; that is that even the ingenuity and perseverance of man are unable to induce trees to change their habits far enough to adopt a country not closely like their native habitat. For a time the forester may use various devices to surround a tree with artificial conditions, by which, so to speak, the tree is deluded into feeling at home. But as soon as the forester's care is withdrawn, in such cases the tree is seized with homesickness and dies."

In California are many practical men who have for years labored to obtain trees, both fruit and ornamental, that were more hardy than the original type introduced and who have supposed they have, and are accomplishing the desired results. We have found in the avocado or alligator pear that successive generations of seedlings have become more and more immune to frost. The tree brought here from the tropics does not become more resistant during its life nor will buds or grafts from these trees put on hardier stocks prove more immune. Also trees of the same species brought in from the cooler parts of Mexico prove much more hardy than those from Hawaii, Cuba, and strictly tropical climates.

In the case of the avocado, blue gum, camphor tree and a number of others, local growers have the third generation from seed grown here, and it has been noted that each succeeding generation was more frost-resistant than the previous one. Orchardists have noted that fruit trees originated in the northern States, shipped to the south and grown for generations were not hardy in the section where originated when sent back for trial. In the face of these undisputed facts we will have to differ with the Eagle and whosoever else may wish to stand sponsor for the above quoted paragraphs.

Formality in Trees.

We cannot but rejoice to note the falling off in the planting of Arancarias in our smaller gardens. In spacious grounds ample room may be found for trees of a strict or formal habit, but in an ordinary city lot they spoil the effect as a whole, no matter what else may be planted to overcome such an effect. We have in the past planted too many of the Norfolk Island or Star Pine. While they are beautiful while young, and also make ideal pot plants, in a small yard they are totally destructive of all beauty and harmony.

New Dahlias.

A few days ago we were presented with a bunch of dahlia flowers, all labelled with names that are said to have been from prize-winning stock exhibited at the Crystal Palace show in London, and they certainly looked it, for some were the largest ever seen in Southern California, and others were of a new cactus type far ahead of anything else grown in this section.

Souvenir de Gustav Doazon was a giant just eight and one-half inches across, of a bright orange scarlet. Jean Charmet is but little smaller, also belonging to the "show dahlia" class. Dazzling as are these mammoth flowers, they in no wise compare with some of the newer cactus type. Out of the number sent we shall notice but four, of widely-varying colors. This new type has the quilled petals of the purest cactus dahlia, but in place of the stiff spine-like habit the petals have a looser and more graceful poise that makes them much less formal in general appearance and effect. Among them the most distinct colors were: Eva, a pure white of exceptionally small, tightly-rolled quills that gives it a modest air as compared with the stiffer and coarser cactus type; Victorian, a bicolor also of loose habit, the center petals of pure white and the outer ones golden yellow; Nelson, a well-quilled bright crimson, and lastly and to the writer the best of all, William Keith, an extra fine cactus type of the darkest maroon ever seen in a dahlia. This last noted flower could properly have been dubbed Black Knight, Black Prince or something touching its marvellous coloring, for no flower in the dahlia family could be nearer black. Altogether the bunch formed a good illustration of the present-day development in garden flowers.

Tuberous-rooted Begonias.

The ever-popular tuberous begonia has of late undergone a development in regard to color, constitution, habit and hardiness that puts them most decidedly in the list of general bedding plants. Every year we see more of them planted out in our Los Angeles gardens in shaded or partially-shaded spots, where in a light, well-drained soil, with a fair water supply, they present an effect hard to surpass with any class of bedding material.

Passing of the Geranium.

For a score of years the geranium has held first place in the demand for bedding material in Southern California, and when nothing else would do the geranium has proven the good old standby. Thriving in any soil, living for years without other water than that which fell from the heavens, the geranium blooms on unmindful of soil, climate, food, or drink.

After having served its purpose of a hardy pioneer it now appears that our people are getting tired of it and are turning to a more stylish class of plants for similar results. The geranium is still being planted, but not so extensively as in former years. Dealers report that whereas three or four years ago the demand exceeded the supply, those conditions are now reversed. This does not show a lack of appreciation, but rather a real deep appreciation of plants in general. Gernaniums have their place, but their use has become so universal as to be extremely monotonous and their extensive use about a dwelling generally shows a lack of taste or lack of means. A few really prefer them, but the majority use them only for economic reasons. Would we had come to the change before we were nauseated with the scarlet geranium. We have many more desirable plants for nearly all purposes.

Abnormal Floral Organs.

It is not an unusual occurrence to find some slight departure from the normal type in our common flowers, but the gladioli seldom sport in any way noticeable to the average flower grower. Out of a lot of 300 bulbs used for experiments in cross fertilization the writer this year found no freaks except in the reproductive organs and they were slight. In the floral envelopes or flower proper as generally understood, no noticeable departure from type occurred.

Ordinarily a gladiolus has three stamens and a thrice divided or forked pistil. In the 300 spikes averaging a dozen flowers each, a total of 3600, but one had two stamens, eight bore four each, and one contained five full-sized pollen-bearing organs. None of these flowers differed from the others in any way except the last noted, and this one, in addition to the five stamens, also bore a five-forked pistil which was correspondingly robust. This blossom occurred on a spike of reddish-pink, all the flowers of which were pollenized from the well-known "America" and the resultant seed food differs in no wise from the others on the spike. No evidence is forthcoming as to the cause of such freak as nine other blossoms on the same plant were of normal type.

Phoenix Roebelenii.

Of late years we have been in dire need of a small decorative pot palm to take the place of Cocos Weddelliana, which latter needs much care and coddling in our dry climate to be at all practicable for house use. The deficiency is now fully supplied by a very neat and graceful Dwarf Phoenix, by name P. Robelenii. This species appears to be as tough and endurable as any of the more common ones so familiar to us, yet at maturity reaches a total height of but four feet, and this only after a great many years. The demand for this palm at present exceeds the supply, but as none die for want of care, as was the case with nearly all the Cocos Weddelliana still here, we may expect to see it quite common in the near future.

Soils for Monterey Pines.

An English authority whose word is seldom or never questioned, has recorded the fact that the Monterey pine native to a restricted area in California, does not thrive in England except on soil with a limestone base and exceptionally well drained. In Southern California very conditions may be noted, a very well-drained soil containing a trace of lime proving the best for both health and longevity. At best it is a short-lived tree, and when planted on a cold clay with poor drainage, that is on comparatively level ground, it lives but from twenty to forty years. Much doubt exists as to whether it will live much longer than the latter period under any but perfectly natural conditions, that is, left to its own resources.

The City Beautiful—Its Avenues, Streets, Parks and Lakes.

TO BEAUTIFY THE CITY.

SOMETHING ABOUT THE PROPOSED WORK OF MR. ROBINSON.

UPON request, F. W. Blanchard, president of the Los Angeles Municipal Art Commission, has written a letter to this department outlining the work expected of Charles Mulford Robinson when he visits our city a few weeks hence.

Our readers may not all be aware that Mr. Robinson, whose home is in Rochester, N. Y., is considered the greatest municipal architect living, and that his services have been secured by a considerable number of our larger cities where serious complexities have arisen that were incapable of solution by the local government or local talent. In this line of work, Mr. Robinson has made an enviable reputation, and his coming to Los Angeles, if taken full advantage of, means more to our city than anything ever considered in connection with the beauty of Los Angeles, or indeed of Southern California, for if the recommendations in Mr. Robinson's report are carried out, it will have an uplifting and upbuilding influence upon the whole of our fair southland.

It is expected that Mr. Robinson will begin his study of Los Angeles about November, and that he will then formulate a plan for the beautifying and bettering of the whole, having an eye upon the necessary parkways, boulevards, fenways, grouping of public buildings, location of statues, fountains and other phases of architectural beauty. Undoubtedly upon the completion of the Owens River conduit we shall wish to erect a fountain in keeping with the size and importance of the project to our city and the whole of Southern California.

FIGUEROA STREET.

The writer sincerely hopes that Mr. Robinson will [illegible] the statue phase of the work unless he may choose one place, not too obtrusive, where all may be placed for the benefit of those who wish to view them—the morbidly curious and those who would live in the past. As for real monuments, the case is different—a monument of great size, with proper setting may be of real architectural beauty—a fitting remembrance of a great man or great event, and any statue incorporated in the scheme, while it may be the theme, does not appear obtrusive. Simple life-size statues, without appropriate surroundings and architectural mountings are always objectionable in public places. No doubt the good taste and wide experience of Mr. Robinson will make proper disposition of all these features, but too many parks and squares in our larger cities look much like neglected cemeteries.

It is not the intention of our art commission to take up the matter as a whole, just at present, but if these improvements are planned the recommendations will surely have a decided influence on new buildings; the laying of streets and kindred matters and prove of great and lasting benefit to our city. The completed report will be presented to the Board of Public Works and the City Council, and if accepted will be printed in pamphlet form and widely distributed so that all may become familiar with the scheme and have a chance to express themselves concerning the same. Los Angeles is in sore need of a comprehensive plan for future development and making available what beauty we have and a proper addition to the small stock on hand. As the coming metropolis of the West—the Mecca of all Eastern travelers, we need to rank in attractiveness, as a city, with our Italy of America, whose wonder climate, natural beauty and resources are world-famous.

The City Beautiful.

In many parts of our city where even the street planting is at fault or none at all, the front yards are sufficiently ornate to claim the admiration of the passer-by. These improvements are all the more noticeable because of the lack of beauty provided by the municipality. The examples here noted should occur in broad, generous, well-planted parkways that would be the same in effect as the front yards, and these latter should be modestly screened from the public's bold stare, yet a glimpse left so that an impression should be gained of the beauty within.

Under such a scheme each would have its own—the public would be satisfied with the beautiful street parkways and the owner have for the use of himself and family what rightly belongs only to him—the broad, rich expanse of front lawn with the protecting plantation at the boundary. The lack of beautiful streets has caused the property owner to remove fences, hedges and border plantations, and the public has sometimes admired, sometimes marvelled that supposed home lovers should so nearly live upon the street, in full view of the public. Visitors may admire such premises, but there is a pathos about it in contemplating the destruction of home life involved in such a scheme. Grand it may be, but it recalls a motto engraven on a beam in the Glenwood at Riverside: "Ye canna be baith grand and comfortable."

Down With the Billboards.

Under the above head Mr. Clinton Rogers Woodruff in the September issue of the American Review of Reviews, has the following strong words of commendation for the crusade now going on in our city against the ever-obnoxious billboard:

"It seems strange, but it is nevertheless true, that the Municipal League of Los Angeles has been offering prizes for ugly spots in that city. Most cities and most representative organizations like to put their "best foot foremost." Here, however, is a deliberate effort to find out wherein this generally beautiful city is lacking, so that it may become a wholly beautiful city. Rubbish, weeds, and billboards have afforded the camera abundant material, and the showing of delinquencies is likely to be followed by some much-needed cleaning-up.

"The Los Angeles example is worthy of imitation, especially in connection with the crusade that is so badly needed in every community for the elimination of the objectionable billboard. If the citizens and officials of a community could be shown by means of photographs how intolerable the poster nuisance is, it is difficult to believe that they would long remain inert. There is now no question in the minds of thoughtful observers that the presence of unsightly billboards is incompatible with the presentation of an attractive aspect in a city. It is like the placing of a garish patch on a dress suit. Moreover, public authorities are beginning to appreciate that not only are billboards detrimental to the physical beauty of a community, but likewise to health and property. So daring and impudent has the bill poster grown that he does not hesitate to place his boards where and when he pleases, shutting out light, air, and sunshine.

"Fortunately, however, the volume of protest against the evil is growing. Not only are the women, through their various organizations, taking up arms, but officials and business men are enlisting for the war. In fact, the outcry against the billboard is an encouraging sign of the advance of culture in America."

Municipal Betterment.

There is a strong trend in Southern California at present, stronger by far than any like feeling manifested in past years, toward a building of beautiful cities. Our larger centers of population, those with heavy problems before them, are calling in world-famous men who have studied at home and abroad the solving of those gigantic problems which only great and congested cities have to deal with. Smaller cities are employing talent to plan parks and breathing spots, tree-planting schemes, boulevards, parkways and all the other incidentals and accessories to the city beautiful. Truly we are having an awakening to the importance of this class of work, and we are sure to realize, in the near future, a still more beautiful Southern California.

Be Patient With Fuchsias.

Several have complained to this department that fuchsias bought of local nurserymen have not produced flowers of the size claimed by the dealer, though the best of care has been accorded the plants. Not one fuchsia in a hundred will produce flowers of normal size the first year, and indeed some do not till the third. If the plants make a rank growth the first year they should be severely pruned back into good form, and will seldom fail to respond satisfactorily the second year

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

PARTI-COLORED VARIETIES.

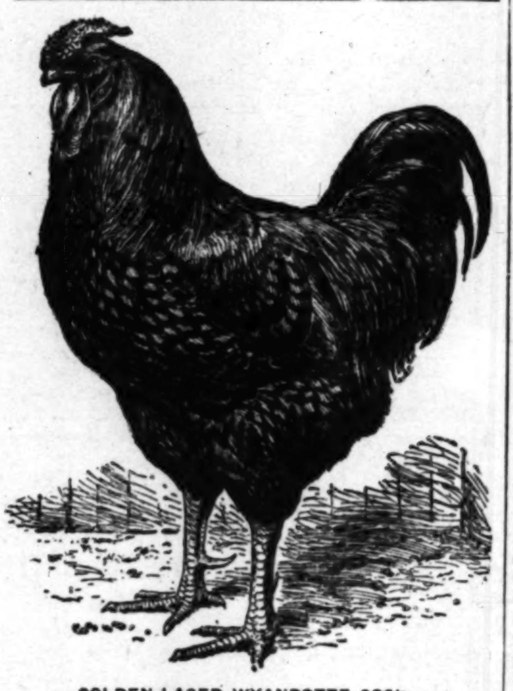
THE MORE POPULAR KINDS BRED IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

THE number of breeds and varieties of the domesticated fowl enjoying more than one color of plumage are indeed numerous, covering in their entirety nearly every class listed in the American standard of perfection. In some breeds, like, for instance, the colored Dorkings, the essentials of color markings are not so distinctively individual as in the case of the Barred Plymouth Rocks, though as a whole the color qualifications of the parti-colored varieties are quite as distinctive as in any of the solid colored birds. Indeed, in many of the sorts the skill of the breeder for points is taxed to the utmost to produce stock which shall be free from disqualifications and pure in color considerations. The parti-colored varieties covering so wide a range it will hardly be possible to cover the subject all at one time; hence we will take the more popular sorts as they are known and bred in Southern California.

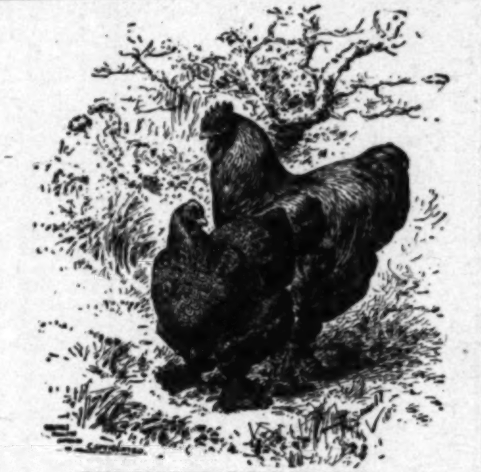
Of these the American class is not only the best known, but there are possibly a larger number of varieties represented than in any other of the remaining classes claiming recognition in the standard. For instance, in Plymouth Rocks the standard recognizes only the Barred, though we have the Partridge and the Light Brahma Rocks, both of which are being developed in the hands of experienced breeders. In spite of the fact that the Barred have been bred extensively for nearly fifty years, it still remains one of the most difficult breeds to handle in the matter of true color of plumage. To secure the best results many of the more advanced breeders resort to the double-mating system, i.e., one mating to produce male birds up to standard and another for females. This is really a fine distinction, and can only be commended when in the hands of the experienced breeder. Many choice birds are produced, however, with the single matings, provided, however, you thoroughly know your strain. An experience of four years with Barred Rocks certainly convinced the writer that to produce fine colored birds is not the easy undertaking that many suppose. Just one instance will illustrate this point. In the early part of 1897 the writer secured the first prize cock bird at the Los Angeles show for 1896, and mated him to seven choice females. What was the result? Every one of his chicks developed white in wing flight so badly as to make them available only for the market. This was simply a case of reversion accentuated in the commingling of strains about which the writer knew nothing on the male side. The Partridge and Light Brahma or Light Rocks are as yet but little known, though not without promise as regards beauty and breeding quality. In economic points all are good.



GOLDEN-LACED WYANDOTTE COCK.

The Wyandottes number many sorts in parti-colored plumage. There are the Partridge, the Columbian, the Golden and Silver Laced, the Silver-Penciled and the Buff Laced. Of these the Silver and Golden Laced are the oldest, the former possessing a great following some twenty years ago, and is still a prominent factor in the industry both in the East and West. The Partridge when at its best is a beautiful variety, possessing the same color markings as the Partridge Cochins, but without feathered shanks and toes. The same remarks apply to the Columbians in comparison with the Light Brahmas. In the Silver-Penciled the ground color is silvery-white, where in the Partridge it is orange or golden-red. In the Silvers the body color is white; cock breast and under parts have each feather on the outer edge marked with jet-black lacing; in the hen the whole body is marked in the same way. Cock head and neck are silvery white, except that the neck hackle has a clear black stripe through the center of each feather; the saddle hackle marked in the same way; back and wing bow silvery white; tail feathers, coverts, thigh and fluff are black. In the Golden Wyandotte the markings are the same as in the Silvers, but the ground color is of a rich golden bay. In the Buff Laced the neck, saddle and hackle feathers have a white stripe down the center, and on the breast and thighs in the male each feather is laced with well-defined white lines; under color and tail are white.

The Rhode Island Reds are also of the American class, there being two varieties, the Single and Rose-Combed. They are a brilliant red throughout with the exception of tail and wing flights, which are black. There is a tendency to grain or mealiness in the plumage of this breed, which we are glad to learn is being carefully eliminated when in the hands of its best breeders.



PAIR PARTRIDGE COCHIN FOWL.

In Asiatics we have the Light and Dark Brahmas, Partridge and Cuckoo Cochins, Black-Red Malay, and Mottled Java. There is also the Aseel, which breeds to all colors, much like the Pit Games of our Southern States.

The Light and Dark Brahmas and Partridge Cochins are the best known, both being a feature at nearly all Pacific Coast shows. In economic importance the former seems in the lead—at any rate more people are breeding it. In the Lights the plumage is a silvery white, densely and sharply striped with black in the center of each feather on neck and hackles; primary feathers on wings are black or black edged with white; tail and tail coverts glossy black; other parts of the body white. In the Darks, head, beak, and shoulder coverts are white, as are wing bows; neck and saddle hackles white striped with black in center; breast, thighs, fluff, primary feathers, legs and leg feathering intense black. In hens each feather is penciled with white upon a dark background.

Bred true to color requirements, the Partridge Cochin is indeed a beautiful bird. The head is a dark-red orange, hackle orange or golden-red, with a black stripe in the center of each feather; breast, under parts, tail, leg feathers and parts of the wings are black; back, shoulders, coverts and wing bow are dark red. In the Cuckoo Cochin (but little known in the West) the ground color is a light bluish gray, each feather barred across with bands of darker gray or blue.

Interesting Meeting of Poultrymen.

It may not be generally known to the men and women interested in poultry both for pleasure and for profit that the Los Angeles County Poultry Association has inaugurated a series of open meetings, at which addresses are made by experts and a general discussion is had along educational lines. The object of these open meetings, to which the public is welcome, is essentially educational; to show where wear and tear can be diminished, time and labor saved, and the largest possible profit is to be realized in the prosecution of the poultry business. The initial open meeting was held a week ago, September 7, at 107½ North Main street, at which Mr. William M. Humphreys delivered a telling address on the present outlook of poultry culture in Southern California. He was followed by Mr. Kline of Burbank, who told of his experience in hatching and brooding chickens by the thousand on his poultry farm. In his talk he revealed the fact that his hens had earned him $2 each during the past year; to verify his statement he explained how it was done—his system of housing, feeding and management. Mr. Schofield of the Gardena hatchery explained how he managed his extensive incubator and brooder plant, giving voice to many practical suggestions of incalculable value to beginners all along the line. The general discussion that followed these short addresses was spirited and interesting. There were present upward of 200 breeders—a number The Times hopes to see doubled at the next meeting, notice of which will appear in this department.

Why There Are Failures.

It does not stand to reason that every one who [illegible] into the poultry business will succeed, any more [illegible] there shall be only successes in the grocery [illegible] journalism or general farming. In Southern California the failures are possibly more pronounced [illegible] where, for the reason that the climate and [illegible] tions are unusually alluring for the outdoor life [illegible] result is that many go into fruit culture, poultry [illegible] ing, flora culture and kindred occupations without [illegible] knowledge of their requirements, nor experience [illegible] prevailing local conditions. There is probably no [illegible] occupation to which this criticism applies so forcibly [illegible] it does to the breeding and management of poultry [illegible] ing, with the result that success is at best only [illegible] ent. To the novice we suggest a careful study of [illegible] more successful breeders in his neighborhood; [illegible] thoroughly familiar with the requirements and [illegible] teristics of the hen. Having gained this basic [illegible] tion, make your hens as comfortable as possible. [illegible] obviously means a good deal, but without it you will [illegible] succeed. If a novice, do not be afraid to ask [illegible] if you fail to secure the desired information [illegible] troubles into this department of The Times. If we [illegible] not help you, rest assured it will not hurt any [illegible] you so.

THE OLDEST CITY IN THE WORLD.

In a sand-swept belt of Central Babylonia, [illegible] try of ancient ruins, in a region dangerous and [illegible] because far from water, and on the border of the [illegible] tory of several hostile Arab tribes, lies the low [illegible] Bismya. Few explorers have ever visited it, and [illegible] few did so at the peril of their lives. Dr. Peters of [illegible] York, while excavating at Nippur, discovered at [illegible] a clay tablet of an ancient date. German explorers [illegible] reported to have said that the ruins originated [illegible] the civilization of the Arabs. However, not only the [illegible] of the ruins, but the name and history of the [illegible] city of which they are composed, continued a [illegible] until recently.

Christmas Day, 1903, we began excavating at [illegible] and the result was the discovery of the oldest [illegible] the world. The walls of the tower soon appeared [illegible] summit was cleared, and the first inscription [illegible] upon the surface was a brick stamped with the [illegible] Dungi of 2750 B.C. Just beneath it were other [illegible] bearing the name of UrGur of 2800 B.C; a little [illegible] appeared a crumpled piece of gold with the [illegible] Naram Sin of 3750 B. Lausanne and Its Environs

CHARMS OF THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CITY IN SWITZERLAND.

By a Special Contributor.

WHERE the discriminating traveler to be asked which he considered the most beautiful city in Switzerland, he could give but one answer. Sensuous Lucerne and commercial Geneva have their charms, but Lausanne stands alone as the home of poetry and song. Within its gates Byron did much of his best work, and Cardinal Newman spent many of his happiest hours beneath the shadows of the ring peaks.

Lausanne, or Lausonium, as the Romans called it, is ated far up on the mountain side at the most picesque point of Lac Leman, and the very streets seem breathe romance. The heroes of Swiss history seem living beings here in the shadows of majestic Mont Blanc, and the traveler can readily understand the devotion with which the brave citizens of Canton Vaux fought for their homes.

The history of Lac Leman is glorious and pathetic. The house of Savoy, from which the present reigning family of Italy sprang, formerly owned this fertile section, and the tales of the bloody deeds of these tyranical landlords have been handed down from father to son, and their names will be mentioned with anathema only until the end of time. Their great stronghold, lon, that grim castle made famous by the immortal on, stands there, a mute witness to the oppression which the inhabitants of Canton Vaux once suffered. twenty years Bonivard, the apostle of freedom, was a prisoner within its gruesome dungeons, and unmartyrs gave their lives in the defense of the tant faith behind its time-stained walls.

ir forefathers had scant consideration for their er brethren. Catholic, when in power, oppressed tortured Protestant; and Protestant, when in power, and tortured Catholic. Yet it seems somewhat grim retribution that the great cathedral of Lau, the building in which were kept the sacred imthat the persecuted Lutherites were forced to rev if they would escape the torture of the boiling pot stake is now in the hands of the former victims of s tyranny, and is famed throughout the world as of the most beautiful Protestant temples. In these of greater enlightenment and toleration, Catholics this magnificent pile and lament its loss to their cathedral at Lausanne contained, at one time, of the most valuable relics in the world, and one but regret that the victorious followers of Luther have destroyed so ruthlessly what sages had been collecting.

University of Lausanne contains one of the most ble libraries in Europe, and many of Luther's , in original manuscript form, are to be found its shelves. Although there are but few students, tively speaking, in attendance, the institution hly prizes as a post graduate school by the pros of Germany and Switzerland. Some of the most ecclesiastic and medical works in the world found in its library, while many savants, famed the civilized world, are among its lecturers. time to time summer institutes are held, and pros from our greatest universities make pilgrimages to partake of the wisdom of some of the world's teachers.

landing stage at Lausanne, known as Ouchy, is ably picturesque, and the broad, terraced drive, from the Hotel du Chateau south, is not unlike menade at Monte Carlo. Rare tropical plants en set out along its borders, and the city employs of trained landscape gardeners, whose sole duty design new garnishments for this beautiful ter half way between Lausanne and Territet-Chillon well-known spa, Montreux, and here the exciteking visitor tempts his luck at petits chevaux. the City Fathers at Lausanne frown upon gamy do not hesitate to advertise this Swiss Monte being on the list of attractions, and many men t Lausanne on the plea of taking the rest cure spend much of their time at the gaming tantreux. The city has been made as beautiful nature can make it, and as there are no hotels nearer than Lausanne, it does not detract latter city in a financial way.

Leman, though dangerous in the extreme at times, remarkably tranquil during the spring and months, and many notable regattas are held ng its shores. Lausanne, being the chief ren of the sport-loving foreigners, is the scene of majority of these water contests, and during season the hotels are sure to be crowded.

s world famed, and justly so, for the excelreasonable prices of its hotels. The very best odation may be secured for 10 francs ($2) a plan,) and there are a number of hotels traveler can secure excellent board and rooms a day. Many of the cheaper hotels, even, very best Parisian chefs, and dinner, which served at 7 o'clock, is made quite a function. few hours brings the traveler to Chamonix and the famed Mont Blanc, while the French shores look to be but a stone's throw from the Lausanne side. Geneva may be visited either by train or by boat, and as a very few hours will serve to visit all of the places of interest in that over-praised city, there is no reason why the tourist should not make his headquarters in Lausanne rather than in the lower and less healthy manufacturing city.

Lausanne, from early spring until after Easter, is entirely English. English is the language spoken on the streets and in the shops, and one may go an entire day without hearing a word of any other tongue. After Easter the Germans begin to arrive, and from then on the city is as Teutonic as Berlin. The tennis courts and golf links are cvrowded with men, who plainly show by their movements that they would be more at home in military uniforms than they are in civilian's clothes, and the entire city becomes metamorphosed.

Our Oldest Adobes.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE ANCIENT PUEBLO OF LOS ANGELES.

By a Special Contributor.

VERY little remains of the "ancient and honorable pueblo" of Los Angeles, of the good old days "before the Americanos came," and there are now only two standing that were built when the pueblo centered around the plaza—not the present, but the old plaza. One of these was built when the broad banner of Spain floated from the staff in the center of the plaza, which has lost its own identity. This is the "Casa Adobe," or "Casa Avila," situated on the east side of Olivera street, which extends northward from the plaza. This is the oldest house in Los Angeles, and the only remaining "landmark" of the Spanish era—a connecting link between the past and the present. It is a one-story adobe, with a peaked shingle roof, and shingled gable ends—the shingles being "modern improvements." The whitewashed sides are splotched, with black stains, and the crumbling, red-dyed walls show the ravages of weather, and of time. On the piebald wall near the south end, in black letters, is painted in scraggy letters, "Casa Adobe." Underneath is the invitation, "Restaurant." But, the sign is misleading—the doors are barred.

This is the historic casa of the wealthy and aristocratic Avilas, one of the Four Hundred of the Spanish pueblo days. It was a casa of romance and of revelry, the most pretentious in size and in architectural beauty. Its history is handed down as having prevailed against the "Flood of 1825," when the raging Los Angeles River left its bed and backed up to Olivera street. It also has a historic interest as being the house of which Commodore Stockton took possession for his headquarters, upon the capture of the pueblo by the American forces. There was not a hotel in the "ancient and honorable pueblo," and, while looking for a place to stop, the commodore saw an open door and entered. There was no one to receive him, and so he made himself at home. Upon the advance of the troops, the owner, widow Encarnacion Avila, hurriedly left, seeking refuge in the foothills, as did many other families. She charged a young relative to hold possession of the casa, and not to permit the bad "Americanos" to enter. But, when the brass band of the Americanos began to play, the young tenant hastened to the plaza, leaving the house to take care of itself. It was the first music of the kind he had ever heard, and he wanted to hear it at close range. The door being left open, the commodore entered without a siege. Upon her return, the Doña made objections, but finally became pacified. The commodore remained two weeks.

Doña Encarnacion Avila was the widow of Francisco Maria Avila, and the daughter of Ignacio Alviso, founder of the large Alviso family, known throughout California. Cornelia Avila, founder of the family, came to Los Angeles in 1783. He married Ysabel Urquides, who had a residence and garden on and near the site of the old Pico House, at the southwestern corner of the present plaza. His grandson, who built the Casa Avila, was alcalde of the pueblo in 1825, and was the grantee of the Cienega Rancho. José Maria Avila, brother of Francisco, was a revolutionist by profession, and in this casa plots and counter plots were discussed and formulated. It was locally known as the "Casa Revolutionary," and some of the revolutionary meetings were held under the thin disguise of "bailes." The impending crisis came when José Avila was arrested by the order of Gov. Victoria, on the charge of treason, and put in the calaboose. The Avilas then "pronounced" against the government. The "revolutionists," under Don Antonio Carillo, numbering about 200, met Gov. Victoria and his "army," near San Fernando, in November, 1831. This army, commanded by the Governor, and Capt. Pacheco, numbered only thirty "soldiers of Cortez." Avila desired personal revenge upon the Governor, and challenged him to single combat—the affair of the calaboose and the Governorship be decided upon the issue. Carillo desired the gubernatorial crown. The Governor did not accept the challenge, and then the knights adjusted their lances and charged. Capt. Pacheco and Avila rode toward each other at full tilt and passed before they could check their horses. Avila, however, turned the quicker and shot Pacheco in the back, killing him instantly. Gov. Victoria then shot Avila, who, in turn, ran his lance through the Governor, who then fired again, Avila falling from his horse, dead.

Capt. Pacheco was the father of ex-Congressman and ex-Gov. Romuldo Pacheco.

The wounded Gov. Victoria was taken to San Gabriel, where he resigned. He immediately returned to Mexico, and Echandia became Governor. Thus, the Governorship of California was decided by a fight between three men.

This old adobe casa was also the scene of many bailes and musical socials. The Avilas were among the wealthiest of the settlers of those days, and this was one of the finest and most commodious casas in the pueblo. Fronting the plaza, as it did then, it has witnessed the three national emblems flying in the square, and three changes in government, as well as many, many changes in the surroundings. At that time, the houses of the pueblo mostly centered around the plaza—the old plaza, which is now covered by large houses. The plaza of those days began at the southeast corner of the present Upper Main (or San Fernando) street and Marchessault street, extended eastward to Bellevue avenue; thence east to New High street; thence to the north line of Marchessault street, and thence to the point of beginning. It will thus be seen that this old casa fronted on the plaza, with Olivera street between. The corner of the old plaza joins the new near this point, opposite the church. The manner in which the old plaza was built over is peculiar: Pueblo lots were "dirt cheap," and when the first houses fell down, which were mostly of poles, more substantial houses were built in front of them, and by this natural progression, the plaza was "jumped," with the exception of the southeastern side, which belonged to the government, and where the church and the government house, jail and barracks were built. Tourists should remember this, and take their bearings accordingly.

On the northeast corner of Los Angeles and Marchessault streets, overlooking Chinatown, is a more picturesque ruin, but not as old. It fronted on Olivera street on the plaza, and on Los Angeles street. It was built in 1834 by Don Augustin Olivera, from whom the street took its name, and was known as the "Olivera Casa" became a rival in social functions to its neighbor, the "Avila Casa," around the corner. In the rear of the casa was the garden. A few stunted fig trees remain in the neglected space where grew the rose and the orange. The walls of this old adobe, once white, are splotched with red paint, and black lines, caused by rains, course down the sides. The inner walls are damp and mouldy, and creased with grime. The "gran salon," where mirth held high carnival, is strewn with rubbish, and the broken and moulding bits of furniture are evidence of the elegance that once reigned in the "palace." An old broken guitar is a mute reminder of the sweet strains that often resounded in this now dismal salon, and of those who danced to the music in the long ago. The flat roof is bending beneath the weight of years, and the crumbling walls seem not inclined to support it much longer. This relic of Hispano-Mexican days has passed through many vicissitudes since its abandonment as a residence by the aristocracy, and the encroachment of Chinatown. It was occupied, partly, as a Chinese "washee" house, also, as an opium den, and then as a hot-tamale factory with chili on the side. Years ago, it was a dance house, free for all nations, and was a very warm place.

In the "good old days" when revolutions were one of the industries of California, this casa was also noted as the headquarters of a "junta," and many were the political plots devised for the good of—the revolutionists. Don Augustin was prominent in all public affairs, and, besides, was very influential, being related to some of the leading men of California. He was a nephew of Ignacio Coronel and a cousin of Don Antonio Coronel, who was "Secretary of War" in the "revolution" led by Flores at the time of the American conquest. Don Augustin's wife, Concepcion Arguello, was a granddaughter of Gov. José D. Arguello, and a daughter of Santiago Arguello, which was not only an influential family, but was noted as being the largest in California—the children numbering twenty-two. Her mother was a daughter of Francisco Ortega, whose rancho in Santa Barbara county was plundered by Buchard's pirates in 1818. Don Augustin was also a brother-in-law to Don Juan Bandini, member of the Mexican Congress, and a frequent vistor to the casa.

Don Augustin Olivera, the builder of this casa, and whose name is preserved in local history in the street fronting this now magnificent ruin, came to the pueblo from the City of Mexico, in 1833. He held several official positions in the pueblo, represented California in the Mexican Congress, and was one of three commissioners who signed the treaty of peace at Cahuenga, after the capture of Los Angeles by the Americans. He was the first county judge after Los Angeles became a county, and later became a Presidential elector. He is no doubt remembered by the older residents, as he lived until 1874.

A CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CASE.

Mrs. Travis was a passenger on one of the street cars of Fort Worth. Ejected from the car, she sued the company for heavy damages for "physical and mental suffering." At the trial the attorneys for the railway company set up as a defense that Mrs. Travis was a disciple of Mary Baker Eddy, and had for years espoused the cause of Christian Science. Therefore, Christian Science denying the very existence of physical and mental suffering, it was impossible for the woman to sue on such grounds. This point was overruled by the judge of the lower court, and the jury returned a verdict for damages. The attorneys for the corporation then appealed to the Supreme Court of Texas, and this tribunal reversed the finding of the lower court, saying that if Mrs. Travis had such "control of her feelings, or thought she had, as to render her insensible to pain when she willed to be, we see no reason why that circumstance should not have been considered by the jury in determining the extent of her suffering and the compensation to be made on account of it." This certainly establishes an interesting precedent.

Successful Quest.

EX-COMMISSIONER STRONG, who has been employed by the State Commissioner to examine the citrus orchards at Portersville, Lindsay and Exeter, for the white fly reports that a week's inspection failed to locate one sample of the dreaded pest. He has returned to Bakersfield to watch developments there. It was decided to fumigate the Tevis trees all over again, whether the fly reappeared or not, just as a full measure of precaution. The San Bernardino county tents were left at Bakersfield for that purpose, and Strong has sent for two 65-foot tents to cover the few very large trees. The report of the absence of the fly in Tulare county is reässuring, as that citrus section was within the zone of more liable infection. I have not heard that Kern county has made a move to establish a horticultural commission to prevent a recurrence of the white fly's introduction.

Entomologist Here.

W. W. FROGGATT, government entomologist, visited Southern California last week upon a world-around trip in the interest of the Australian agriculturists. He is employed by all the States of his country to spend a year in traveling throughout the principal horticultural countries of the world, especially seeking information upon insect enemies and methods of pest control. Mr. Froggatt is a writer of distinction and combines practical and scientific entomology in proper proportions. He is a modified advocate of parasitism and in a recent conference with a number of our fruit growers has given forth a clear account of a few obscurities concerning the work of certain beneficial insects in Australia. The leading matter to be considered upon his trip is the discovery of a parasite for the fruit fly. Previous introductions have failed.

Animal in Bronze.

THE Percheron Horse Society of France has employed the most noted bronze sculptor in France to model a Percheron horse for the Ohio State University. The figure has been finished and is pronounced equal to the original model in pose, lifelike appearance and symmetry. This incident shows the remarkable progress of the agricultural industries which is now calling to aid artistic workers who formerly gave their attention entirely to the production of historic statues and groups of human beings. Percheron horse breeding has reached a point where one society can afford to spend thousands of dollars on a statue of a horse. The figure now the property of this university is 25 inches high.

White Fly Search.

FOR many weeks the inspectors and commissioners of Los Angeles county have been making careful search for possible infestations of the white fly. So far nothing even suspicious has been discovered. This does not mean that the pest is not lurking somewhere and multiplying in millions. But it shows that the probabilities of infection are more remote than might be expected before these investigations were made. We have now heard from all places where plant importations have been made within the last few years and in every case no flies were found. In this work the officials have been assisted by the fruit growers and with a few weeks more of searching it may be pretty certain that this county has escaped invasion. While it is too early for conclusive statement the indications are that the quarantine measures adopted by the commissioners of six years ago have protected the orchards from almost certain invasion had these precautions not been taken.

If Los Angeles county is finally declared free from the orange "mealy wing" it will certainly be a triumph for the protective ordinance and the horticultural patrol. At the risk of presenting an unpalatable but profitable reminiscence I wish to refer to the storm of criticism sent forth by a portion of the press concerning the adoption of the county's famous "Ordinance No. 42," which the same prohibited the importation of Florida plants from the time of its passage in June, 1901. Los Angeles is the most exposed county in the State, not excepting San Francisco, where most imported plants merely pass through to some other point. Our much-abused ordinance made it possible to intercept every questionable consignment of plants and its provisions have been carefully enforced. The fruit growers have always approved these protective measures, and only for the opposition of a few journals and nurserymen there would have been no objection to the enactment, which probably has saved our citrus industry from its most dreaded peril.

Priority of Prohibition.

SOME time ago I published a chronological account of the enactment of prohibitive measures instigated by the horticultural commissions of Los Angeles, San Bernardino and Riverside counties designed to exclude the white fly from this State. It seems that my account was correct as far as Supervisorial ordinances were concerned, and those were all the records set forth. I was sailing along serenely with the consciousness that Los Angeles county had taken the lead in auto fly legislation when R. P. Cundiff, commissioner of Riverside, pulled the following deadly resolution upon me. It was promulgated by Mr. Cundiff on the 23rd day of January, 1901, while the Los Angeles county ordinance was passed in June of the same year. The only consolation I can draw from these facts is that I was not appointed commissioner till the first of May, 1901. I also had a far livelier time over Los Angeles county enactment and have yet a full envelope of clippings lambasting me for supporting such a senseless measure. Here is the Riverside county act to which reference is made:

"The ravages of the insect, known as the white fly, Aleyrodes citri, are causing great loss to the growers of citrus fruits of the States of Florida and Louisiana, and whereas, the nature of this pest is such (it being a winged insect,) that should it be introduced into our State, it would be almost impossible to eradicate and very difficult to control, and whereas, from the most authentic sources, we are informed that this pest is distributed over almost the entire area of the citrus growing portions of the States of Florida and Louisiana; therefore, be it

"Resolved, that we quarantine against and prohibit the importation into Riverside county, of citrus nursery stock of any kind whatsoever, from above named States; and that this rule shall be in full force and effect from this date until such time as the commission shall become satisfied that this pest has been exterminated in the States aforesaid mentioned, or until otherwise modified or amended."

Growers in Clover.

A REPORT recently written by C. E. Bemis of Covina, relating to the magnitude of the citrus fruit industry in the upper portion of the San Gabriel Valley, will not be dry reading at this time. The report follows: "The orange shipping season is nearly over, there being but about twenty-five cars of Valencias still in the orchards. This has been the most successful year's business known to the industry in this district. I have received from the books of the different associations and the two exchanges in this district some figures which will give some idea of the importance of citrus fruit growing. The A. C. G. Fruit Exchange, composing five associations (Azusa, Azusa Foothill, Glendora, Charter Oak and Latin,) have paid to their members in cash returns for their fruit within the past year in round numbers $1,050,000; the Covina Exchange, with its two associations at Covina, $550,000. Add 40 per cent. to these sums for fruit sold by the independent shippers, $1,064,000, and we have returns of $2,664,000 from an area of about twenty-four square miles. The greater part of the lemons produced upon this same area are handled through the San Dimas Lemon Association in the San Antonio Fruit Exchange, and I did not get the amounts paid the growers for these lemons, and they are not included in these figures."

Knowing well this section I am safe in stating that the total cash paid its growers this season for oranges, lemons, grape fruit and tangerines reaches the $3,000,000 mark, allowing four square miles for young citrus orchards, other fruits, gardens, home grounds and unimproved lands, every square mile of bearing groves has added $150,000 to the credit of the growers and the State of California. Orchard fumigation in this district is already fairly way, 35,957 citrus trees having been treated by this process during the month of August. No spraying has been reported and but very little of it will be done.

Death to White Fly.

A GOOD friend at Pomona sent me a clipping from a Florida paper, which claims that "Gold Dust" powder dissolved in water is an unfailable white fly killer. The article bids good-by to the pest of the fly, for "It has met its Waterloo in a common household commodity. It has killed the white fly, the red spider, scale, in fact every parasite, and even the orange dog succumbs to the solution." The clipping is submitted for an opinion as to the value of the remedy.

It is not unknown to all the older growers in Southern California that every form and strength of caustic washes have been worked out to a finish here years ago, with varying degrees of success, but all finally abandoned as worthless or inexpedient. Then the various forms of oil washes were tried with little more success and all, at last giving way to the one great, dependable remedy, cyanide. In Florida, where gassing is not easily applied on account of the size of the trees this caustic wash may have merit as the next best remedy. But should the white fly break forth in one of our citrus centers the pest would be given cyanide dosage that would defoliate the trees, or at least deaden the leaves, and not only destroy the fly but curtail the food supply of the next generation. The probability is that the fly would confine itself pretty closely to citrus trees here and indeed those are practically all the trees there are. This would make winter extermination possible. As a merely remedial measure the Florida people may do much good with their washes, yet spraying is certainly a poor measure even there, as the fly fastens upon the under side of the leaves. It is at best a very unsatisfactory remedy.

Restoring an Orchard.

A HOLLYWOOD resident writes that he is putting an old lemon grove in shape. It consists of 300 trees, 12 years old and without attention for four years. He is having the trees fumigated and pruned, and will plow under the mulch of grass and weeds. He wants to know if a neglected orchard like this will [illegible] cover with proper treatment. Without seeing the [illegible] I can say with little doubt that they will [illegible] recover and very quickly, unless the mistreatment [illegible] killed the main limbs and damaged the trunks. The vitality of an orange or lemon tree is phenomenal, and if these specimens are really alive the restoration should be easy. They perhaps need no fertilizer now, but immediate furrow irrigation should be given before any attempt at cultivation should be made. Too much water cannot be given the first time by furrows, and [illegible] should be made to fit the soil for plowing.

The gentleman asks as to the depth of the first plowing. This depends. If the surface roots lie deep, plow as deeply as possible; if shallow, do not disturb them too deeply at first as it is from these roots the [illegible] must start. A good start may be made toward [illegible]tion for half the amount the owner expects to [illegible] the first year, though recovery and fruitfulness [illegible] be hastened by the use of a heavy application of [illegible] manure. I am sorry the writer from Hollywood did not sign his name to the letter as more minute directions would have been given in person or by letter.

Killing Birds by Fumigation.

A PROTEST comes from Pasadena against the destruction of birds during the process of fumigating the orchard trees for insect pests. One gentleman [illegible] that the birds eat of the residue turned out of the generating after the tents are removed. If this can be demonstrated the fault could be corrected by throwing a little earth over the remains of the material. But before this expense is thrown upon the fumigators it should be proven that the birds will eat the material cast out of the fumigating vessels. My observation and inquiry shows that the birds are destroyed by the gas within the fumigating tents, and this cannot be [illegible] prevented, though few birds will remain in the tree while the tent is being placed. As well abolish [illegible] walks because a few harmless and beneficial insects are crushed under foot.

Birds' nests are out of place in an orange orchard; they become the center of any insect infection that may abound in the neighborhood. An inspector will invariably examine a tree containing a nest for the constant coming in of the owner to feed her young may be seen in the infection. The protection of our songsters has been constantly supported in this department, but it will not be run into a fad where incidentally and occasionally a bird is killed in the fumigation of an orchard. If a few are poisoned in the run of fumigating work, a prosecution would soon prove the difference between that result and the setting of poison with intent to destroy.

The Florida Orange Crop.

JAMES A. BAIRD, orange grower of Beresford, Florida, in Chicago Packer:

Mr. Baird says the outlook for the orange crop this season is not very flattering. His partner, N. W. [illegible]ander, advises that the yield for the whole State will hardly total more than two-thirds of last year's shipments. He recently made a trip through several of the important sections and found that there is a decided shortage at nearly all the points, some of which are greater than others. It is possible the movement that begins about October 1 will not total three million boxes for the whole season. Last year in the neighborhood of four million boxes were marketed.

Mr. Baird said: "I attribute the curtailment to the sharp cold winds that we had the first five days of April, which stopped the sap from flowing in the trees. The long drought we experienced this year did not seem to effect the trees, which showed the finest bloom we ever had and there was certainly a pretty set, but those few sharp days did the damage.

"Many grapefruit groves were hurt worse than the oranges. However, the tangerine crop is likely to be good.

"Last season there was nearly a million boxes of grapefruit shipped. This fruit is becoming more popular every year.

"The indications are the oranges this season will be fair sized, not as small as last year, and show a good color. Earlier than usual.

"We are booking orders now at an increased price over that made to customers at this time last year, and am of the opinion prices will be firm all season."

A Little Roseate.

IT is now generally phophesied that the Florida orange crop this season will be about a two-thirds one, but the fruit will be larger and the price received considerable higher than last season. There is in the market no peer of the Florida orange. Its rank is way above that of the fruit grown in competing countries or States. This is no idle boast, as the following from the New York Packer will prove:

"Although Florida experienced a rather severe drouth the past season, orange growers are not discouraged, and some recent sales of groves have been made in DeSoto and other counties at good prices. The Florida growers realize that they have many advantages and propose to get the full benefit therefrom."—Tribune.

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

Seven Lima Beans.

ALTHOUGH the Lima bean crop will be very large this season I notice one large acreage on which the setting is not heavy, though the vines are thrifty and the soil good. The season may have some adverse influence in producing this effect, but it is probably due in part to the poor pollinating qualities of the strain from which the seed was grown. The best preventive would be the selection of better seed. In some Lima bean sections the growers plant an occasional row of another variety, just as apple growers mix varieties in their orchards to secure better bloom fertilization.

Electric Fruit Growing.

AS a mere novelty of effort, and a possibility of practical use I republish the following from the London Mail:

"Eighteen hours' sunshine a day all the year round is an idea that particularly appeals this summer. Unfortunately the apparatus which procures this desirable effect is only useful to plants. It has been found in past experiments by B. H. Twaite, whose system is about to be officially tested by the Royal Botanic Society at Regent's Park, that in the middle of winter he can grow ripe raspberries and grapes in two and a half months from shooting and strawberries in about seven weeks. That is at the rate of three to four crops a year from the same plants. The cost of securing this extraordinary result for a glass house 125 feet by 15 feet for fuel, oil and interest, but excluding labor, is approximately £35. As the apparatus will run for four hours without attention, labor is not a much increased item on account of the machinery.

"The object of the system is to supply violet and chemically active rays from powerful arc lights, which are the essential rays required for healthy growth. Heat without light would not grow plants. There are two lights from the sun. One simply gives heat, and the other, called actinic light, has a chemical effect. Both are necessary for the proper growth of vegetation.

"In addition to the actinic light from the electric arc there is an electrostatic current from a small machine that stimulates the roots. This current also destroys all kinds of parasites. The fruit, therefore, is always perfectly sound, and, as Sir William Siemens has proved, it is remarkable for its size and flavor.

"As well as these, the plant needs an atmosphere containing moisture and carbon dioxide in the common proportions, a temperature between 70 deg. and 80 deg. Fahr., an ideal fertilizing agent, and an ample supply of water for the roots.

"All these essentials are economically produced from a gas engine and a dynamo. The heat developed in the water jacket of the engine, while driving the dynamo, is conducted through pipes to the glass house, where it supplies the regular heat and moisture required. The dynamo supplies the power for the lights and also to rotate them up and down the house.

"The apparatus then consists of the gas engine which drives the adjacent dynamo and also supplies hot moist air through iron pipes to the house. The dynamo supplies the powerful arc light, while an electrostatic machine supplies electrical energy to the soil to convert insoluble nitrates into soluble nitrates, and incidentally drive out green fly and other noxious insects that might damage the fruit. The electric rays, acting through a lens, stimulate the growth of the plant, and can be turned on directly the sun goes down.

"The lights revolve continuously in the manner of the [illegible] at speeds which can be regulated, so that plants are not drawn in one direction. About six hours' rest a day is essential for all plants, and in this interval the energy of the apparatus could be transferred to another house.

"Should this patent process perform all that is expected of it, the commercial possibilities should be of the highest value to English nurserymen. The enormous sums that go abroad every winter for choice fruits and early flowers could be diverted into English channels. The whole process is simple in the extreme. Any ordinary person could work it and produce results."

Mushroom Discovery.

A MYSTERIOUS chemical compound which, when applied to the spores or tissues of the mushroom plant, may cause them to germinate and sprout, promises to revolutionize the whole system of mushroom growing. The discovery of the chemical, which is the result of several years' investigation by Dr. B. M. Duggar of the faculty of the Missouri University, may place the mushroom in the class of cheap food products, says [illegible] Williams.

What Dr. Duggar's discovery will result in he hesitates to say, but the name of the mysterious compound which he brings about the germination of mushroom spawn will remain a secret until the publication of a bulletin by Dr. Duggar himself, in which he will review the experiments leading to its discovery. There yet remain a number of details in the science of mushroom growing to be worked out, and Dr. Duggar will not issue the bulletin, which is to deal with the scientific side of the discovery, until he has completed his investigation. The discovery of this new feature of mushroom growing introduces nothing new in the actual growing of the mushroom plant, but in the germination of the seeds, or spores, from which the plant is grown. It has been discovered that the spores of the mushroom can be induced to germinate when placed in contact with certain chemicals. In this way the grower secures a fine lot of spawn, which, when planted, produces an excellent crop of mushrooms.

The new method of securing spawn is entirely different. A test tube filled with gelatine and the chemical form of the germinating ground for the modern antiseptic mushroom. Spores of the mushroom placed in the test tube and kept at a proper temperature soon germinate and fill the tube with fine delicate white threads, the spawn of the mushroom. This chemically pure spawn, when placed in a manure pile that has been previously cleaned of all foreign substances, spreads rapidly through the pile, and, properly cultivated, produces a crop of mushrooms superior in size and quality to any produced by the old method.

So far the experiments have been confined to the common field mushroom, agaricus campestris. Cultures of the spawn and spores from this mushroom have been secured, and an indefinite quantity of pure spawn can be manufactured in the laboratories of the Missouri University. Cultures of other mushrooms, including all the leading varieties, will be made, and Dr. Duggar feels confident that the cultures will be as successful as were those of the more common and hardy variety. The new method makes the cultivation of poisonous mushrooms through mistake very unlikely. The spawn can be bought in as many varieties and of as pure a quality as seeds of other plants.

Partly because of this discovery, the United States Bureau of Plant Industry has taken up the study of mushroom growing, and is endeavoring to make the mushroom an important food product of the United States, as it is already of France and other European countries. The scientific study of mushrooms has exploded many old, ignorant theories about this, to many, mysterious plant. Because the artificially grown mushroom is generally grown in the dark caves or cellars, it is popularly believed that it can be grown successfully only in the dark. Light and darkness, however, has no more effect on mushrooms than on wheat or corn. A regular temperature can be secured more easily in a cellar or cave than in any other place, and for that reason such places are generally utilized. This fragile plant can be grown in properly heated beds, and a variance of only a few degrees invariably kills the plant.—[Rural World.

Cabbage Harvest.

WHEN a cabbage plantation shows signs of hardness it should be gone over and cut for market. A light hatchet or heavy butcher knife is the best tool, but we once fixed up a scythe blade with a hand hold which proved the best ever. A limited amount of cabbage may be shipped to market by express in sacks, but the bulk of the crop should be crated and shipped in car lots for profit, unless, of course, it is intended for a kraut factory, when the crop may be bundled off in any old way. As a rule, summer cabbage is shipped in refrigerator cars, well iced, for it is apt to heat. The standard crates for cabbage are 20x20x28 inches. Cauliflower should be cut when full grown, with a few of the leaves left on, then packed nicely in layers in crates 12x12x24, which go at fifty pounds, the same rate as cabbage. It is advisable to mark the number of dozen heads on the crates or barrels and the bill of lading and invoice should go with the shipment.—[Denver Field and Farm.

When Melons Are Ripe.

MUSKMELONS or cantaloupes are at their best only when ripened in the natural way on good, healthy vines. I do not think a melon ripened any other way can be either wholesome or healthful, yet I presume a great many are eaten that are not ripened that way. At least we see hundreds of crates in the markets obviously picked green with stems hanging to them like pigtails. A muskmelon picked with its stem attached has not ripened properly and never will.

A genuine ripe muskmelon is one that has left the vine perfectly free from the stem, and it should leave at the least pluck or pull. A muskmelon picked in any other way is not ripe.

We cannot tell a ripe watermelon until it is plugged or cut open. It is simply a matter of judgment. Even experienced growers are deceived sometimes, especially when they first begin to ripen. There are two or three signs to judge by when we expect them to be ripe. Some think that when the first curl or tendril next the melon is dead is a good sign. Varieties differ in this respect. Others contend that when they crack with little pressure they are ripe. This is not a good process to use if the melons are to be shipped or kept a few days.

The best sign is by the sound. If the melon, when tapped with thumb or hand, gives a dull thudlike sound, it is ripe. As the darkies say: "If dey goes co-plunk dey's ripe, but if dey goes co-plank dey ain't." The other signs may or may not then be in evidence, but they usually are. The stem of the watermelon retains its hold as firmly when ripe as at any other time.—[Farm and Home.

Irish Emblem.

NEWS comes from Topeka that genuine Irish Shamrocks have been found growing in the Statehouse grounds. The news came in the shape of a letter from Joseph Marshall, architect of the Statehouse, to a local Irishman with a request for information relative to the plant, its habits and possibly a theory as to how it took root in Kansas above all places in the world outside Ireland. All information that could be given by Mr. Marshall from Wichita, was that ten years ago Morris Cain, who was then Assistant Secretary of State, planted a few sprigs of shamrocks, received from Ireland in the sod, in the Statehouse grounds, and that nothing further was heard of it until Mr. Marshall made the discovery recently that it had taken root and was thriving in its new home on this side of the Atlantic.—[Rural World.

ABE GUDMUNSEN, a jeweler and goldsmith of Lehi, Utah, has invented a beet topper which will do the work of fifty boys or thirty Japs. The topper is drawn by a horse, and cuts two rows at a time. The knives are arranged so that they adjust themselves automatically and cut just the desired amount off each beet, whether it is one or six inches above ground. The adjustment is arranged by means of a wide flat-rimmed wheel which rolls over the beet just in front of the knife and to which it is attached. The wheel is kept on top of the beet row by means of a narrow sharp projection from its center and outer edge, which cuts into the beet and keeps it from slipping sideways. The wheel to which the knife is attached is so arranged that it is free to work up or down over a high or low beet.—[Field and Farm.

Changes in Gypsy Moth Work.

SUPERINTENDENT A. H. KIRKLAND of the work of exterminating the gypsy and browntail moths in Massachusetts, is sending to the officials of each town and city a copy of the law passed by the last Legislature relating to the moth work, which contains some very radical changes from the past policy of the commonwealth.

The greatest change comes in the nature of the penalty which may be imposed upon a city or town which refuses or neglects to do its part in the work as directed by the superintendent, the statutes up to the present time having provided that a fine of $100 per day might be collected from each town for each day after such a refusal. This year's Legislature, however, determined that the work of extermination should not be hung up while the fine was being collected, and gave the superintendent authority to send his assistants into such a city or town and do the work, the cost to be assessed upon the city or town as an additional State tax.—[New England Farmer.

Selecting Seed Potatoes.

THE best time to select the tubers for next season's planting is when the potatoes are dug. I usually dig my potatoes as soon after the tops have died down as possible. The tubers at this time have their full development, and while they would suffer no harm should they be left for a few weeks longer in the ground, weeds are liable to spring up, and in a short time grow large enough to make the digging much harder. Potatoes promptly dug when nearing maturity also make the best seed.

One advantage of selecting the seed at digging time is that the varieties are then easily recognized, so that the stray admixtures can be rejected, and pure stock secured. This is a much more difficult task when we put the job of picking our seed potatoes (out of the bins) off until spring. I also reject all tubers from every hill that is weak and gives a large number of small potatoes. I prefer to take my seed potatoes from the best yielding hills, such hills as give the largest bulk of fair-sized, not necessarily mammoth, potatoes.—[William H. Underwood, Johnson Co., Ill.

Hardy Catalpa (Catalpa Speciosa.)

THIS tree is a native of the deep, fertile soils of the valleys of Southern Indiana and Illinois, Western Kentucky and Tennessee, Southeastern Missouri, and Northeastern Arkansas. It is cultivated over extensive areas outside of this region and, where cultivated, occasional trees are found springing up where the seeds have been distributed by natural means. The demand for catalpa wood has been so great that but a few native trees of marketable size remain. In its most favorable location the tree reaches the heights of 60, 80, and rarely 100 feet, and attains a diameter growth of two to four feet.

No other tree can be named which is more strongly influenced by the soil upon which it grows than the catalpa. It is best adapted to deep, fertile, porous soils, and thrives especially well where there is an underflow of water within ten or twelve feet of the surface. These conditions are obtained in the valleys of the Wabash in Indiana, and Illinois, the Arkansas in Kansas, and many other streams of the middle West. It is not well adapted to stiff clay soils or to soils having a tenacious gumbo subsoil, such as are often found upon the uplands. A rainfall of twenty-five inches per year is essential to the best growth of the catalpa unless it can root down to the water table.

The Hardy Catalpa is one of the most rapidly-growing trees planted in the West. A height growth of two and a half feet and a diameter growth of one-half inch annually for the first twenty-five or thirty years is not unusual. If cut in the fall or winter, the catalpa ranks with the Osage orange in durability in the soil.

The State Board and the Naturopaths.

FREQUENT reference has been made in these columns to the subject of the medical trust—in some respects the most odious of all the trusts that are now attracting such wide attention on the part of the public. The great importance of the subject warrants such reference. If the public fully realized the true inwardness of this medical tyranny, it would not have long to exist. It flourishes on the ignorance or the indifference of the public.

As recently shown, the medical trust—otherwise the American Medical Association—includes only an insignificant percentage of the practicing physicians of the United States. Yet, it has arrogated to itself the right to dictate who shall or shall not practice the healing art, in this country. It hypocritically pretends that its efforts are made for the benefit of the dear public. On the contrary, it is simply—like the labor unions of San Francisco—a close corporation, for the purpose of keeping out competition. If the medical trust were sincere in its declaration of interest in the welfare of the public, why has it not, long ago, started to drive out of the profession those dastardly quacks who ruin people mentally, physically and financially. These scoundrels all have diplomas, or else they could not practice.

The persecution of the medical trust is not confined to practitioners of outside schools. Worthy and able men, who have practiced their profession as M. D.'s for many years, in other States of the Union, are refused recognition, under various specious pretexts. Some of these men, with families dependent upon them, are today doing menial work in Southern California, because the medical trust has refused to permit them to practice their profession.

The following appeared recently in Health:

"A front-page column article printed in the Chicago Tribune April 30, at the time of the medical conference in that city to pass upon the status of medical colleges in general, issued the glaring statement that of the 4000 M. D's graduated into the profession annually, 3000 are utterly incompetent to practice! Speakers from all over the United States, representing the various medical boards and educational institutions, comprising the Council of Medical Education of the American Medical Association, voiced this sentiment, and there was not one voice raised in defense of the new graduates. This is important if true, and it should furnish ammunition for the osteopaths when M. D.'s rise up in the Legislatures and profess that their standards of education are so exalted and so far superior to that of osteopathic practitioners. As a matter of fact, the old M. D.'s are trying to curtail the supply of young M. D.'s put out annually just to limit competition."

Another striking instance of the tyranny and duplicity of these political doctors, in California, has recently come to light. As readers of this department are aware, the Legislature last spring passed a new law regulating the practice of medicine in California, which law went into effect on the 1st of May last. This law gave the osteopaths a place on the State board, together with the allopaths, homeopaths and eclectics. The concession was wrung from the "regulars" by the growing importance and popularity of the osteopathic school of medicine, a school upon which the allopaths have, in the past, heaped contumely and contempt. Another school, which originated in Germany, has of late been making great strides in this country. These people call themselves "naturopaths," for the reason that, in their practice, they include all rational methods of aiding nature to cast forth impurities from the system, such as diet, exercise, breathing, hydropathy, osteopathy, massage, electricity, etc. In this manner, remarkable cures have been effected, and it is therefore not surprising that they have brought down upon themselves the jealousy and enmity of the drug dispensers. A largely-signed petition, asking for recognition of this school, was presented to the last Legislature, and the following proposed amendment was prepared and was to be introduced by Senator McKee:

"Any person, who holds a certificate from the Board of Examiners of the Naturopathic Physicians of California, elected by the Naturopathic Association of California, incorporated under the laws of this State, shall be entitled to practice Naturopathy in this State, the same as if it had been issued under this act."

The following extracts from correspondence between Dr. Carl Schultz, secretary of the Naturopathic Association of California, and Dr. Parkinson of Sacramento, Gov. Gillett and Dr. Mattison of Pasadena, president of the State Board of Medical Examiners, speak for themselves, and show the devious and unprofessional tricks to which these political doctors will resort, in order to keep out competition.

Dr. Schultz to Gov. Gillett, dated March 3:

"After consulting with Dr. Parkinson of Sacramento, who has charge of the medical bill, and represents the different medical societies, we have made the following agreement, viz.: The Naturopathic Association withdraws all objection to the proposed medical bill; the medical societies and the osteopaths, to recognize all naturopathic physicians who have diplomas from the Board of Examiners of the Naturopathic Association, and advising the Medical Examining Board of the State, to issue licenses to such members and holders of such diplomas.

"The members of the Naturopathic Association of California therefore withdraw all objections to the medical bill."

Dr. Schultz to Dr. Parkinson, dated March 5:

"I have sent you today under separate cover some by-laws of the Naturopathic Association of California and application blanks for membership.

"When we made our agreement, I forgot to tell you that I had the promise of the Governor that he would not sign the bill until he had given us a chance to file a protest against it and request him to veto it.

"To show my faith in you and the people you represent, I will write to the Governor, telling him that we withdraw all objections on account of an agreement with those interested in the medical bill, which agreement will give us recognition and the right to practice our profession.

"I do this on my own responsibility, and I hope that your people will recognize the weight and importance of this and do what you promised me in good faith.

"I am sure that if we work together, it will benefit suffering humanity. Permit me again to say that I am very sorry that I did not meet you earlier, and I only hope your people, whom you so ably represent, will be as just and deal as honorably and sincerely with us as you have done."

Dr. Parkinson to Dr. Schultz, dated March 15:

"It is of the greatest importance that you furnish us immediately with your list of names. It should be clearly shown that this list was closed some time ago, and that no attempt was made to bring members in so that they could avail themselves of any arrangement that might be made."

Dr. Schultz to Gov. Gillett, dated April 16:

"In view of the fact that the protest from this association was withdrawn, on the strength of an agreement with Dr. Parkinson, I feel that it would not be out of place to now courteously ask you if you will use your best endeavors to select as the members of the new examining board, men who are liberal in their views and perfectly fair in their actions and judgment."

Gov. Gillett to Dr. Schultz, dated April 22:

"Your letter of April 16 at hand, and in reply will say that I certainly will make an effort to appoint men to the examining board who are liberal in their views and perfectly fair in their actions and judgment."

Dr. Parkinson to Dr. Schultz dated May 24:

"I had the matter presented to the Board of Examiners by Dr. J. W. James of Sacramento, who was associated with me on the legislative committee. I went over the matter very thoroughly with him, so that he understood it in all its bearings. Upon his return from San Francisco, he stated that the new board had considered his statement and the facts in connection with same; that it had discussed the matter at considerable length; had consulted its attorneys and had decided that it could not take any action in the premises. In other words, it was unable to issue a license to any one except by examination. In accordance with your request, I herewith return the list of names forwarded me some time since."

Dr. Schultz to Dr. Mattison, dated June 14:

"From the enclosed copies of letters exchanged between the Governor, Dr. Parkinson and myself, you will see that the medical bill would not have been passed unless we had withdrawn our protest, nor would it have received the signature of the Governor, if it had been passed in the amended form unless he (the Governor) was in receipt of our notice of withdrawal of protest."

Dr. Schultz to Dr. Mattison, dated August 2:

"Mr. Grant B. Bennett, your attorney, informed me July 23 that he had issued complaints against two of our members.

"One, Dr. Henkle, has been arrested on the 24th of this month, in spite of the fact that you assured me that our case should be brought before the Board on the 6th of August, 1907, and at our last meeting in June, you again assured me that you would give notice to Mr. Bennett not to trouble our members until you would hear from me what our association would decide to do at our meeting July 16, and that if we could show the board a way to issue us the license without passing an examination, that the board would do so.

"Mr. Bennett absolutely denied that you had instructed him so, and not only treated me with discourtesy, but with contempt.

"If you gentlemen think you have the power and can do as you please, you may be sorry for it.

"I, for myself, resent every insult and injustice, and shall know how to take your words in future."

Dr. Schultz to Gov. Gillett, dated Aug. 2:

"I wish to bring before your notice the present action of the State Board of Medical Examiners, which you assured me before their appointment would be composed of only fair and liberal-minded men. I recall to your mind the strenuous fight we made at the last Legislature, and also the agreement with Dr. Parkinson, which resulted in the Naturopaths withdrawing their protest to the present medical law.

"As Secretary of the Naturopathic Association, I called on Dr. Mattison, the president of the State Board. He assured me that there was no way to secure our license, except for each member to pass the examination.

"The Osteopaths have not been required at any time to pass the State examination; their diploma from the Osteopathic College being deemed sufficient to secure a license from the State board; and further, our school does not study bacteriology and some other branches.

"We feel that the stand they are now taking is a violation of our agreement, both positive and implied, and as if this was not enough, they have issued two complaints against two members of our association, one of whom has practiced fifteen years in Los Angeles.

"Our members and the many friends who have supported us offer a most vigorous protest, and ask that you will take issue with them to break this, the most tyrannical trust ever organized in the United States. We have suffered persecution for over four years, and now intend to bring before the public a true statement of the whole matter.

"The directors of the Naturopathic Sanatorium and College secured land five years ago to build a sanatorium and College, but in the face of all this opposition, they have hesitated to go on with the work; and further, two-thirds of the Naturopaths have been forced out of practice after spending years of study and the best part of their life in the work."

Dr. Schultz to the State Board of Examiners, dated August 2:

"In behalf of the Association of Naturopathic Physicians of California, I call your attention to the agreement made by Dr. Parkinson, of Sacramento, representing the different medical and osteopathic Associations, and myself, representing the Naturopathic Association, in regard to the bill regulating the practice of medicine, osteopathy, and other methods of healing, passed at the last session of the Legislature.

"The substance of the agreement was as follows: We to withdraw our protest, which was signed by many thousand voters, your board to recognize the certificates issued by the Board of Examiners of the Naturopathic Physicians of California.

"Dr. Parkinson advised me he had brought the matter before the board at their first meeting, and you decided at that time not to issue the license, but take the matter under your consideration and bring it up at the next meeting, August 6, 1907.

"Dr. Mattison, of Pasadena, with whom I corresponded on this matter, and with whom I had also personal interviews, corroborated the statement of Dr. Parkinson, saying further, that if we could show the board how to carry out their agreement in issuing to us the license without conflicting with the laws, you were willing to do so. He also assured me in answer to my direct question that no member of our association would be arrested.

"Mr. Grant R. Bennett, your attorney in Los Angeles, filed complaints against two of our members. I asked him if he was aware of the agreement we had with the board. He replied he did not care; he would arrest whomever he pleased. He flatly refused to meet me and discuss the matter.

"If the members of the board have been advised that they cannot grant us the license without violating the law, they surely have not been advised to arrest our members; and if so advised, as honest men who are willing to abide by their agreement, they will refrain from doing so.

"The law in itself is a violation of all fundamental principles of law. It is retroactive, and it is an insult to try to compel us to pass an examination before a board who represents every school, with exception of the Naturopaths, whose members have been practicing long before your law went into existence.

"Our college has a course of four sessions of six months each. Some of the osteopathic schools graduate their students after a twenty months' course, issuing a diploma, which was deemed sufficient by the board to issue the license without passing an examination.

"I trust after careful consideration, you will advise me of your decision."

As to the ultimate outcome of this controversy, there can only be but one result. Still, as we all know, it takes time to effect reform, where we have, on the one hand, "vested rights," financial interests and political influence, and, on the part of the public, ignorance and indifference.

In conclusion, let the editor of this department ask his readers what Americans would think were it proposed to enact a law that only certain forms of religious worship should be permitted in this country. Yet, that is exactly what the American Medical Association is attempting to do—and has, so far, to a great extent been successful in accomplishing—in regard to the care of the body.

The Medical Trust.

The following article from the Los Angeles News (formerly the East Side News) voices a sentiment that is rapidly growing among thinking people in this country:

"The News has published many articles relating to the medical trust, pronouncing it to be the most unscrupulous and dangerous of all the trusts.

"We have said, from time to time in a general way, that the poor befogged and befooled people are still expected, and frequently required, to place their bodies in the hands of the doctors, their estates in the hands of the lawyers and their souls in the hands of the priests.

"In former ages the priests overshadowed everything, as they still do in some parts of the globe, birth, marriage, death, education, conscience, body and soul, but the French and the American revolutions broke the power of the priests and the hierarchies to a great extent. In America we have established liberty of conscience, liberty to think and speak, in theory and largely in practice.

"And who now is taking the place of the priest who had the common people in his power? Who now is asking, demanding and by law compelling the people to put their necks under a yoke which is worse in many respects than the priestly yoke of the Dark Ages? Who is compelling the people by law to place their bodies in the hands of a select and elect few to be dosed, drugged, poisoned, carved, experimented on, crippled and finally buried? And then who is it that after burial encourages a system of grave robbing, steals the cadaver and then dissects it before admiring, jolly, joking, smoking and sometimes profane students?

"The medical trust, of course.

"According to figures recently published in a contemporary we notice that there are 300,000 physicians in the United States and Canada, and that only 27,000 compose the medical trust. These are the elect who are forcing the rest out of practice and forcing the people to submit to drug poisoning and the scalpel often against their will. All this by mind you.

"The above was inspired by a recent dispatch from Pasadena saying that Health Officer Dr. Black had asked the City Council for authority to appoint a physician to the public schools with authority to give his attention to those who are well as well as to those who are not well. He is to look especially to the eyes of the pupils, says the dispatch, and, of course, to the pupils of the eyes.

"The dispatch adds with a coolness which is perfectly guileless and childlike and bland that:

"'The children that may be found not fit to go to school will be sent away!'

"As if it were not enough all the school year to allow the medical trust to hold up every child at the door of the schoolhouse, cut a gash in the arm and inject a poison that is sure to ruin the health of many for life and to kill many more! Besides, to tax the public every year to the tune of tens of thousands of dollars for this forced, this unasked, unsought and unwished service, this poisonous but legal rape, this assault which is a personal outrage upon every person who does not wish it and desire it!

"The News notices further that the medical trust expects during the coming session of Congress to secure the passage of the bill to establish a national health bureau.

"The effect of this measure would be to put every citizen in the position of the soldier who is in the military service and who must obey orders and submit! Soldiers must submit to vaccination when ordered to do so. Also to surgical operations. One colonel in the Civil War informed us that his men died off like sheep after a vaccination order had been executed upon them. Recently an enlisted man who refused to submit to a surgical operation when ordered to do so, was court-martialed, discharged from the service with forfeiture of all pay and confined for three months at hard labor!

"This is what is in store for the American people when the medical trust secures its national bureau and its final grip upon government and people.

"The News again expresses all due respect for medicine and the medical profession. It has named the old-style gentlemanly family physician the 'Angel Doctor' and the modern mercenary, murderous, slashing and vivisecting doctors, 'Devil Doctors.' We have no thought of individuals, classes or schools only as they are a part of a despotic, inhuman and un-American trust. The News speaks in the 'very essential spirit of justice' and demands medical liberty for the people as it demands civil and religious liberty."

Unfermented Grape Juice.

OTTO CARQUE has been at Fresno during the past month, where he is making about 40,000 gallons of grape juice. He is now going to Geysersville, in Sonoma county, where he expects to put up about the same amount. Mr. Carqué's pure grape juice has been slowly but surely gaining in popularity in this section, during the past year. As the editor has previously said, it is incongruous that we should send from this, the greatest grape-producing section of the world, to the Atlantic Coast, for our grape juice. Yet, nine-tenths of the grape juice sold in Los Angeles is made in New York State.

Fruit and Tobacco.

THREE communications have been received lately, relating to fruit, or tobacco, or to a mixture of the two. A San Diego correspondent writes:

"I know a man here—a "doctor"—who has the tobacco-chewing habit. I told him he was injuring his health, but he says he would die if he gave it up. He would give $500 if he could give it up without doing himself a worse injury. Has been a smoker and a chewer since he was 7 years old. Gave it up for over 12 months, and was nearly at death's door. Here is a veritable slave to a bad habit, like thousands of others. Has tried the remedies, and says they are no good. Surely, this man can live in good health without continuing his bad habit. What do you say?"

A Los Angeles correspondent writes:

"In the Care of the Body you advise people to eat fresh fruit. I should very much like to do that, but every time I eat fruit, the acid puts my teeth on edge, just the same way as if I was eating lemon. Consequently, I can't eat anything until I've chewed up a 5-cent plug of tobacco. I should like to become a fruitarian, but I would also like to give up chewing tobacco.

"Will you please advise me what I shall do?"

And here is a communication from another Los Angeles correspondent:

"Is it not injurious to eat fresh fruits the way they come to the market? I notice they are almost always unripe. Would it not be better to stew them?"

As a means of curing the tobacco habit—or any drug habit—the editor would suggest a prolonged fast, to be followed by a "fruit fast" of several months, combined with sweat baths after which time the desire for the narcotic, or stimulant, will have been found to have disappeared, or to be greatly lessened. After that, avoid spicy and stimulating foods, and condiments of all kinds. This advice also belongs to the man who can't eat fruit. When a man can't eat fruit, it shows, not that there is anything the matter with the fruit, but that there is somehing the matter with the man. Here are some remarks on the subject by Dr. J. H. Kellogg, of Battle Creek, in Health Culture:

"Indigestion sometimes results from the use of fruits in combination with a variety of other food substances; but fruits taken alone constitute the best possible menu for the last meal of the day. The combination of fruit, sugar, cream, bread, butter, cake and pie may well produce bad dreams and a bad taste in the mouth in the morning. The use of fresh or stewed fruit alone without any addition whatever will produce no disturbance, and will leave no unpleasant effects behind to be regretted in the morning. Very acid fruits sometimes disagree with persons who have an excess of acid and those who are suffering from chronic inflammation of the stomach; but with these exceptions, there are almost no cases in which fruit may not be advantageously used.

"The notion that acid fruits must be avoided by rheumatics is another error which is based on inaccurate observations. The fact is, rheumatics are greatly benefited by the use of fruit. At the same time they should abstain from flesh foods of all sorts, beef tea and animal broths, and all meat preparations, also tea and coffee, as well as alcohol and tobacco. It is, of course, possible for one to take an excess of acids, as one may take an excess of starch or any other food substance. Vegetable acids differ from mineral acids in the fact that they do not accumulate in the body, but are assimilated or utilized in the same way as sugar and allied substances."

In regard to the last-mentioned inquiry, it is true, as the editor has said, that a great majority of the fruit one purchases in the market is either unripe or overripe. On the other hand, cooking fruit deprives it of most of its beneficial qualities. This is especially true when it is mixed with sugar. Therefore, the best plan is to make the effort to get fruit that is just ripe, and fresh, either by raising it yourself, or by getting it direct from some one who does. For those who cannot do this, select the best fruit you can find on the market. At any good fruit store, you can usually pick out some fruit that has been allowed to become nearly ripe on the tree, or bush, and has not become stale.

White Bread.

FROM time to time some notoriety seeker, like Dr. Woods Hutchinson, comes out in defense of white bread. By the way, Dr. Hutchinson's article in September McClure's will receive attention here, in a few weeks.

A paper on the subject of bread was recently read before the National Science Association of Toronto University, by the chemist of the Provincial Board of Health. He declared that white bread is more nearly a ration, and will maintain health longer than any other single food; and that brown breads are inferior to white bread, because they contain much less valuable nutriment, weight for weight, than it does, and he cited a case in which a student was fed on bread made from patent flour and milk for a space of two days, gaining two pounds in weight in that time. Actually lived on bread and milk for forty-eight hours. Just think of it! Is it not wonderful? Next, we shall hear of somebody who managed to keep alive and gain weight for a whole week on nothing but milk.

It should be unnecessary to attempt to refute such erroneous and foolish arguments as these. Do these people think that they can improve on nature? White bread is an emasculated food—a starvation food. It starves the nerves, and among other ills leads to constipation. White flour contains only 5.70 parts of mineral matter in a thousand parts of water-free material, as compared with 23.10 parts in the whole wheat.

It is true that the bran acts as an irritant to inflamed stomachs and bowels. On the other hand, when a person is in a normal condition, it acts as a brush, favoring natural motions of the bowels. It is also claimed by Dr. Haig that the bran contains a small amount of xanthin, equivalent to uric acid. You may omit the bran, and still get the salts, which lie just underneath that outer covering, by using "seconds" or "middlings" flour. This, all things considered, is perhaps the best kind of flour to use, as you can keep the bowels in good condition by eating freely of fruits, salads and vegetables.

Here is another reason why bread made of white flour is harmful:

"The use of nitric acid fumes for the whitening of flour is under investigation by the National Bureau of Chemistry to determine, so far as possible, the effect of such bleaching on the health of consumers. The preliminary inquiries show that the effect of the fumes is to change the natural oil of the grain into a chemical substance which cannot be classed as a food. They also produce important changes in the glutinous contents of the flour, giving it a less digestible quality. The worst feature of the whitening process is that it renders possible adulterations and tends to conceal inferiority, inasmuch as consumers are habitually guided to some extent in their choice of flours by the color of the product. This makes it feasible to incorporate cheaper flours, which have been artificially whitened. The question will probably be considered whether the change in color thus produced falls under the clauses of the pure food law, which forbid the coloring of food products to conceal inferiority."

Bread made from flour doped with nitric acid, deprived of most of its organic salts by bolting, and then more of its nourishing qualities destroyed by fermentation, is certainly about as poor a food as misdirected human ingenuity could devise. Yet Dr. Hutchinson claims that white flour and pork are the basis of American civilization, and some first-class magazines give space to such foolish statements.

An Arizona Faster.

RECENTLY the editor had the pleasure of meeting George J. Rosruge of Tucson, Ariz., whom he had not seen for twenty-two years. Mr. Roskruge is a pioneer of Arizona Territory, has served several times as Surveyor of Pima county, and holds a high position in the Masonic fraternity of the Territory. He is now over 62 years of age. Both he and his wife have for some time been careful readers of the Care of the Body department. So, not long ago, when Mr. Roskruge was taken with rheumatism and his arm paralyzed, he undertook a short fast, which knocked out the ailment in short order. At a later date a growth came on one of his eyelids, which, after several years, was diagnosed as cancerous. Disregarding the warnings of his friends, he decided on a prolonged fast, so as to absorb the cancerous growth, as Dr. Dewey has shown can be done. He fasted absolutely forty-five days, losing twenty-eight pounds. He experienced no hunger after the first few days, carrying on his regular business, and in addition to doing carpentering and gardening work around the house. He said he had never begun to realize what real jubilant health was, until he undertook this fast. As a further result, the cancerous growth almost entirely disappeared. He thinks that, if he had extended the fast another week or ten days, it would have disappeared altogether. In order to dispose of what remains of the growth, he has been taking a poultice treatment in Los Angeles.

In consequence of Mr. Roskruge's experience, there has been quite a boom in fasting in Tucson, and the restaurant people are beginning to complain. There is also, Mr. Roskruge says, a widespread demand there for the Sunday Times Magazine, containing the Care of the Body department.

Gray and Bald Heads.

A LOS ANGELES man writes as follows:

"I hope you will write a few lines on why are there so many gray-haired young men and women in Southern California. I came from the East, and am startled to see so many young men of 20, 25 and 28 years old whose hair is almost completely gray. Why, I have heard of California being spoken of as the land of the people with the gray hair. What will remedy it? I see so many, too, with gray beards."

A Randsburg man asks what the editor would advise to restore a growth of hair which is gradually dropping out from the top of the head.

The editor was not aware that Southern California is particularly noted for its gray-headed young men and women. One would expect to find more of that sort of thing in such centers of the "strenuous life" as New York and Chicago.

If the roots of your hair are gone, nothing will make a new crop grow. If the roots are still there, you may stimulate them to renewed activity by vigorous massage with the finger tips, using a little pure vegetable oil. Some people recommend crude petroleum, but it is not a very pleasant thing to use. Also expose the head freely to the light and air, although, if you are bald, you need not, of course, let the sun shine directly on the head.

Soap.

MRS. E. G. JEROME, of Santa Ana, sends the following communication:

"In their efforts to locate a cause for the increase in such malignant diseases as tuberculosis, tumor, cancer, tetanus and the vile brood of skin disease, I have seen no accusation brought against the soap used in our laundries, although much of it is made from the fat of diseased and condemned animals. If life on the earth came from living cells in the molten mass, at an incalculable temperature, disease germs are certainly secure against any heat attained in soap factories. Healthy, robust persons will resist and throw diseases off, but those less vigorous may be successfully attacked from the clean linen just from the laundry.

"Is my theory wholly untenable?"

What this correspondent says is worthy of consideration. Again, soap should be used quite moderately, on the flesh, and then, strong, coarse soaps should be avoided, among the best being a pure castile soap, an olive-oil soap, or an antiseptic soap.

There is another point to be considered, in regard to soap, namely, the danger of infection from using soap that has been handled by dirty people, or people who perhaps have some skin disease. By actual contact, in this way, if there is any open surface on the hands, one may easily become infected. To avoid this, there have been introduced and should become more general, in public lavatories, patented contrivances, which let out a small amount of soap powder.

Awards of the State.

RETURNING from Catalina Island, recently, the editor had, as fellow-voyagers, about thirty Whittier school girls, in their neat black and white uniforms. They were returning from their summer camp, on the island, for which they and the boys—who go earlier in the year—are indebted to the courtesy of the [illegible] Brothers, the owners of the island.

The editor took some interest in analyzing the [illegible] ognomies of these girls. He came to the [illegible] they sized up favorably, in comparison [illegible] number of girls, picked up at random, on [illegible] Los Angeles. Care of the Body.

that plausible dark-skinned preachers of the "higher life" may say to the contrary.

In considering the question of child marriages, however, some consideration should be given to the great influence of climate on the ripening of the female sex. In some parts of the tropics, children reach puberty at four years of age, while in the Arctic circle they do not become mature until from 28 to 35 years of age. On the other hand, in the latter region some women give birth to children at 60 years of age.

On this subject, Joseph Steiner, Ph. D., had an article in the September number of the American Journal of Eugenics, entitled "Climatology, Its Bearing Upon Eugenics," in the course of which he said:

"As I see it, the chief difficulty with most reformers, especially missionaries, in getting an intellectual grasp of the sex problem, is their fixed notion that our accepted standard of morals is perfect and universally applicable to all peoples, regardless of climatic or other conditions; when, as a matter of fact, our moral code is based on a set of ecclesiastical canons which nobody who is fit to be outside of an insane asylum takes any stock in, and which cannot stand the test of scientific analysis. Hence their insane effort to impose the same upon all people, without regard to climatic or other conditions which are bound to render the code nugatory and (as the history of the Borneo Islanders proves) destructive to the people upon whom it is imposed. They fail to see that in the intercourse of the sexes, as well as in the matter of subsistence, what is extremely repulsive to one person, race, or people, may be a source of unflagging delight to others; so that, by the immutable law of compensation, if we insist upon forcing our habits and customs on the orientals, we must expect to get some of theirs in return, whether we like it or not."

September Schools.

It has been a remarkably cool summer—the coolest Los Angeles summer the editor remembers in twenty-[illegible] years. Only once, up to end of August, have we had a really warm day—and then there were ten of them, around the Fourth of July. The highest point reached by the thermometer in August was 86 [illegible]. Just as people were coming home from their vacations, and mothers were beginning to see where they could buy second-hand school books—on one of the first days in September, after the thermometer maximum had been hovering about 70 to 75, it suddenly went up to 91. Undoubtedly a little reminder of what we are pretty sure to get before the end of September, for September, according to the records of the Weather Bureau for over fifty years, is the hottest month of the year in California. Yet, with strange unreasonableness, people continue to take their vacations early in the summer, and come home to "enjoy" a hot spell. This, however, is not so serious a matter as the case of the children, who, after acquiring vitality at the beaches and in the mountains, are sent into a close prison-like school room, to sit through a heated spell.

The public schools open this year on the 16th of September. As long as the editor has lived in Los Angeles, there has been criticism of this foolish practice, and a demand for change. It seems that there is some law, made in Sacramento, that would interfere with such a change. If so, the sensible method, in any country outside of China, would naturally be to have that law changed. The schools should close at least two weeks later and open two weeks later than they do, in Southern California. In Arizona they are more sensible. The public schools will not open until the 30th of this [illegible]

During Pregnancy.

A WOMAN correspondent asks for information in regard to mode of living during pregnancy, so as to enjoy good health during that period, and have an easy delivery. The subject has been covered in these columns. There is no mystery or secret about the plan. Simply to live right—to exercise freely, up to the last; to eat with great moderation, a liberal part of the diet to consist of fresh fruits and salad plants. The editor has referred to a recent case in which a woman found great benefit through eating daily, during pregnancy, a head of lettuce. Women who eat heartily to "keep up their strength" and lie around on sofas during pregnancy, are preparing for themselves a heap of trouble.

Accommodations for Consumptives.

Several inquiries have been received in regard to places where poor consumptives can obtain accommodations [illegible]. The only places of that kind known to the editor are near Indio, on the Colorado Desert, and at [illegible]. At the former location an eastern millionaire named Nelson has a consumptive colony, where accommodations may be had at a reasonable price, and at [illegible] there is a small camp. Further than this the editor is unable to give any information. Perhaps some readers of the department may be able to add something on the subject.

"Girl."

"Surely you have seen disproved many a time in your own life all the brute religion of survival. Why—in my own case——" Wallingford hesitated.

"Yes, go on," urged his visitor.

"I hardly know that I should say more than I have regarding my own affairs. Perhaps I ought not to speak of her——"

"You have promised. But whom do you mean by 'her?'"

"I mean my wife," said Wallingford, raising his head. "The story is part hers. She helped me—perhaps she would like to help you, too—if our little story could do that."

"I am sure she would, sir," answered Harrell. "If you please, I think I would like to hear it all." His voice was gentler than it had been for years.

"You see," continued Wallingford finally, "my wife and I were very poor, as I have said. We lived here in this same little flat, excepting that we had not funds to rent more than two rooms—not these, but the kitchen and a little room adjoining. We ate and cooked and slept in that space. It was a hard situation for a woman gently reared, who had been used to other associations."

Wallingford's face grew serious, as did also Harrell's, who sat thinking of the house he had left behind him, the silken-draped halls of false silence which he had set up as his asylum.

"One week, Mr. Harrell, we had just two dollars for our rent and our living. It was but a very few cents we could spend for food. You do not know about such matters. You may have heard about such things, read of them."

"By Jove, I have no right to complain!" exclaimed Harrell, smiting his hand upon his knee.

"As much right as I, and I as much as you," replied the physician. "I was not fit to survive, but I survived."

"Yes, and my success for your survival—that trade should go if we could make it!" Harrell's eyes were shining now. "Go on," he demanded.

"We had no money and no furniture," continued Wallingford, half musingly. "We had no table. We ate from a board resting upon two chair backs. But every morning, when that hour of blackness came—you know what that is—when I was ready to curse God that He had left me a coward—why, then my wife would get up and begin the day; and she began it with a smile and a song. I did not deserve it, but never in those cruel times, I tell you, did I ever see anything but a smile upon my wife's face, though that were upon the blackest morning. Now, explain that to me, Mr. Harrell, under the laws of your life."

Harrell turned his face to the window, and the two remained silent for a time. "I came to the right place," remarked Harrell, at length. "I'm glad I came. Yes, I'm glad."

"Have you been very unhappy, Mr. Harrell?" asked the doctor.

Harrell turned a mute look upon him in reply.

"I do not compare my life with yours," went on Wallingford. "I do not say to you that you ought to be happy because you are rich. The rich are often the least happy. In time their messengers lie to them. They cease to be in touch with the real world, with actual life. I do not boastfully call myself happy. I am simply not unhappy. You see, we did hang out our little shingle again. Some days I have a number of calls. I am able now to carry a life insurance of $5000. Not much, but better than none. My wife is at least comfortable, and for that I thank God!"

"And you say you are not a success!" broke in Harrell.

"I said I was not a specialist," corrected Wallingford, smiling.

"You are the greatest specialist in the city of New York!" rejoined Harrell, impulsively.

Wallingford appeared not to hear him.

"Are you a married man yourself, Mr. Harrell?" he asked.

"Yes, and married to as good a woman as ever lived. She is away now—been away for three months or so. Some way, of late I did not seem to care to have any one around. Perhaps I have been a bit indifferent. You know——"

"I presume you have been very busy," said the doctor. "They are very strange, are they not, these women?"

"Yes, strange," replied Willard Harrell, in speech new to himself. "They are the nerves of the universe—they're our messengers from God!" He flushed like a boy, and, seeing this, Wallingford smiled again in his gentle way. "Now, how about these Others—the first Other in your own case, Mr. Harrell? But pardon me——" he interrupted himself.

There came through the half-open door a little sound, a footfall, the rustle of a skirt. As Dr. Wallingford stepped toward the door Harrell now saw approaching a sweet, gray-haired woman, middle-aged, not extraordinary, medium in all ways, he would have called her. She was dressed simply. There seemed a strange dignity in the manner in which these two greeted each other.

"Are you going out, Girl?" asked the doctor.

"Yes, to one of the neighbors for a moment."

He bent and kissed her. "Good-by," he said; "don't stay away too long."

When he reëntered the little office Harrell was standing with head turned away.

"I shall want to see you often, doctor," he began stumblingly. "I want you to tell me more about things."

"You want me to tell you about the Others?"

"Yes," said Harrell slowly; "I want to look upon you as one of those Others. I want to meet you—and your wife—some day."

"Yes, please come to see us."

"And you will do as much for me and my wife?"

"Ah, you are just remembering that you have a wife of your own?"

"I have neer given her a chance," said Harrell. "I have bought her everything, done everything——"

"Yes, but you never gave her a chance. My dear man—a radish, a crust, a green field, a friend, a good woman—these may do very much. In short, sir, they may effect a cure. I hope you will find it so. You will pardon me if I do not make any other prescription for you this afternoon."

Willard Harrell, successful business man, dashed a hand across his eyes and trusted himself to nothing more than a handclasp. "Come to see us!" he heard the cheerful voice of Wallingford repeat as he reached the head of the stair.

As Harrell slowly walked the street in the direction of his own home it seemed to him that the eyes did not glare at him, that the city did not crouch as though to spring upon him. He passed a low door where hung the small blue sign of a telegraph office. His message was simple:

"Mrs. Willard Harrell, Old Point: Please come home, Georgia, girl! I want you. Will."

"WHAT'S THE USE?"

When a feller's down in spirit,
  Feels all in about the mouth,
When he's tried to grin and bear
  Hard luck's had him going south,
Doesn't very much encourage,
  When some guy who doesn't know
What it means to be encumbered,
  From the lack of spending dough,
Pats him on the shoulder, tells him,
  "Don't give up! You are a goose."
Makes a feller feel like saying,
  "Aw, go on, you! what's the use?"

When a feller's up against it,
  Has to walk in mud and slush,
And some optimistic people,
  Riding by in hack or bus,
Smile and tell him to look cheerful,
  Times will better bye-and-bye,
And that clouds have silver linings,
  But you bet they're high and dry;
'Spose they mean to cheer and comfort,
  But it's mighty poor excuse,
Makes a feller feel like saying,
  "Aw, go to thunder! what's the use?"

When a feller's tried his darndest
  To get up out of the rut,
And each step he slides in farther,
  And his efforts no ice cut,
Tell you what, it kinder makes you
  Have some sympathy with Job,
When he wished that God would take him
  And relieve him of his load.
No, don't think that I'm a quitter,
  I'll oil up an' turn on the juice,
But I tell you right now, pardner,
  I just feel like "What's the use?"

THE KAISER AS A HUSTLER.

Was there ever a greater contrast between two monarchs than the King and Kaiser, and yet they are so nearly related? The one is the model of a constitutional sovereign, and the other an autocrat; Edward VII is one of the most aristocratic of beings, and the Kaiser the most democratic. The Emperor is the hardest-worked official in Germany. Like good old King Alfred, he has his "time table," and his day is mapped out with a minuteness which would shame any ordinary mortal. His only recreation when on duty is a frantic motor car ride from the Schloss through the Thiergarten and back by the Unter den Linden. The time when he reaches Berlin's great thoroughfare is known to the minute. A discreet line of admirers silently lift their hats, the traffic sidles to the left, and the imperial car rushes by to enable His Majesty to resume work and keep his next appointment after his half hour in the fresh air.

With all his faults, and no doubt he has many, there is something almost touching in this man's hard-working devotion to his country's welfare. There is hardly a state document that he does not conscientiously read from beginning to end, and, in fact, a special copy is made for his benefit, with a broad margin for the imperial comments. This nervous and vigorous emperor has an occupation for every spare moment, when he will either eke out an audience or send for some official or minister to clear up a certain point, or dictate to his secretary a memorandum or something which has suddenly occurred to him—in short, not one moment of the Emperor's long working day is lost.—[The Bystander.

DIAMOND RING IN COLLECTION BOX.

The Rev. A. B. Simpson of New York, at the Old Orchard camp ground, raised $62,363 for the Christian Alliance foreign mission at Sunday's meeting. This is the largest collection he has taken here in eight years, and with two exceptions the largest amount he ever raised at Old Orchard in the eighteen years he has held summer camp meetings here.

The solicitation of jewelry, which made the old-time Simpson collections spectacular, but was abandoned some years ago because of public criticism, was resumed Sunday in a mild form. A diamond ring, a gold necklace, two plain gold rings, a gold watch and chain and two small boxes of other jewelry were contributed.

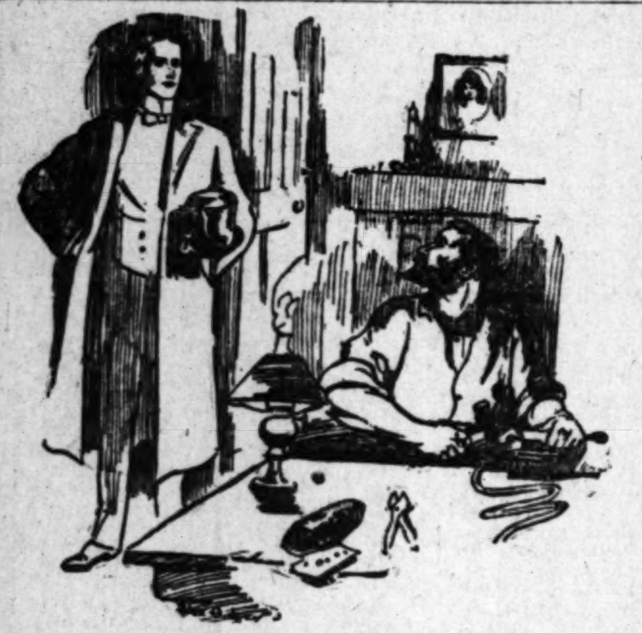
ALBAN REVISITS UNION STREET.

Alban escaped from the Sporting Club at a quarter to eleven, sick of its fetid atmosphere and wearied by its mock brutalities. He made no apologies for quitting Willy Forrest—for, truth to tell, that merry worthy was no longer capable of understanding them. Frequent calls for whisky and soda, added to a nice taste for champagne at dinner, left the captain in that maudlin condition in which a man is first cousin to all the world—at once garrulous and effusive and generally undesirable. Alban had, above all things, a contempt for a drunken man; and leaving Forrest to the care of others of his kind, he went out into the street and made his way slowly eastward.



"You are working very late tonight."

It was an odd thing to recall; but he had hardly set foot east of the Temple, he remembered, since the day when the bronze gates of Richard Gessner's house first closed upon him and the vision of wonderland burst upon his astonished eyes. The weeks had been those of unending kindness, of gifts showered abundantly, of promises for the future which might well overwhelm him by their generosity. Let him but consent to claim his rights, Gessner had said, and every ambition should be gratified. No other explanation than that of a lagging justice could he obtain—and no other had he come to desire. If he remained at Hampstead, the image of Anna Gessner, of a perfect womanhood as he imagined it, kept him to the house. He did not desire his patron's money; he began to discover how few were his wants and how small the satisfaction of their gratification could be. But the image he worshiped ever—and at its feet all other desires were forgotten.

And now reality had come with its sacrilegious hand, warring upon the vision and bidding him open his eyes and see. It was easy enough to estimate this adventurer, Willy Forrest, as his true worth, less easy to bind the wounds imagination had received and to get the image once more upon its ancient pedestal. Could he longer credit Anna with those qualities with which his veneration had endowed her? Must there not be heart searchings and rude questionings, the abandonment of the dream and the stern corrections of truth? He knew not what to think. A voice of reproach asked him if he also had not forgotten. The figure of little Lois Boriskoff stood by him in the shadows, and he feared to speak with her lest she should accuse him.

Let it be said in justice that he had written to Lois twice, and heard but lately that she had left Union street and gone, none knew whither. His determination to do his utmost for her and her father, to bid them share his prosperity and command him as they would, had been strong with him from the first and delayed only by the amazing circumstances of his inheritance. He did not understand even yet that he had the right to remain at "Five Gables," but this right had so often been insisted upon that he began at last to believe in its reality and to accept the situation as a chose jugée. And with the conviction, there came an intense longing to revisit the old scenes—who knows, it may have been but the promptings of a vanity, after all.

It was a great thing, indeed, to be walking there in the glare of the lamps and telling himself that fortune and a future awaited him, that the instrument of mighty deeds would be his inheritance, and that the years of his poverty were no more. How cringingly he had walked sometimes in the old days when want had shamed him and wealth looked down upon him with contempt. Tonight he might stare the boldest in the face, nurse fabulous desires and know that they would be gratified, peer through the barred windows of the shops and say all he saw was at his command. A sense of might and victory attended his steps. He understood what men mean when they say that money is power and that it rules the world.

He turned eastward, and walking with rapid strides made his way down the Strand and thence by Ludgate Circus to Aldgate and the mean streets he knew so well. It was nearly midnight when he arrived there, and yet he fell in with certain whom he knew and passed them by with a genial nod. His altered appearance, the black overcoat and the scarf which hid his dress clothes, called for many a "Gor blime" or "Strike me dead." Women caught his arm and wrestled with him, roughs tried to push him from the pavement and were amazed at his good humor. In Union street he first met little red-haired Chris Denham and asked of her the news. She shrank back from him as though afraid, and answered almost in a whisper.

"Lois gone—she went three weeks ago. I thought you'd hav know'd it—I thought you was sweet on her, Alban. And now you come here like that—what happened to you, whatsver have you been doing of?"

He told her gaily that he had found new friends.

"But I haven't forgotten the old ones, Chris, and I'm coming down to see you all some day soon. How's your mother—what's she doing now?"

The girl shrugged her shoulders and the glance she turned upon him seemed to say that she would sooner speak on any other subject.

"What should she be doin'—what's any of us doin' but slave our bones off and break our hearts. You've come to see Lois' father, haven't you? Oh, yes, I know how much you want to talk about my mother. The old man's up there in the shop—I saw him as I came by."

Alban stood an instant irresolute. How much he would have liked to offer some assistance to this poor girl, to speak of real pecuniary help and friendship. But he knew the people too well. The utmost delicacy would be necessary.

"Well," he said, "I'm sorry things are not better, Chris. I've had a good Saturday night, you see, and if I can do anything, don't you mind letting me know. We'll talk of it when we have more time. I'm going on to see Boriskoff now, and I doubt that I'll find him out of bed."

She laughed a little wildly, still turning almost pathetic eyes upon him.

"Is it true that it's all off between you and Lois—all the court says it is. That's why she went away, they say—is it true, Alb, or are they telling lies? I can't believe it myself. You're not the sort to give a girl over—not one that's stood by you as well as Lois. Tell me it ain't true or I shall think the worse of you."

The question staggered him and he could not instantly answer it. Was it true or false? Did he really love little Lois and had he still an intention to marry her? Alban had never looked the situation straight in the face until this moment.

"I never tell secrets," he exclaimed a little lamely, and turning upon his heel, he shut his ears to the hard laugh which greeted him and went on, as a man in a dream, to old Boriskoff's garret. A lamp stood in the window there and the tap of a light hammer informed him that the indefatigable Pole was still at work. In truth, old Paul was bending copper tubing—for a firm which said that he had no equal at the task, and paid him a wage which would have been despised by a crossing sweeper.

Alban entered the garret quietly and was a little startled by the sharp exclamation which greeted him. He knew nothing, of course, of the part this crafty Pole had played or what his own change of circumstance owed to him. To Alban, Paul Boriskoff was just the same mad revolutionary as before—at once fanatic and dreamer and, before then, the father of Lois who had loved him. If the old fellow had no great welcome for the young Englishman tonight, let that be set down to his sense of neglect and, in some measure, to his daughter's absence.

"Good evening, Mr. Boriskoff; you are working very late tonight."

Alban stood irresolute at the door, watching the quick movements of the shaggy brows, and wondered what had happened to old Paul that he should be received so coolly. Had he known what was in the Pole's mind he would have as soon have jumped off London bridge as have braved the anger of one who judged him so mercilessly in that hour. For Boriskoff had heard the stories which Hampstead had to tell, and he had said: "He will ruin Lois's life and I have put the power to do so in his hands."

"The poor do not choose their hours, Alban Kennedy. Sit down, if you please, and talk to me. I have much to say to you."

He did not rise from his chair, but indicated a rude seat in the corner by the chimney and waited until his unwilling guest had taken it. Alban judged that his own altered appearance and his absence from Union street must be the cause of his displeasure. He could guess no other reason.

"Do you love my daughter, Alban Kennedy?"

"You know that I do, Paul. Have we not always been good friends? I came to tell you about a piece of great good fortune which has happened to me and to find out why Lois had not written to me. You see for yourself that there is a great change in me. One of the richest men in London considers that I have a claim to some of his money—through some distant relative, it appears—and I am living at his house almost as his own son."

"Is that why you forget your old friends so quickly?"

"I have never forgotten them. I wrote to Lois twice."

"Did you speak of marriage in your letters?"

The lad's face flushed crimson. He knew that he could not tell Paul Boriskoff the truth.

"I did not speak of marriage—why should I?" he exclaimed; "it was never your wish that we should speak of it until Lois is twenty-one. She will not be that for more than three years—why do you ask me the question tonight?"

"Because you have learned to love another woman."

A dead silence fell in the room. The old man continued to tap gently upon the coil of tube rapidly assuming a fantastic shape under the masterly touch of a trained hand. A candle flickered by him upon a crazy table where stood a crust of bread and a lump of coarse cheese. Not boastfully had he told Richard Gessner that he would accept nothing for himself. He was even poorer than he had been six same [illegible] ware of it, Alban Kennedy, for it will lead you to destruction."

Alban did not know how to argue with him. He resented the accusation hotly and yet could make no impression of resentment upon the imagined grievance which old Paul nursed almost affectionately. It were better, he thought, to hold his tongue and to let the old man continue.

"Your patron has gone to Paris, you say? Are you sure it is to Paris?"

"How could I be sure. I am telling you what was told to me. He is to be back in a few days' time. It is not to be expected that he would share his plans with me."

"Certainly not—he would tell you nothing. Do you know that he is a Pole, Alban?"

"A Pole? No. Indeed, he gives it out that he was born in Germany and is now a naturalized British subject."

"He would do so, but he is a Pole—and because he is a Pole he tells you that he has gone to Paris when the truth is that he is at Berlin all the time."

"But why should he wish to deceive me, Paul—what am I to him?"

"You are one necessary to his salvation—perhaps it is by you alone that he will live. I could see when I first spoke to you how much you were astonished that I knew anything about it, but remember, every Pole in London knows all about his fellow-countrymen, and so it is very natural that I know something of Richard Gessner. You who live in his house can tell me more. See what a gossip I am where my own people are concerned. You have been living in this man's house and you can tell me all about it—his tastes, his books, his friends. There would be many friends coming, of course?"

(To be Continued Tomorrow.)

[illegible] Victoria. In the library of the Queen's suite many sentimental tokens greet the eye. Indeed, the entire suite teems with "memories too deep for tears," and of dear, departed days.

The Queen, whose face in repose is one of the saddest conceivable, a veritable Mater Dolorosa, keeps her griefs very near her. It is said her greatest crosses have come as a wife, and, as a wife, she has borne them. But surely there must have been much sweetness in the years to judge by the tender tokens one sees in her sitting-room. She first met the Prince of Wales when she was ten years old, at a little party which Queen Victoria gave the princess royal, afterward Empress of Germany, in Buckingham Palace.

HER FIRST MEETING WITH KING EDWARD.

Princess Alix was visiting Princess Mary of Cambridge, mother of her present daughter-in-law, Princess May, and the heir of England and the demure little Danish girls exchanged smiles and stood up in a dance together. Princess Alix, as she was then, adorns the walls of Queen Alix's sitting room in a solid gold frame (the gift of her husband,) and in one side the hair of the two children twined in a true lover's knot, with the date of their meeting written in ink that is almost faded. Then there is an article of furniture designed by the King for his wife during her invalid days, and which shows him of substantial talents not attributed by his contemporaries. It is a combination sofa, writing desk, and bookcase, and if Edward VII. were commercially inclined he could make a fortune of patenting the same. The sofa, very wide and soft, with excellent springs, is covered with soft mauve brocade. The bookcase is at one end gowns and jewels.

At Sandringham, the fine, Yorkshire estate of the King, Queen Alexandra passes her happiest days. Here much of the tedium of royalty is relaxed, and she lives the simple, homely life of her early childhood. Sandringham is especially dear to the Queen, because she is still a loyal Dane, and the point of land just off Sandringham is nearest to the old fatherland. She is still the sea king's daughter, and her love of the sea has been inherited by all her children.

The present hall was built in 1870, and it stands quite near the old mansion, which the Prince and Princess of Wales first inhabited. Over 300 acres is comprised in the park, and in the early autumn, when "their majesties" are still hunting in Scotland or making the round of state visits, strangers are permitted to roam through the park, and to inspect the Queen's dairy and stables. It is well worth a run up into Yorkshire, for the country is one of the loveliest and the park, with its great girthed elms, well-proportioned sycamores and giant oaks, is just beginnng to show a touch of gold and crimson, and the fields are purple wth heather and golden with gorse.

WILD GARDEN A JOY.

The Queen is the monarch at Sandringham, and she is determined that the cares of state shall not intrude there. She has planned every inch of the ten-acre garden, and she has herself planted many of the ornamental trees and shrubs. Her wild garden, far down in the woods, winds in secluded walks and is her special joy. Woe to the gardener who ruthlessly destroys one of these humble blossoms. Here flourish the blue bell, the pimpernel, violets, primroses, forget-me-nots, buttercups, and daisies, almost totally deaf. But she finds true content in her country home, and she shows an inclination to remain there longer and longer, and to allow the Prince and Princess of Wales to preside over the state levees.

Unobtrusive as she is personally, Queen Alexandra's grace, beauty and womanly virtues are recorded while the English language survives in the masterly sketches which Dickens and Thackeray wrote of her nuptials. One of the grandest odes of Alfred Tennyson was dedicated to her, and Jenny Lind composed and sang a marvelous bridal song in St. George's, Windsor, on the day of her wedding.
